SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the all-great, the all-loving God. Our words can not express Thy glory, neither can our hearts contain the fullness of Thy love. Thou dost see within us that which is worthy of Thy care. We bless Thee that we can be greater than our acts. All instincts immature, all purposes unassured, are a part of the wealth of the life that Thou hast given to us to be molded and shaped and patterned after the Divine plan. Take us this day into Thy keeping to guard and guide us according to Thine own great plan of life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 7359. An act authorizing the Delaware Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Nanticoke River at Seaford, Sussex County, Del.; and

S. 7748. An act to authorize the United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Co., and such other corporation or individuals as may be associated with it, to construct a bridge across the portion of the Delaware River between the mainland of the county of Camden and State of New Jersey and Petty Island, in said county and State.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20209. An act to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HUSTING presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Ripon, Wis., remonstrating against the return of certain moneys appropriated for the construction of a public building at Ripon into the Treasury of the United States and praying for the enactment of legislation diverting these moneys for the benefit of Aviation Corps of the War Department, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the enactment of legislation amending the Panama Canal act so as to permit the continuance of railroad ownership, control, or operation of steamboat lines on the Great Lakes, which were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the Farmers' National Congress, held at Indianapolis, Ind., October 20, 1916, favoring the rigid safeguarding of the public's interest in water powers and other natural resources and requesting in particular the defeat of the Shields and Myers water-power bills and the defeat of the Phelan amendment, and favoring the enactment of certain other legislation, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, relating to the so-called Civil War volunteer officers' retired list bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5.

To the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States S. 392, introduced by Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, known as the Civil War volunteer retired-list bill, to authorize placing thereon, with retired pay, certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War; and

Whereas the Committee on Military Affairs have reported the same to the Senate with amendments and as thus amended the committee recommended that the bill do pass; and

Whereas the provisions of said bill are as pledged by Congress and President Lincoln at the opening of the Civil War to the several States and to the Volunteers furnished by them; and

Whereas the present policy of the Government is to retire all surviving officers of the Regular Army and Navy at half pay for life, at ages less than any of those who will receive the recognition accorded by this act; and

Whereas full retired pay for life to all survivors of the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and Indian wars in accordance with rank have been granted and furnishes a commanding precedent; and

Whereas public sentiment of the Nation is shown by the unanimous action of the legislatures, 13 States speaking for approximately 50,000,000 of our people, recommending the enactment of such a measure: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress and the entire Congress of the United States of America be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested that said bill, known as the Volunteer retired bill, be speedily taken up and put upon its final passage, and which will give the same aid according to rank as that given to the retired officers of the Regular Army, deducting any pensions that they now receive.

Resolved further, That the chief clerk of the senate is hereby directed to transmit certified copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the National Congress and to each of the Oregon Representatives and Senators in Congress.

Adopted by the senate January 12, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 16, 1917.

R. M. STANFIELD,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF OREGON, SENATE CHAMBER.

I, John W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate joint memorial 5, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 12, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 16, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 18th day of January, 1917.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring national prohibition, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists. the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectively represent that—

Whereas it is proposed that the Congress of the United States submit to the various States of the Union a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation within the United States and their dependencies of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes; and

Whereas it is known that the traffic in intoxicating liquors results in great industrial, economic, and moral loss, and greatly increases human suffering without compensatory benefits; and
Whereas the abolition of such traffic has, wherever fairly tried, brought about great improvement in the moral and economic condition of mankind; and
Whereas 23 States of the Union have by constitutional amendment or legislative enactment abolished such traffic: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Oregon, the House of Representatives concurring, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby memorialized to submit to the States, as soon as practicable, the said proposed amendment of the National Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That, after concurrence of the house of representatives herein, the chief clerk of the senate shall transmit copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 11, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 16, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF OREGON, SENATE CHAMBER.

I, John W. Cochran, chief clerk of the senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 4, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 11, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 16, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 18th day of January, 1917.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of the Cloverland Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Washington, praying that the Federal Reserve System be extended to the Federal farm-loan banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 217) to authorize the sale of school property in the city of Denver, Colo., and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 974) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 7982) granting an increase of pension to Ida E. Cook (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 7983) granting an increase of pension to Derrick Huck (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7984) granting an increase of pension to Dallas Wamsley (with accompanying papers); and

A bill S. 7985) granting an increase of pension to George Wells (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 7986) to authorize the President to appoint Second Lieut. Ambrose I. Moriarty, retired, to the grade of lieutenant colonel in the United States Army and place him on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 7987) granting an increase of pension to Aurelia H. Gibson; and

A bill (S. 7988) granting an increase of pension to Simon Hasselback (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 7989) for the relief of Horace P. Hulett; and

A bill (S. 7990) for the relief of R. S. Van Tassell; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 7291) granting an increase of pension to Catherine C. Patrick; and

A bill (S. 7992) granting a pension to Henry Blake; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 7993) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah W. Deemer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OLIVER:

A bill (S. 7994) granting an increase of pension to James S. Gray (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUSTING:

A bill (S. 7995) granting an increase of pension to Charles Richards; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 7996) granting a pension to Israel W. Bennett; and

A bill (S. 7997) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Baldwin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 7998) for the conservation of alcohol in the manufacture of dealcoholized fermented beverages; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 7999) granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Gould (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 8000) granting an increase of pension to Emily A. Baldrige Cavender (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 8001) granting an increase of pension to Van R. Eels (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 8002) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Beckwith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for salaries and field and station expenses, including the maintenance of nurseries, and to extend the work to the Niobrara division of the Nebraska National Forest from $5,000 to $10,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEWIS submitted an amendment providing that hereafter when emergencies or the needs of the service require letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks and special clerks in first and second class post offices to work in excess of eight hours a day for such additional service they shall be paid at a rate of 50 per cent higher than their salaries as fixed by law, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment proposing to amend existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of a site at Yonkers, N. Y., at a limit of cost of $250,000, and the erection thereon of a public building at a limit of cost of $250,000, so as to increase the limit of cost for the site and building to $625,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20079), which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20079), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. HUSTING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill (H. R. 18994), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. KERN. I offer the following concurrent resolution. I ask that it be read, and then I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 14th day of February, 1917, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice I gave of a motion to amend the rules, I offer the following resolution and ask its reference to the Committee on Rules. First, I ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 328) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That paragraph 2 of Rule XXXVIII, of the Rules of the Senate, be amended so that it shall read as follows:

"2. All proceedings of the Senate when acting upon nominations shall be in open executive session except when the Senate by a majority vote shall otherwise decide. Upon a motion for a secret executive session upon any nomination each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only. If the Senate decides that any nomination should be considered in secret session, then all information communicated to or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon such nomination concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon such nomination shall be kept secret. If in any case charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may in its discretion notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected shall not be regarded as a secret."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in April last I delivered a speech upon equal suffrage. I do not want to repeat the speech, but I wish to add to it certain statistics consisting of six or eight lines and a paragraph, which I desire to have published in the RECORD, if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator wishes to put in the RECORD just what he desires added to the speech.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What I want to add to it consists of simply the election returns in various States of the Union, comprising about six or eight lines, the insertion of the word "Nevada" in one place and "British Columbia" in another, and then about half a page of a review of the situation as to the State of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that this matter be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The additional matter referred to is as follows:

In 1916 Colorado cast 294,375 votes, and Maine 136,405 votes.

* * * * * * *

In 1916 Kansas polled 629,813 votes, and Oklahoma 292,416.

* * * * * * *

In 1916 Washington polled 370,000 votes, and Connecticut 214,283 votes.

* * * * * * *

And in Kansas in 1916, 629,813 votes.

* * * * * * *

And in Oregon in 1916, 261,650 votes.

* * * * * * *

And in Washington in 1916, 370,000 votes.

* * * * * * *

Illinois uses a separate ballot for women, and again and again the count in local elections has proved that women, who are in the minority in that city, cast a vote quite in proportion, or even large in proportion, to their numbers. The presidential election of 1916 is representative. In Chicago 504,674 men and 303,801 women registered, and of these 487,210 men, or 96.5 per cent, and 289,444 women, or 95.2 per cent voted. Chicago women not only registered themselves, but apparently stimulated men to enroll in larger numbers than ever before. The results show a poll list for 1916 three times that of Chicago in the presidential election of 1912. Then, when men only voted, the registration was 291,503. In 1916 the total registration was 808,475. In commenting upon the increased Chicago electorate shown by the registration, the New York Globe of October 21 says:

"Assuming the substantial accuracy of the careful estimate of the Chicago Tribune that in Chicago there are 512,657 men and 501,384 women eligible to register, it seemed to the Globe that more than 61 per cent of the women, a good deal more than a majority, gave evidence of wanting to vote."

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the resolution which I offered yesterday may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 326, submitted yesterday by Mr. CUMMINS, as follows:

Whereas on the 22d day of January, 1917, the President of the United States appeared in person before the Senate and announced certain views touching the policy the United States should adopt and pursue respecting the principles upon which the belligerent powers of Europe should make peace, and respecting the manner in which the peace so made should be permanently maintained; and

Whereas the President declared in his communication as follows:

"I have sought this opportunity to address you because I thought that I owed it to you as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations to disclose to you without reserve the thought and purpose that have been taking form in my mind in regard to the duty of our Government in the days to come when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations"; and

Whereas it is impossible for the Senate to take official action upon these grave matters until the treaties creating such new duties and defining this new plan have been made by the President and submitted to the Senate for ratification or rejection; and

Whereas it was the obvious object of the address to invite a free and frank expression from the Members of the Senate for guidance in his arduous work; and

Whereas the proposals presented to this body involve the integrity of the Nation and the peace of the world and it is our bounden duty to advise the President of our individual opinions concerning the undertaking upon which the country is asked to embark: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That on Monday, the 29th day of January, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business the said address of the President shall be laid before the Senate for discussion and its consideration shall continue to the exclusion of all other business until each Senator shall have had an opportunity to speak thereon; but no Senator shall speak more than once nor more than one hour.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The pending resolution probably touches the most important matter that has ever been before the Congress of the United States, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Harding	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Bryan	Hollis	Oliver	Stone
Catron	Hughes	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Husting	Poindexter	Thomas
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Thompson
Clark	Jones	Reed	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Robinson	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kern	Saulsbury	Walsh
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Watson
Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Fernald	McLean	Sherman	Works
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Shields

Mr. KENYON. I desire to make the same announcement I heretofore made as to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], who are absent on committee service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to speak at length upon the resolution which I have offered. I sincerely hope that we may be able to reach a vote upon it before the morning hour has expired.

It will be observed that the resolution which is now before the Senate does not invite nor even properly permit a discussion at this time of the soundness or unsoundness of the principles announced in the President's message. I will do all I can do to hold the debate to the point in issue. What is it? It is this, Mr. President: Ought the Senate on some day in the near future to do the country the justice and render the President the respect of informing the people and advising the President of our views concerning a policy of the most vital import to which he has told us he is about to commit this Government? For the proper disposition of the resolution it matters not whether the President is right or wrong. In either case his announcement is the most important ever made by a Chief Executive of the United States. He so regards it; the whole country so looks upon it; and foreign nations so accept it. He has come to the Senate frankly, boldly, and I assume with sincerity, saying that he owed it to us to disclose to us without reserve the purpose in his mind. Why did he owe it to us to disclose without reserve the thought and purpose in his mind? The President himself answered the question. I quote from his address:

> I have sought this opportunity to address you because I thought I owed it to you as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations.

Are we to sit dumb under this appeal? The time to vote, it is true, has not arrived, but is the council, of which the President speaks, to remain silent while public opinion is forming and the public judgment is being entered?

I have no authority, of course, to speak for the President, but I am bound to believe that those who oppose this resolution are not his true friends. It must be that he desires and expects the freest and fullest debate upon the tremendous issues he has raised. Of what value can we be to him as a council if we lock our lips and allow him to go his way unadvised of our approval or dissent?

I do not know whether there is a Senator who intends to vote in opposition to this resolution; I hope there is not; but if there be one whose thought is tending in that direction I ask him to reflect a moment, for it seems to me that opposition means a doubt respecting either the sincerity or the courage of the President.

If we are not to render our opinions in response to his, it means that he chose the Senate simply as a conduit through which to pass this new doctrine to the ministers of foreign affairs and the newspapers of the world or as a setting for a beautiful picture skillfully painted. It is hard to believe that anyone will be willing to put the President in the position of having so flagrantly misused the privileges of the Senate of the United States. Or it means that he is one of those unhappy persons who feels safer in a company where he alone is armed and who cares to hear no shot save his own. Mark you, I hold no such doubt; I am not challenging either the sincerity or the courage of the Chief Executive, but I commend the inference that seems to me to be inevitable to those who are thinking of opposing the resolution.

It ought not to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as was suggested yesterday by the chairman of that committee. It is not now a matter for action; it is a subject for expression. There is no information of which I can conceive that can be furnished the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations. We have before us a subject so comprehensive, so profound, so fundamental, that each Senator must reach a conclusion upon it from his own view of the proper relation which the United States should sustain toward the world. If there ever was a time when duty commanded the Senators to express to the world, to their own country, and to the President their honest convictions regarding a proposal which affects the integrity of the Nation, the peace of the world, and the happiness of mankind, this is the proposal, and this is the time which requires conscientious speech.

I hope that the apprehensions of the Senator from Missouri, somewhat vaguely expressed yesterday, but easily understandable, nevertheless, will not be realized. I understand the pressure which now rests upon all Members of the Senate, as well as all Members of the other House; I appreciate the desire to close the business of this session and to avoid the necessity for a special or extraordinary meeting of Congress; but even if it is or shall become necessary to hold an extraordinary meeting of Congress, it is no answer to the suggestion I have made. There is no legislation that can be proposed comparable in importance with the recommendation or the announcement of the President. The fate of the Republic in years to come, the freedom of our people, the integrity of our sovereignty, may lie in these proposals and in the action which may be taken upon them. We will be false to the highest duty which the Constitution and the country places upon us and to our obligations to the great millions we represent if we sit silent now.

I do not know whether or not the Members of the Senate concur with the proposals that have been so clearly made before us; I have not inquired. There is not in my mind a partisan tinge. I think Senators will bear me witness that when I desire to support the President I do so without the least reserve, and this is not a partisan suggestion. I do not undertake to predict the position of any Senator regarding the questions which have been thus thrust upon us; but I do know that the President is not the only person who is charged with the duty of speech upon such a subject.

I can not believe, either, that the consideration of the message will require the length of time which the Senator from Missouri thought it would required. I think that every Senator ought to be given an opportunity to speak, but that does not mean that every Senator will speak; and I have no doubt that in one day or two days of faithful work the voice of the Senate will be heard, and that then we can resume the consideration of the legislative measures which are before, or may come before, the Senate.

Mr. President, upon these reasons I submit the resolution, with the earnest hope that it will meet favor with a majority of the Members of this body.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa states it as his opinion that any Senator who opposes this resolution is not a friend of the President. I do not speak with knowledge, but I venture to express a doubt as to whether the President is so obsessed with a delusion that the Senator is so affectionately devoted to him as to be willing to trust his fortunes in the Senator's hands.

Mr. President, I am against this resolution. I think it an unwise one. Evidently it has been introduced by the Senator without due deliberation and with great haste, as if he were apprehensive that some one else might precede him upon the stage.

What is to be accomplished by this resolution if adopted? The resolution itself declares that it is impossible for the Senate to take official action upon these grave matters at this time. Impossible to take official action, but the Senator has written in the resolution that it was the obvious object of the address to invite a free and frank expression from the Members of the Senate for the guidance of the President. There is no official action to be taken, but it is proposed that there shall be individual expressions from Members of the Senate as to their several opinions regarding the address delivered by the President; and so it is resolved that on Monday next the resolution shall be laid before the Senate for discussion, and that its consideration shall continue, to the exclusion of all other business, until each Senator shall have had an opportunity to speak thereon, but that no Senator shall speak more than once, nor exceeding one hour.

If every Senator here should deliver a speech expressive of his opinion touching this message, 96 hours would be consumed. If this talkfest should continue for seven hours per day, more than two weeks of the time of the Senate would be consumed, or practically half the time yet remaining of this session. But the Senator says that in his opinion only a few would desire to speak, and he therefore concludes that the speaking would probably end within two days. The Senator is of the opinion, however, that the few addresses delivered would sufficiently outline the attitude of the Senate and give a just and full expression of the Senate's opinion of the message.

Why so? The stated object of the resolution is to give each individual Member of the Senate an opportunity to express his personal opinion for the guidance of the President. If we should have three or four or a half dozen speeches disapproving and criticizing the address, in whole or in part, and another half dozen speeches indorsing and approving the address, how would the President be enlightened? In what way would the President's footsteps be guided? It is an unwarranted assumption to say that 8 or 10 or a dozen speeches made here by Senators in the course of two or three days would unfold and lay bare to the President and the country and the world the judgment of the entire Senate upon the merits or demerits of the address, and disclose the attitude of the individual Members of the Senate upon the great questions presented in the address of the Executive. We would get nowhere, the President would get nowhere, unless every Senator spoke his own opinion. The Senator from Iowa would have no right to say that he spoke for any other Senator. He would speak for himself only; and so it would be with all others. Each speech would be the individual act of the speaker. Of course, the President would have the views of this limited number, but what of the great majority remaining silent?

Mr. President, we are within four or five weeks of the 4th of March, when this session of Congress will terminate. There is no way to prevent Senators from speaking upon this subject if they wish to. Moreover, there is no desire upon the part of the President's friends to suppress the fullest speech with respect to this matter. On the contrary, it is invited. If any Senator cares to express his views, whether favorable or unfavorable, either for the guidance of the country or the President, or that he may declare his personal attitude on these great problems, he can do so. Let Senators discuss it if they wish; let the country discuss it; let the world discuss it, forthwith; but for the Senate to set aside such an amount of time as that outlined in this resolution, to be devoted to a debate about the President's message, when no official action can be taken at the end, seems to me would be a melancholy waste of time. I am opposed to it. There is other business to do.

Mr. President, I am going to renew the motion I made on yesterday and withdrew—because under the rule the resolution had to go over for the day—that the resolution be now referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, to which the message itself has been referred by the action of the Senate, and leave Senators here to make such speeches as they please from time to time; but I do not think we should project this discussion at this juncture to the exclusion of all other business—an aimless, barren discussion, in so far as official result is concerned. Valuable, no doubt, it would be. Speeches will be made by some Senators whether this resolution goes to the Committee on Foreign Relations or whether it is agreed to here on the floor. Speeches will be made from time to time under one pretext or another. Very well; so be it. But I am utterly opposed, and I think the Senate ought to be opposed, to a resolution that puts all other business aside and makes this the exclusive business of the Senate, until every Senator here can have an opportunity to tell the President what he thinks, to the end that the President may, in the language of the preamble, be guided by these deliverances.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am heartily in accord with the Senator from Missouri in urging that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Every Senator here has investigated this question to a considerable extent. A number of Senators have already introduced resolutions which give an outline of their ideas as to the kind of an international agreement they believe should be effected. It seems to me that if we submit this matter to the Senate without any resolution before it for consideration there will follow a rambling debate which can not produce any result.

I do believe with the Senator from Iowa that it is important that this matter should be presented to the people of the United States, and I hope that whatever resolution may be introduced and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations will receive consideration; that the hearings will be open, so that full and free discussion may be had, and that they be printed and used as public documents.

I would suggest that, inasmuch as we are bound to have an extra session of the Senate on the 4th of March, then would be an appropriate time for the consideration of this measure, together with the consideration of any resolution that may be presented by the Committee on Foreign Relations. Thus the discussion of this question will not be in the way of the passage of legislation which is pending and which it is necessary to put through in order to avoid an extra session of Congress.

A session of the Senate at the end of a presidential term is always called for the purpose of considering executive business, and that will be a very proper time, it seems to me, to discuss this question in as full a manner as the Senator from Iowa desires. But until that time, it seems to me that the proper course of procedure is to get into concrete shape some proposition, have it perfected by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and then submit it to the Senate for determination.

For myself, I have believed for a number of years that there should be an international arbitration tribunal, with the power to enforce its decrees. I do not believe that the trial tribunal or court should consist of members of various nations, so that we might be drawn into the systems or policies of European Governments. I believe that that tribunal should be composed of judges in attendance upon the tribunal, ready for service; and whenever nations become involved in a controversy each should have the right to appoint two judges upon its side, or more, if agreed upon. The judges so selected to determine who should be the fifth judge or the seventh or the ninth, as the case might be, and thereupon the determination of those judges to constitute the decree of the court.

I believe that such procedure would give a fair opportunity to determine questions equitably between big powers and little nations. If the United States should have a controversy with Holland, that nation would have its two representatives, the United States would have its two representatives, and the fifth judge selected would be named by agreement, or if not, and no better way determined, then by chance.

Mr. President, these are views which I have already presented in some respects to some of the committees of the Senate, and, while I have not a resolution that is thoroughly studied and it must be only suggestive, I want to introduce now a resolution, which I ask the Secretary to read.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection, of course, to the reading of the resolution, but I do object to its being considered at a time when my resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. I ask that it be read at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The Chair understands that the resolution will be read as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States endeavor to negotiate with the nations of the world a treaty for the establishment of an international court, with power to enforce its decrees, which court shall recognize and maintain the territorial integrity of each nation as it exists at the time of the ratification of such treaty and determine all other controversies arising between the nations.

The Senate suggests in the negotiation of such treaty that each nation appoint from two to five judges to remain in attendance on the tribunal. That when a dispute is submitted between two nations each shall have the right to select two of the judges in attendance and the four so designated to select the fifth, and if they can not agree the fifth judge shall be selected by chance, unless the parties to the dispute agree to some other mode of selection. That the determination of such judges shall constitute the decree of the court. That by agreement of the nations involved in the controversy the court may consist of a greater number of the judges in attendance. That each nation shall contribute for the support of said tribunal such funds, naval and military establishment as may be agreed upon, to be controlled by said international tribunal, and shall reduce its own naval and military establishment for the enforcement of its own laws and peace and order in its own territory as may be agreed upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe the Senator proposes to have a court and that that court shall have power to enforce its decrees.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just what will be the modus operandi of enforcing those decrees? Is it to be by military and naval forces?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, we go to war to secure peace. Is that it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The proposition is embodied in the latter part of the resolution. It means that there shall be a contribution of military and naval establishments of various Governments. I have not any doubt that there are numerous objections that can be made to any such resolution, but the world is now being drenched in the blood of millions, and I believe we have to yield some of our sovereignty in order to prevent the wholesale slaughter not only now continuing but which is likely to recur at intervals for ages to come.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, I am still unable to follow the reasoning of the Senator. We have a court and we give it power to enforce its decrees. Then we provide that those decrees shall be enforced by military means.

Mr. SHAFROTH. By contributing them to the tribunal and its using them. It is just like the sheriff being under the control of the State court, just as the United States marshal is under the control of the United States court.

Mr. GALLINGER. But——

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have a right to invoke the power of the State and Nation, respectively, if necessary to enforce a process.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand; but is this court to order out the naval and military forces of the several nations?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; it is to have its own military force, and the military forces of the various nations will be reduced and should be reduced to a peace footing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I will ask the Senator a further question, because I want to understand his position.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. The several nations will contribute of their military and naval forces?

Mr. SHAFROTH. As may be agreed upon between them.

Mr. GALLINGER. As may be agreed upon between them. Whom are they going to fight? Each other?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are to fight no one if no one disputes the decrees. It is just like the force back of a court. There is a force back of the United States courts; and there is no resistance. That is the theory upon which, in my judgment, wars will cease.

Mr. GALLINGER. If one nation repudiates the decree, then all the other nations are to pounce upon that nation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the court enforces it by having a sufficient force to do it. That is the position. This is revolutionary—of course, it is revolutionary; there is no question of that; but at the same time if we are going to stop these horrible catastrophes that are happening we have to invoke something more effective than has been employed in the past.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator think we would have pretty serious entangling alliances when we went into a matter of that kind?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think not, because we should have our treaty, and that treaty will clearly define what shall be the powers of the court and what shall be the force behind the court. The mode of determining the controversy is practically the same as that which we now, by arbitration, invoke in disputes with other nations. The proposition is to agree by treaty to submit every controversy and that the court shall enforce its decree.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield in just a moment. It seems to me that from a proposition of that kind there can be evolved something that will have a great tendency in the future to prevent war. It does not interfere with the integrity of any nation. Consequently there can be no question submitted as to whether Great Britain has any claim to any of our territory which once belonged to her, or to any territory which we acquired from Mexico. The very jurisdiction of the court excludes the consideration of such questions. Nay, more; the territorial integrity of each one of the nations at the time of the ratification of the treaty must be recognized and must be enforced by this very tribunal. Instead of any waiving of the Monroe doctrine, leaving the South American Republics unprotected, it will make and turn over to a greater force, namely, this tribunal, the enforcement of the maintenance of their territorial boundaries. Consequently it makes them more secure than even under the Monroe doctrine. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Colorado has announced that he is opposed to my resolution. Does he not recognize that he is doing at this moment the very thing that I provide for in the resolution, namely, a discussion of this subject? I have not provoked a discussion of the merits of the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator in his desire to get a discussion. It may be that this resolution I have offered will not voice the sentiment of anybody but myself, but I believe it is something that ought to be discussed. I believe the Senator's position is right, that it should be discussed, but not at this session. What I want is a discussion of it when the Senate is in extraordinary session after the 4th of March, and then we will have all the time necessary, without an interference with other matters pending before Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is discussing it now at this session, and taking up the very precious time which he desires to save.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have been speaking only 10 minutes. I merely wanted to emphasize the fact that the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa ought to go to a committee for an examination of these questions, and that that committee should determine as to the form and ascertain the best mode of procedure with relation to it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield. I was going to sit down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I rose for the purpose of receiving a little enlightenment, if possible, from the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well, I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator think the resolution could be adopted and could be followed out without an amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I doubt it very much. I have a resolution pending to that effect at the present time.

Mr. FALL. Would not that amendment to the Constitution of the United States necessarily provide that when a military force was engaged in enforcing the decree of the court it was war?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have introduced a resolution, and I had a hearing upon it before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee last Thursday, in which I proposed that this power should be given by a constitutional amendment. The power now to declare war is in Congress, and in my judgment in order to remove that power it is necessary to adopt a constitutional amendment.

Mr. FALL. And vest it in the President?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; not vest it in the President, but in Congress, or vest it in the Senate and the President.

Mr. FALL. Not vested in the court the Senator speaks of?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. But you have to grant certain powers to the court.

Mr. FALL. Then you practically vest in the court the power to declare war?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If we are to have a controversy settled by arbitration——

Mr. FALL. I am seeking enlightenment. I want to follow up my questions logically if I can.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am trying to answer the Senator logically.

Mr. FALL. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I said, in order to have a peace-enforcing tribunal, in my judgment, you must vest the necessary power somewhere, and it has got to be not in any individual nation but must be of necessity in the court which determines these controversies submitted to them.

Mr. FALL. While we were engaged in this little adventure with both our land and naval forces, under the Constitution of the United States the President would still have the right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus here in the United States, for example, to commandeer every man in any line of industry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think not. You still——

Mr. FALL. He has that right now, in time of war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all true, and he is continuing that right. I have not any doubt that he would continue it.

Mr. FALL. Then that would be fighting. That would be war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As to internal affairs, there is no question but that we have to maintain a force.

I do not believe the League to Enforce Peace propaganda will do the thing that is most desired by all the nations, and that is a reduction of armament. Billions of dollars are spent each year by the nations in supporting large armies and navies, and those billions raised by taxation oppress the people of the world. Some way must be devised to relieve that burden. I believe this proposition is a better one, but I recognize that this is outside of the question that is presented. I only brought this up as an illustration to show the fact that the question in concrete form ought to be considered by a committee carefully, and if a discussion arises such as the Senator from Iowa suggests, it ought to be a discussion when we have a special session of the Senate and can devote time for that purpose.

Mr. FALL. Then will the Senator answer this question: What, in his opinion, was the object of the President of the United States in injecting this matter necessarily into the field of discussion by an address to the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was prompted by motives of humanity. That is the reason.

Mr. FALL. To whom? To the Senate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. To all, and for the Senate to consider the matter.

Mr. FALL. That is exactly the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate shall consider the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But we do not consider other matters in the Senate in that way. We refer them first to committees. Nearly all resolutions are submitted to committees. All measures of a complicated nature are always submitted to a committee, and that committee by investigation can suggest the best measure. There is nothing here that is concrete.

Mr. FALL. The records will show that during the last four years there have been 61 resolutions upon one certain matter of very near interest to the people of the United States submitted to the Foreign Relations Committees and only one reported out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be those investigations showed that they were not proper to be reported out.

Mr. FALL. Precisely.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or it may be there has been no attempt to follow up the resolutions to get an expression of the committee.

Mr. FALL. If, in the opinion of the President of the United States, this was a proper matter for discussion, does not the Senator agree with the President of the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do, and I believe there ought to be discussion, but I do not think it ought to take place before the 4th of March. It can take place immediately afterwards.

Mr. FALL. Then why did not the President wait until after the 4th of March?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because, as a matter of fact, it is a subject that is uppermost in the minds of the people, and the people ought to think about it and the people ought to discuss it. That is true.

Mr. FALL. Precisely.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But we have limitations upon this session. We are limited in time to the extent of a little over four weeks, and if we discuss it we will do nothing else.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. The Senator knows perfectly well this discussion will likely proceed, and that then those who are opposed to its being openly discussed in the Senate, as are some, will insist that we are filibustering against some appropriation bill or against some bill which the Senator is interested in, for example. Although he says that the people of the United States want this discussion, that it should be discussed by their chosen representatives, yet that will be thrown in our teeth whenever one of us rises here to offer a few remarks either in agreement or disagreement with the ideas of the Senator or those of the President of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senate is not to blame for the address of the President. We can not assume, it seems to me, anything else than that the President expected some action by the Senate. We can not expect the Senate to take action without some debate. That will take time. If we enter upon a discussion of a question as important as this is, it will take a great deal of time. Now, I am not averse to entering upon that discussion. I hope that when we do enter upon it there will come out of the discussion some concrete proposition, some resolution.

It seems to me that if the President wanted this debate to take place at a special session after the 4th of March he would have waited until then to deliver his message. It does not follow, however, from that that the Senate necessarily ought to take up the time of the country, with the certainty of an extra session coming on if we do take it up, by entering into the debate now.

I have a good deal of sympathy with the proposition of the Senator from Colorado—that, if we are going to have a special session, we ought to debate this question after the 4th of March, if in the meantime we can do the business necessary to avoid an extraordinary session. I think that is something for the Senate to determine.

It strikes me also that the weakness, if there is a weakness, in the resolution of the Senator from Iowa is that it contains no concrete proposition. I am of the opinion that if we entered into the debate, as the Senator has proposed, it would result in some resolution coming out of the debate and being adopted by a majority of the Senate, possibly. A discussion that will not result in that, while it may do a great deal of good, will not do the amount of good, it seems to me, that it ought to do, and will not place the Senate in a position where it takes any direct and concrete stand on the subject, which, it seems to me, is something we are bound to do since the President has brought the matter before us.

Personally, it seems to me the matter ought to be brought before the House of Representatives just the same as it has been brought before the Senate; but the President evidently thinks differently. We can not, it seems to me, escape the proposition that we must take some action. Ordinarily the proper course to be pursued would be to refer the resolution to the appropriate committee, which in this case, of course, would be the Foreign Relations Committee. I know there is a feeling that if the resolution is referred to that committee it will, like many other resolutions, not see daylight again. The Foreign Relations Committee itself only a week or two ago, when a resolution was introduced to approve some action of the President, did not want the resolution referred to that committee, but wanted the Senate to act upon it at once. This proposition is of greater importance than was that. Personally, I should like to see the resolution referred to the committee. However, I think we ought to adopt some direction in reference to the report of the committee, fixing the time within which it must act. This resolution should not take the course of other resolutions which have gone to that committee. Therefore, I am going to submit an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to say a word in reference to some of the resolutions which have gone to the Foreign Relations Committee during the last two years and which have been buried there, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] have stated. As to many of those resolutions, the authors of the resolutions desired them to be buried in that committee. There have been a number of resolutions introduced here with reference to certain matters sent to the Foreign Relations Committee with no expectation that they would ever be returned. I think the Foreign Relations Committee would report any resolution in some form when there was any real manifestation of interest upon the part of the Senate that it should be reported. I can call to mind some five or six resolutions which have been introduced with reference to Mexico and certain other matters, whose authors were very desirous of getting them into the Foreign Relations Committee so that they would never again be heard of.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt that that is true; but, on the other hand, there have been many resolutions referred to that committee where the authors of the resolutions were very anxious to have them reported. I am going to test the sense of the Senate as to whether or not it wants this resolution to go to that committee to remain there, or whether it wants proper action taken, by submitting a motion to amend the motion of the Senator from Missouri; and if it is in such shape when reported that we can, in the judgment of the Senate, finish it before the 4th of March, that can easily be done, but when the report comes in, if the Senate desires to put it over after the 4th of March, if we are to have a special session, then, so far as I am personally concerned, I see no objection to it going over until that time. That is not very far off, and we can perhaps have a better discussion after having time for deliberation and investigation.

Mr. President, I presume we all have some well-defined ideas on the various questions presented by the President. I know, so far as I have been able, I have given some of these questions a great deal of attention for quite a number of years. I do not want to discuss now what I think ought to be done, if anything, because that would only bring on a debate, which, it seems to me, would be useless as it could not accomplish anything. When we get a concrete proposition before us, however, something will come out of it, and I am of the opinion that even a debate on the question will accomplish a great deal of good. I do not believe that in this debate we ought to take up the questions which have been submitted, for instance, by the Senator from Colorado, important as they are, and some of which, I think, will in due time be considered and ought to be considered. Whenever we undertake in any proposition which we may offer to the world to lay down the details of any proposal we shall get into difficulty, because that is something which must be passed upon by other nations as well as ours.

I am in favor of trying to do something, even though we may not accomplish all that any man thinks we ought to accomplish. We can perhaps get something out of such an effort; and even though we get nothing out of it, it will be something worthy of a trial and fair consideration of honest men everywhere in the civilized world. I therefore move, Mr. President, to amend the motion of the Senator from Missouri by adding the following words: "with instructions to report the same back to the Senate, with such recommendations as said committee may deem proper, within 10 days."

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator's amendment contemplate that the committee shall report back amendments that are not germane to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa? The proposition of the Senator from Iowa is simply to fix a date for the discussion of the President's address or of the matters contained therein.

Mr. NORRIS. I see the point which the Senator from Wyoming makes, and I think there is a good deal in it. Probably the committee would go a little bit further than that in order to bring in a concrete proposition. As I have stated, the only weakness I see in the proposition of the Senator from Iowa is that it provides for nothing but debate, and while I think the debate might at its close result in the adoption of some concrete proposition, at the same time I believe we ought to let the committee have an opportunity to shape such a resolution or amend the pending resolution, and when reported back it will be subject to whatever action the Senate may desire to take.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, if the committee shape a resolution of that sort, it would travel far afield from either the resolution of the Senator from Iowa or from the address of the President.

Mr. NORRIS. They might do both. The resolution of the Senator from Iowa, I think, would bring about, perhaps, some action by the Senate—the adoption of some resolution or of some concrete proposition. If it does not do so, there is not anything to do but to debate it. That might do some good; I am not disputing that; but at the same time I think we ought to take definite action. For instance, the President has embodied various propositions in his address; he had asked the Senate for leave to address the body, and has delivered his address; he has given us his ideas as to what we ought to do, and as to many things. So it seems to me the Senate ought to say, since it has been asked by the President to take action, whether it believes in this proposition or that proposition or believes in them in a modified form. The Senate ought to respond, it seems to me, to the invitation which the President has extended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri, as I think he rose first.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know of any way that the Senate can express its opinion except by the adoption of a resolution or the enactment of a law?

Mr. NORRIS. No; offhand I should say not. It seems to me that we must do one or the other.

Mr. REED. The resolution which is now before us does not call for an expression of the opinion of the Senate, but for an opportunity for individual Senators to make speeches. That is all there is in the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that technically that is all there is in it, and, while I think that the discussion might result, and would result, in the introduction and adoption of some concrete resolution, I believe that we ought to consider such a resolution.

Mr. REED. May I not ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. Is not the resolution squarely in the teeth of the rules in that it undertakes, first, to cut off the right of Senators to take up any ordinary matter of business provided for by the rules, and, second, in that it undertakes to limit debate, a thing that can only be done by unanimous consent?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that presents another question. Of course, the resolution does limit debate; there is not any doubt about that. I personally have not any objection to that part of it, although in one sense it may be true that it is an amendment of the rules. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that if there is a possible defect in the resolution of the Senator from Iowa it is that it lacks in concrete statement. I will ask the Senator whether he thinks there was any concrete statement in the stump speech from the throne that was delivered in the Senate of the United States by the Chief Executive on the occasion referred to, when the matter concerned solely the treaty-making power, under the Constitution vested in the Senate in conjunction with the President, and whether any issue was presented to the country at large either by the nations in mortal combat or by any measure then pending in the Senate? Was it not rather intended to forestall and foreclose independent action on the part of the Senate by appealing in advance of Senate action to public opinion that the President's view might sink unanswered into the minds of the general public before the Senate had a chance to discuss the question? Who can foretell the terms of such a league as proposed? Shall the Senate sit silent under such an attempt to commit it by an acquiescence? Was not that rather the purpose of the Chief Executive in appearing in this Chamber and delivering such a message when no issue was pending in this Senate? Was it not rather for the purpose of preventing dispassionate action by the Senate, making us accept whatever treaty shall be hereafter transmitted to us, and compelling us to ratify it by the coercion of the public opinion sought to be created? What reason is there for suddenly injecting the subject into this Senate when nearing the end of the session?

I will ask, further, whether it was not the intention of the Chief Executive by devoting three days a week to the room not far from the Senate Chamber, not trusting his own majority Members of the Senate to conduct the business that might properly be before it, to come here and, by the appearance of the patronage-dispensing executive power of this Government, to coerce the majority party into his demands and into obedience to his program? I ask whether that is not really the concrete proposition presented by the Senator from Iowa in his resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will recognize, of course, that he has yielded the floor to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is again recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course, I did not yield the floor willingly. Like the Senator from Illinois has indicated, I have been coerced. But, Mr. President, I do not want to discuss now, although I have my own ideas about that question, the motives of the Chief Executive. The Senator from Iowa clearly outlined in the presentation of the resolution offered by him that he was not going to question them, and I do not think we ought to do so; and, while the question propounded by the Senator from Illinois is very short and simple, at the same time I do not care to enter into that phase of the debate, particularly now. I am assuming, as the Senator from Iowa assumed when he presented his resolution, that, whether one agrees or disagrees with the President, he was acting within his rights, and acting in good faith; and I want, so far as I can, to have the debate proceed on that theory; and so I will not enter into a debate on the question the Senator from Illinois brings up.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield only for a question. If the new rule is to be enforced on me, I want it enforced as to every other Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if he did not think that the Senate has before it matters of more immediate and pressing importance, demanding urgent consideration than the subject of the resolution which we are now considering?

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to that question, I will say I do not. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that the questions presented by the Chief Magistrate of the Nation are of more importance than anything else that can possibly come before the Senate. I should like, if I could, to meet the questions the President has presented, without interfering with the regular routine of the Senate, since the 4th of March is so close at hand, and it seems to me that might be a good way to dispose of the matter; but I would not do that, even though it meant an extraordinary session of Congress, if it could be construed as dodging the question, for I am not in favor of dodging it; I think we ought to meet it; I think it is the most important of any business that can possibly come before us, and we ought to respond to the suggestions of the President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to debate the matter any longer. I desire to have my amendment stated.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. Conceding that this matter is important, will that importance be at all affected by a postponement until the routine business of the Senate shall have been concluded?

Mr. NORRIS. If we are to have a special session of the Senate following the 4th of March, when the question can be taken up, that would not be such a delay, it seems to me, as would be very material.

Mr. THOMAS. We are going to have a special session of the Senate and a special session of Congress; we can not avoid it; we have wasted half of our time, and now we are allowing other matters to intrude here still further.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be, but we are not to blame for this other matter.

Mr. THOMAS. I am blaming nobody.

Mr. NORRIS. We did not ask that the question be brought up; the President has brought it here, and, without questioning his motives or anything else, it is here.

Mr. THOMAS. I am blaming nobody.

Mr. NORRIS. We can not avoid it; it is before us; and if we are going to have a special session anyway, then I am in favor of taking this question up first and doing the other business afterwards.

Mr. THOMAS. I repeat, I am blaming nobody, Mr. President. I am stating what I think is a fact, that we are not attending to our business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not yield for a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Chair will invoke the new rule on every Senator, if it is to be enforced at all. I now desire to have my amendment stated, Mr. President.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. The discussion about a special session is interesting, because——

Mr. NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, I do not yield to the Senator to make a speech in my time, because the Chair has already announced that that will take me off the floor.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not wish to do that, and I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be glad to yield if it were not for that. Now, I offer the amendment which I have suggested, and I should like to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Mr. STONE has moved that Senate resolution 326 be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. To that motion Mr. NORRIS offers the following amendment, namely, to add the words "with instructions to report the same back to the Senate, with such recommendations as it may think best, within 10 days."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I trust that we may still be able to finish the regular business before the 4th of March, and that an extra session for general business may not be necessary.

I think it was eminently appropriate that the President should have come to the Senate last Monday and to give us his views as he did.

I consider the address of the President delivered at that time a masterful expression of the highest ideals of international relations.

It appeals to the people of the world for justice in the treatment of nation by nation.

It points the way to an end of the present war and to a permanent peace.

It voices the hope of the world for lasting peace.

It is expressed in language so brave and beautiful that I wish it might remain for a while to speak by itself.

I recognize the fact that we will be called upon on the floor of the Senate to debate the various suggestions contained in that address. We will have an extra session of the Senate, of course, following the 4th of March. I hope we may finish our regular business now while the House and the Senate are both in session, and I would be much gratified to see this subject go over until the 5th of March, when we will not be crowded with the regular work which is now upon us, and when we might devote ourselves exclusively, if we see fit, to the discussion of the suggestions contained in the President's address. I shall support the motion of the Senator from Missouri to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when the President of the United States addressed the Senate the other day he evidently had one of two purposes in mind. He used this language:

> I have sought this opportunity to address you because I thought that I owed it to you as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations—

And so forth. Now, he was either using the Senate as a megaphone through which to address the world, or he expected some action on the part of the Senate. If action is not to be taken before the 4th of March, I am wondering in what kind of a position this country is going to be in case a victory occurs between the 4th of March and the convening of Congress next December; because the President says, in another part of his address, speaking of the terms of peace:

> They imply, first of all, that it must be a peace without victory.

Are we to remain in session after the 4th of March watching the course of events in Europe to see whether there is a victory, and try to take action before a victory occurs; or what is to be our course?

I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is the purpose of the majority to take up this address and consider it before the 4th of March, or if it is the purpose to consider it at an extra session after the 4th of March?

Mr. STONE. I do not know the purpose of the majority. There has been no expression, except such as has been heard this morning, by Senators on this side, so far as I am informed. Speaking for myself, as I have already stated, I do not think this resolution should be agreed to, for the reason that under its very terms the statements to be made by Senators expressive of their views, if generally indulged, would consume nearly half of the time remaining of this session. That is my own opinion.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not consent to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The Senator from Nebraska himself has indicated his opinion to be that the public interests would be better promoted by postponing any general discussion on the floor of the President's message until the Senate reassembles immediately after the 4th of March.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think that if this resolution were to be reported back in 10 days from now, at the time the report was made we would then be definitely able to know, perhaps, whether the regular business of the session could be transacted before the 4th of March; and if so, whether we could not reach an agreement at that time that the report of the committee should go over until the 5th of March, and be taken up at a special session?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, we know now as well as we will know 10 days hence that it will require every moment of the time of the Senate, even with longer sessions than we have been holding, to complete the business of the Senate before the 4th of March, so as to avoid an extra session of the Congress; and if we came back here 10 days hence to reach an agreement by unanimous consent, I can see no more prospect of that being done then than now. Besides, I think a matter of this kind had better go to the committee without an attempt to instruct that body as to what it shall do.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that we have confused a little the only real issue involved in the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. There is no doubt at all that if Senators desire to speak upon the statements made yesterday by the President of the United States nothing can prevent their doing so in the course of ordinary debate on matters before us, like appropriation bills. They can not be prevented from saying what they feel moved to say on that subject.

The proposition of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand it, is simply to limit the debate upon the President's discourse to a given time; to set aside a certain time for that debate, which in his opinion and in the opinion of many others, I think, may be inevitable. My own opinion is that we should save time by taking one day and devoting it to this subject and letting those speak who want to, with an understanding that we should not discuss it in connection with appropriation bills and other matters of regular business. My own belief is that the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Iowa would save, instead of wasting, time.

I am very anxious, as I suppose we all are, to avoid an extra session of Congress. Therefore the proposition of the Senator from Iowa seems to me to assume importance, and in my judgment it would be a timesaving arrangement. But when we come to the question of instructions to the Committee on Foreign Relations, it is perfectly obvious that to report back this resolution with recommendations would simply mean that within 10 days we should report back this resolution with a recommendation as to whether we would hold the debate on another day or whether we would let it run on in general fashion. Does anyone suppose that we can attach to this resolution of the Senator from Iowa recommendations to arrange for the peace of the world at the present time and also for the future peace of the world after this war is over? Simple as that would be, beyond doubt I think it would not be in order attached to a resolution which only concerns the time for debating this subject.

I do not wish to exaggerate the importance of settling the present war and all future wars by Senate resolution; but I think it would take even the Foreign Relations Committee—for which I have the profoundest respect, naturally, being a member of it—more than 10 days to determine how it would be best to end the present war and then secure the peace of the world subsequently.

It seems to me that those are important subjects. I know the great attraction which they possess. There is an immense fascination in settling other people's business and meddling with other people's affairs, especially when the resolution which is to settle them really amounts to nothing. The subjects brought forward by the President, however, amount to a great deal; and to discuss all that he advises, easy, clear and simple as his propositions are, will take time.

I do not think myself that the mere fact that the Senate is silent binds the Senate in any way or can be interpreted as meaning that they agree with all the propositions which the President has advanced. I do not think that failure to express dissent binds the Senate to the President's views any more than the Executive can bind this country without a treaty ratified by the Senate. But if we are now to discuss the President's propositions, I honestly think that we should save time and have a better expression of opinion if we should follow the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment, as I do not intend to refer to the resolution itself, beyond saying that the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are largely my own concerning the President's address. I merely wish to emphasize the importance of devoting the remaining time of the present session to pending business.

We must enact into law between now and the 4th of March 13 great appropriation bills. One is now before the Senate as our unfinished business, upon which we have spent a week, and I shall be agreeably surprised if we get a final vote upon it to-day. At that rate of progress, Mr. President, and with a special session, we will consume the time between now and the beginning of the next fiscal year in disposing of the bills alone.

Then we have for consideration the Porto Rican bill, the corrupt-practices bill, the flood-control bill, the leasing bill, the railway legislation—consisting, perhaps, of several bills—and the revenue bill, upon which we can not hope to make very rapid progress. It is probably the most important of them all. These demand our first consideration, and the problems of peace may well await a more convenient season.

I am satisfied that the European conflict will continue until after the 4th of March; and I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that it would be difficult for any body of men, however capable, to put an end to it or to arrange for a world peace in that interval. The time is invaluable to us for the business in hand if we will only use it. For my part, I do not perceive how it is going to be possible, even if we spend our days and nights in the effort, to avoid an extra session of the Congress in order to transact business which could have been disposed of in very great part between the 6th day of December and the present day had we striven to do so, and much of which, because of our failure, must necessarily go over to another session. So let us devote the few days that remain to this Congress to the disposal of our calendar and make as much progress upon it as we can.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]?

Is it not understood that the message of the President was communicated to foreign countries? If that be true, would not the Senators assume that if we entered on the discussion of this subject at this time, before there was any reply from any of the foreign nations, we might seriously embarrass whatever reply they might be inclined to make? And, I ask the Senate, is it not worthy of our consideration that if we are to enter into a discussion of this matter we might, out of regard to the fact that the President has submitted the proposition of cooperation to foreign countries, allow time enough to elapse so that they could respond if they wished and express whatever viewpoints of amendment or qualifications they might have rather than enter upon the discussion now? May we not in the expression of the honest view of any Senator as to the right of the issue in behalf of one nation in the conflict or the wrong in principle or conduct of one nation in the conflict, or the viewpoint we as a body take of what might be the conditions of peace, what terms should be accepted and what conditions should be rejected—would we not to some degree disclose something of a discourtesy to the nations and somewhat embarrass them as to the form of reply that they might make or spirit of cooperation they otherwise might indicate? Then might I not take the liberty of submitting to the Senate whether we might not put obstructions in the path of the President by virtue of our own expressions, embarrassing to some degree such reply as he might make to such answer as the foreign Governments might make, by disclosing the attitude of the Senate in such opposition by its expression as would defeat the very purpose which the able Senator from Iowa has in his mind and which the Senator from Massachusetts clearly has in his—that the matter should receive that serious consideration of unprejudiced reflection before we entered upon the discussion?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa, since it was to himself I addressed the interrogation, among others.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Illinois that the message of the President to the Senate was intended to secure a reply from foreign nations? Was it delivered for the purpose of asking the foreign nations to reply to it?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator: It is my viewpoint that when the President of the United States sent the document to the nations of the earth interested in securing peace his purpose was to elicit from them their viewpoints as to the propriety or practicability of those views, in so far as it concerned the foreign nations to cooperate with us in the design.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the Senator from Illinois, I take it, believes that the message having been delivered to the Senate as the council with the President, the Senate ought to be silent until the foreign nations make reply?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator: The Senator from Illinois does not say that it ought to do so, nor does the Senator from Illinois say that the Senate is bound to do so. The Senator from Illinois merely took the liberty of suggesting to the able Senator, if he did not think there was propriety in the delay, and some advantage to be gained from it that would serve as an aid to the object in view—while on the other hand a very free discussion now—which, if discussed at all, would, as the Senator from Massachusetts correctly says, enter into all of the details of the method of regulation of the affairs of other nations—might awaken antagonisms in certain sections because of the misunderstanding by those far from us as to what was meant on the floor of the Senate, or, though correct understanding, serve as an obstruction to the President at this time, which no Senator here desires, of course, deliberately to do? I was merely submitting to the able Senator from Iowa the question whether he did not think it were propriety and the part of wisdom that we delay the discussion, that we might encourage any reply or rejoinder from the foreign nations in a spirit of such hopefulness and unprejudiced character as would enable us to execute whatever design for world peace is practicable—not that it was necessary that we delay or that we were under obligation to do it—but that it is profitable.

Mr. HARDING and Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Iowa still has the floor for the purpose of propounding a query, I owe it to the Senator from Iowa to yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Illinois yield, if to anyone?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, since the Senator from Iowa has taken his seat.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from Illinois did not include me in his special address when he took the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator he is included.

Mr. HARDING. I wish to ask him if the Senate has not already established a precedent in stating its opinion regarding the peace note before the foreign powers had an opportunity to make a reply thereto?

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator pardon me? I did not catch his observation because of the noise in the Chamber, which made it impossible.

Mr. HARDING. I wanted to ask the Senator if the Senate had not already established a precedent in passing its judgment upon a peace note by the Executive before the foreign powers to whom it was addressed had an opportunity to reply.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, first responding to the able Senator's allusion that I did not include him in my inquiry, I desire to inform him that wherever I seek information or guidance he is always included in the inquiry. But second——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LEWIS. I take it the Senator from Montana wishes to have the unfinished business laid aside?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield for a question, as I know the Senator is not going to take me off the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement. I hope before the appropriation bill is taken up the proposed agreement may be put before the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution go over until to-morrow without prejudice, to be taken up at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. STONE. I dislike to object, but I should think the matter is now practically at a point where a vote could be taken. Are we to consume two hours again to-morrow morning in debate? Let us vote on it now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I would be very willing to vote, but I have some suggestions to make in reply to the argument of the Senator from Missouri with respect to the reference. I only remind him that if the resolution goes to the calendar, as it must go without the unanimous consent for which I have asked, I will be able to move to take it up at any time after 2 o'clock any day and the debate will simply be renewed.

Mr. STONE. I hoped that the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would consent to withhold his request to take up the appropriation bill for a few moments until we could dispose of this matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not answer about the few moments. I do not know how long it will take to dispose of the resolution. I can answer for myself, but I can not answer for the Senator from Illinois or for anybody else.

Mr. STONE. Let the resolution go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Iowa, and the resolution goes to the calendar.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for the purpose of considering the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the appropriation bill is before the Senate. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have nothing to say in conclusion, other than to do the courtesy I owe to the Senator from Iowa to respond to his inquiry. He is correct. There was a resolution tendered here in the Senate which did precipitate a discussion previous to the reply of foreign nations, but because there was one instance of that which may be the subject of some objection upon the one hand it ought not to form a precedent for the future.

But there is this distinction, I ask the able Senator from Ohio to note: That was a resolution to approve or disapprove, to affirm or dissent, from the action of the President, and it was concrete. Here there is no resolution for that object, but one of more general discussion, that may involve criticism and condemnation of all those interested with whom we hope for harmonious relations. There is a distinction, as I see it.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that his amendment is not now in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent to consider it now, as I shall be compelled to leave the Senate for a while. I understood that the committee amendments were disposed of.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator has to leave the Chamber, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The SECRETARY. On line 16, page 79, where it reads "foreman of laborers, $840," it is proposed to strike out "$840" and in lieu to insert "$1,000."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this is a matter that the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds recommended to the committee. Col. Harts appeared in person before the committee and recommended this increase. The foreman of the State, War, and Navy Department Building has had his salary increased from $1,000 to $1,200. It seems to me to afford some consistency in the pay of men who have similar places this salary should be increased from $840 to $1,000. I trust that the acting chairman of the committee in charge of the bill will not oppose it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is estimated for, but the committee laid down a policy that we would not increase anybody's salary. That is the policy adopted by the committee at the outset, because if we once began it we would have to increase many salaries. This is one of the many.

The Senate have opened the door for these increases and has already made an increase of a million dollars. All I can say is that the committee thought we ought not to increase these salaries, and that is all I have to say. The Senate can do as it pleases. If we do this, of course we can not object to a great many other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hardly know how to proceed with this matter, because if it is to be the policy of the Senate not to increase the salaries of individual clerks or employees, I dislike to recognize a single exception which has no especial virtue. I know a good many people in the Government service who ought to have an increase of salary. As I said yesterday, when a worthy case is specifically presented to me I am going to support it. I have in mind many good clerks in the employ of the Government who should have their salaries increased according to my judgment, but I dislike to make a discrimination.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Husting	Overman	Sutherland
Brady	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Bryan	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Tillman
Clark	Lane	Robinson	Townsend
Curtis	Lewis	Shafroth	Underwood
Fall	Lippitt	Sheppard	Vardaman
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Walsh
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Harding	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Hardwick	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Hughes	Norris	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] appeared before the subcommittee on this item and presented the request that this salary be increased. It is also true that it was estimated for. But, Mr. President, in considering increases of salaries for individual cases the committee as a whole decided that it would be much better not to enter into individual cases, and the majority of the committee decided that there should be no increases at all. I will say to the Senator that there were a few increases agreed to, but after the decision was arrived at they were all cut out of the bill.

I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that no doubt there is merit in the case; but there are hundreds of cases in the bill that are even more meritorious than this particular case; and if we undertake to increase this amount it would be unjust to all the other cases, unless we went through the bill and picked out every one and agreed to the increase here on the floor of the Senate.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will not be adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah admits that this is a meritorious proposition. His only objection to it is that other meritorious items have not been presented and can not be acted upon. It seems to me that he has a very insufficient reason for defeating this amendment. We have to deal with these propositions as they are presented. This one is presented and the others are not presented.

For the information of Senators who were not here a moment ago when I presented it I will say it is an amendment to increase the salary of the foreman of laborers in the State, War, and Navy Building from $840 to $1,000 a year. A similar employee in the Treasury Building, who has not as much work to do, who has not as much responsibility, has had his salary increased from a thousand dollars a year to $1,200 a year. To approach at least to consistency and uniformity we should raise the other man from $840 to $1,000. As the Senator says, it has been estimated for by the Treasury Department, and it has been requested by the State, War, and Navy custodian. Col. Harts, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who studied this proposition and who is familiar with all the details, appeared before the committee and urged that this increase be made. To say that there are many discrepancies and a great many cases of injustice that have not been remedied is not a sufficient reason for refusing to remedy the only one that is presented. That seems to me to be rather an illogical position for the committee to take. I know myself of a great many other discrepancies in the salaries of employees.

I have in my hand a statement from an employee. The letter perhaps ought not to be put in the RECORD as a whole. He is an employee in the Internal-Revenue Bureau, who calls attention to the fact that men in the Internal-Revenue Service get $1,100 and $1,200 a year for the same services and for the same position for which men in the customs department of the Treasury Department get $3,000 a year. There is no justice in that at all, but because that injustice exists and we are not in a position to deal with it at this moment does not justify me in refusing to consider and to offer and to promote, if possible, a remedy in another case which has come before me.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator this question: Does this man come under the amendment that was adopted yesterday? Would not that result in raising his salary?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would raise it to some extent.

Mr. KENYON. That would bring it up to over $900?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it also brings up $120 the salary of the corresponding man in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is wrong there. The increase of salary under the amendment that was offered yesterday does not affect an employee receiving $1,200. It was limited to a thousand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENYON. How many cases does the Senator's amendment cover?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Only one case. As a specific instance of the sort of lack of discrimination in the adjustment of salaries I wish to read this paragraph:

> As an instance, before the headquarters of the customs office was changed from Port Townsend to Seattle, the clerk in charge of the Seattle customhouse received a salary of $3,000 per annum, while the deputy collector in charge of the internal-revenue office at Seattle received a salary of $1,100 per annum. At the present time the deputy collector in charge of the Tacoma office of the customs, which corresponds to the deputy in charge of the internal-revenue office at Seattle, receives a salary of $3,000 per annum, while the deputy in charge of the internal-revenue office at Seattle receives a salary of only $1,200 per annum, when, as a matter of fact, the liability of the deputy in charge of the internal-revenue office at Seattle is greater than that of the deputy in charge of the Tacoma customs office, and the work is much more arduous and the questions submitted to him for his action are more perplexing. He is also required to give a heavy bond, because of his stamp-account liability, which does not exist with the corresponding position in the customs service.

The Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill admitted that this condition exists generally in the various departments of the Government. That being the case, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations instead of saying that there is no remedy for this situation, if I may be allowed to suggest the manner in which it could be dealt with in a very simple way at the proper time, have had ample time heretofore to request the departments to furnish them with a statement showing the inequality of salary in the department and a proposal and a system for making them more uniform and for adjusting the discrepancies that exist.

I do not know that the committee have done anything of that kind. I suppose they have not, because it has not been presented here; but it seems to me it ought to be done, and with such a report as that and with the explanation of it which would come from the committee the appropriations could be correspondingly adjusted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. It was just such cases as this, Mr. President, and others that we undertook to partially correct yesterday when we agreed to increase the salaries of this class of employees of the Government 10 per cent. Now that the Senate agreed to the advance of 10 per cent to ask an additional sum of $160 I think is virtually a violation of what we agreed on yesterday. Under the amendment that we agreed to yesterday this employee will get $924. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is agreed to, his salary will be increased to $1,000. Then he would get 10 per cent on the thousand, which would make it $1,100, or an increase to this one individual of $260. That is hardly fair to the other laboring men.

Another thing that I desire the Senate to consider is that the man referred to by the Senator in the Treasury Department is drawing $1,200, is not doing the same work that the man who is foreman in the State, War, and Navy Building, and he has been drawing a higher salary for many years past.

I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment, because it will be a favoritism shown to this one man greater than we can possibly extend to any others. The men who are receiving salaries above a thousand, who, we all admit, ought to have an increase, do not even get the 10 per cent. Therefore the discrepancy would be even greater, if this amendment were adopted, between this individual and the many, many others who ought to receive the increase.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does the committee leave the salary of the foreman of laborers in the Treasury Department at $1,200 a year? The increase of the salary of the foreman of the laborers in the State, War, and Navy Building, which this amendment affects, even with the 10 per cent increase the Senator refers to, which would come under the amendment already adopted, could be only $1,100, whereas the similar position in the other department is paid $1,200?

Mr. SMOOT. The designation is the same in the other department, but the labor is not the same. If the Senator will take the hearings in the House when the increase of this officer in the Treasury Department was made, he will find there a statement showing just why it was increased. I admit, Mr. President, that the designation is the same in both cases, but the labors are not the same. That is the reason why there has been a discrepancy in the past between them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The labors are the same, and if there is any difference of salary for the labor it ought to be in favor of the man in charge of the larger building—the State, War, and Navy Department Building—rather than the Treasury Department Building. They occupy the same identical position and have the same responsibility.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is what the testimony shows. I will say to the Senator I am not acquainted with either man. If we change the salaries fixed in the bill, we do not know where it is going to lead to, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in view of the result of the vote on yesterday I had not intended to say anything further upon this bill, but the pending amendment so clearly illustrates our slipshod methods of financial legislation and so emphasizes my insistence that this whole subject of compensation should be practically investigated and reported to the Senate that I may be pardoned for emphasizing it by just a few remarks.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that I have prepared an amendment, which I intend to propose to the bill, providing for an investigation of this very subject by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. THOMAS. I am delighted to know the Senator has done so, and I earnestly hope that his amendment may be incorporated into the bill and may become a law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is already provided for by an amendment in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I have examined the amendment to which the Senator from North Carolina refers, and I do not think it covers this phase of the matter.

Mr. LANE. What is it the Senator from North Carolina says is already in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Authorization for an examination into the workings of the departments by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. LANE. Is that in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is in this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course the assertion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] that the justice of the proposed measure is not at all affected by the fact that others in similar situations should find relief can not be answered directly. It is true that, standing apart and by itself, the needs for the appropriation should not be affected by similar needs of those occupying similar positions; but a moment's reflection will disclose the injustice consequent upon legislating a salary for one single individual of a class and leaving the class where it was before. Every man passed over or slighted by such legislation justly feels a sense of wrong. One of his fellows has been singled out by a special amendment to a great appropriation bill and has been given an increase of compensation, and every other man of that class would act very properly if he should insist that it should be used as a precedent. As a consequence we would be confronted with amendments in individual cases which, however extensive they might be, would still leave exceptions here and there. They would only intensify the sense of injustice and its actual existence. I hope that this amendment and all similar amendments will be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think we are through with the committee amendments, except one which I desire to propose. Some amendments are, however, intended to be proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I desire to introduce an amendment on behalf of the committee. I will say that the committee has eliminated certain words in the amendment which the then Presiding Officer ruled out of order. I am going to insist on the amendment as I shall now offer it, unless the Chair rules the amendment out of order, as the other amendment was ruled out of order. I have changed the language. The original amendment read:

Assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, from March 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $6,666.67.

The then Presiding Officer ruled that that was the creation of a new office and was out of order. That was the amendment which had been framed by the committee. Now I have changed the wording so that the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint an assistant at $5,000. That is in the same class as would be an increase in the number of clerks. It is no more than an increase by the addition of a clerk. I submit the amendment now and ask that it be read. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair on it before I say anything as to its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 13, after the numerals "$12,000," it is proposed to insert the following:

Assistant to the Secretary, at the rate of $5,000 per annum from March 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $6,666.67.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the acting chairman of the committee if this is an amendment similar to the one which was ruled out on a point of order, except that its phraseology has been changed?

Mr. OVERMAN. In the shape the committee first reported the amendment the Assistant Secretary was to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In its present shape the Secretary of the Treasury is allowed to appoint an assistant.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, instead of the President making the appointment the Secretary of the Treasury is to make it?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from North Carolina think that that takes the amendment out of the rule?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it does. It is merely an increase of the force.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I do not believe at all in this proposed official for the Treasury Department, I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair dislikes to come in conflict with a former ruling and a decision of the Senate, but, to be entirely consistent with his former ruling on amendments to this bill, the Chair will state that he does not believe that the provision for a clerk or an assistant is general legislation. The present occupant of the chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the attention of the Chair, before he finally determines the question in his mind, to the fact that this is adding an appropriation to the bill which has not been estimated for in any way.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire is mistaken about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I am mistaken, I withdraw the suggestion. Does the Senator from North Carolina state that it has been estimated for?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that estimate found in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not so understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is found in a special document which was sent down here supplementary to the estimates.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it is not found in the Book of Estimates. I should like to have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator desire the whole document read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to have it read. I want to know just what is in the document, for it is in conflict with my former understanding.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Secretary to read the document which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 26, 1916.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for the favorable action of Congress an estimate of appropriation for salary of an Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the Secretary, with compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum, the same to be available from the date of the approval of the act.

The duties that have been recently imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury through the creation of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the new tariff and internal-revenue legislation, the income tax, and taxes upon inheritances, munitions, etc., and the promotion of increased financial and commercial relations with the several Republics of Central and South America, together with the tremendous growth of the business of the Treasury Department, make it imperative that the Secretary be granted additional assistance, and I can not too strongly urge upon the Congress the granting of this request, inasmuch as the Secretary himself and his three Assistants and their respective staffs are driven to the utmost to discharge the duties of their offices.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS REQUIRED FOR THE SERVICE OF THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1917, BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Salaries, office of Secretary of the Treasury: For Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the Secretary, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, the same to be available from the date of approval of the act, and so much as may be necessary for this purpose is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal years 1917 and 1918.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this estimate proposes a salary for an official, to take effect upon the approval of the act. Then I should like, in that connection, to again have the proposed amendment of the Senator from North Carolina read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Chair to the manifest change in the estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not see how the question of estimates has anything to do with the action of the committee beyond informing the committee that there is need for such an Assistant. The Chair always supposed that was the sole purpose of an estimate and the reason of the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the law the Secretary of the Treasury before a certain date is required to submit estimates for the expenses of all the departments of the Government. The estimates which were submitted under the law were not for this fiscal year, but for the coming fiscal year, beginning June 30, 1917.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not in order to make an appropriation immediately available in some paragraph of this bill, and have we not done that on every appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is done very often, but that does not alter the situation of an estimate that may come in. I think that the estimate made for the coming fiscal year is perfectly proper, and that no point of order could be made against an amendment coming within the terms of that estimate, but it does seem to me that a point of order could be made against an amendment under an estimate for the fiscal year as to which the estimates were required to be made before the 15th day of November, 1915.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, what is the need for an estimate if the amount is reported by a standing committee of the Senate? Such a committee can report an amendment without any estimate from anybody. It seems to me that does away with any contention that that part of the amendment is subject to a point of order. If there had been no estimate whatever the committee could have reported the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I think not.

Mr. BRYAN. An amendment is in order if it has been estimated for or reported by a standing committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. But does not the Senator from Florida think that provision of our rules means that a proposed amendment shall be first submitted and referred to a standing committee and reported back? Does the Senator hold that the Committee on Appropriations can make any amendment in order which it chooses to put on a bill?

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Appropriations Committee can make an appropriation in order without any estimate and that the same privilege is given to all committees reporting appropriation bills—the Post Office Committee, the Committee on Commerce, the Agricultural Committee, the Committee on Military Affairs, and so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not interpret the rule in that way; but I shall not controvert it. I have no disposition to antagonize the ruling of the Chair, for the Chair is always fair; but it seems to me that this proposed amendment is not in harmony with the supplemental estimate sent here by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that it actually antagonizes the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is as follows:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments. (Jefferson's Manual, sec. 35.)

The Chair thinks that the committee had a right to report the amendment. In order to be a little more specific about it, the Chair will say that in the ruling the other day on the question of decreasing a salary, the Chair expressed the opinion that it was within the power of Congress either to increase or decrease a salary. It seems to the Chair that the creation of an office which is not constitutional in its character is not general legislation; it is special legislation; and has to do with the man who happens to secure the place.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, while the point of order was made by me the other day and sustained by the Chair and his decision was approved by the Senate, I shall not take the time of the Senate by appealing from the decision of the Chair today, although I think the decision is wrong.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on behalf of the committee. (Putting the question.) The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brady	Jones	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	Kenyon	Poindexter	Sutherland
Catron	Lane	Pomerene	Thomas
Clapp	McCumber	Ransdell	Thompson
Clark	McLean	Reed	Underwood
Colt	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fall	Nelson	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	Newlands	Shields	Watson
Husting	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Weeks

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HARDING, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. LANE, Mr. MYERS, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. STONE, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. CUMMINS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this amendment having been declared in order, all that any of us can do is to either vote for or against it as the individual Senator is led to feel it to be his duty.

We have heard a great deal about economy. We have been told that we ought not to increase the salary of a single person in the Government service this year, because the condition of the Treasury is such that we ought not even to go to that extent in adding to the burden of the finances of the country; and yet, Mr. President, in the face of that and in the face of our refusal to increase the salary of a man who is getting $600 and who, with his wife and children, is on the verge of starvation, the proposition is now presented that we shall create a new office of Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury at $5,000 a year.

Mr. President, I presume the Secretary of the Treasury is a hard-worked man. He has been put on various commissions which, in my judgment, ought to have been given to some other person, because it is getting to be the fashion that no commission can be appointed that two or three Cabinet officers are not placed on it, and to that extent they are forced to neglect the duties of the position to which they were originally appointed. The Secretary of the Treasury has three assistants. It will be said that they have specific duties to perform. He has a corps of helpers, covering almost every possible activity in that great department, and why he requires an assistant, subject directly to him and to be appointed by him, at this time when we are all cautioned to exercise economy surpasses my comprehension.

The amendment in its present form is worse than when it was originally offered, because that amendment proposed that the President should appoint this $5,000 official subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States, while this amendment proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury shall use his own sweet will and appoint any man whom he chooses to appoint. I do not question the wise action of the Secretary in making the appointment, but, nevertheless, it gives a wide field for the exercise of favoritism and for the appointment of a man who, very likely, the Senate would not agree to confirm if the Senate had a voice in the matter.

If, however, the majority of this body feel that they are justified in refusing to increase the salary of a single man or woman in the public service because of the exigencies of the fiscal situation, and then they feel that it is good legislation or wise economy to appoint this high-salaried official, I certainly will bow to the decision of the Senate, and try to feel that the action on the part of this body was wise. I want the privilege of voting against the proposition, and that is all that I can ask under the circumstances.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the head of this great department has sent to the Senate a special letter in which he says that the Congress has imposed upon him so many additional duties that it is impossible for him to perform the duties of his office with his present force. If that is true, it is the duty of the Senate, without regard to any partisan considerations, to give the assistance required. I desire to read to the Senate what the Secretary of the Treasury has said about the necessity for this assistant. I take it for granted he tells the truth about it. He knows whether he can perform the duties that Congress has placed upon him. We have this message from him. Listen to what he says:

> The duties that have been recently imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury through the creation of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the new tariff and internal-revenue legislation, the income tax, and taxes upon inheritances, munitions, etc., and the promotion of increased financial and commercial relations with the several Republics of Central and South America, together with the tremendous growth of the business of the Treasury Department, make it imperative that the Secretary be granted additional assistance, and I can not too strongly urge upon the Congress the granting of this request, inasmuch as the Secretary himself and his three assistants and their respective staffs are driven to the utmost to discharge the duties of their offices.

In addition to that, he said before the committee:

> Not only has the work of the Treasury Department increased tremendously in the last three years, but new duties have been imposed upon the Secretary which are very exacting. For instance, take the Federal reserve act. Under that law the Secretary of the Treasury is chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, being a member of the board ex officio. While the Secretary can not attend every meeting of the board, he must attend meetings frequently, and I do attend just as often as I can. Sometimes those meetings require two hours, and sometimes more, out of the day.
> In addition to that, the Federal farm-loan act created the Federal Farm Loan Board as a new bureau in the Treasury Department, which, of course, must be administered under the direction of the Secretary. This law also makes the Secretary of the Treasury a member, ex officio, and chairman of the Farm Loan Board.
> That work requires a great deal of time and patience, and as time goes on the Secretary of the Treasury will be obliged to give a great deal of attention to those two organizations. It is literally impossible for me to keep up with all of the work which the Secretary has to do with the present assistance I have. I must have, in order to be fully effective in the work, an assistant who is at my hand to take up the most important parts of the work. For instance, there are a great many matters relating to official correspondence for which I should have a man sitting next to me, intimately familiar with the matters and having full knowledge of all that is going on in the Secretary's office, so that he may relieve the Secretary of a lot of the detail work which he now has to try to do himself. I think that any Secretary of the Treasury will be more effective in the future if he can devote his time and his abilities to the larger affairs of the department. I can not get that relief through any of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, because each of them, under the organization of the department, has a very large division of the bureaus under him, and he has got to administer those particular bureaus.

And so on, Mr. President.

Now, here is the head of this great department saying that it is imperative to have this help. Every Senator knows that we have doubled and quadrupled the duties of the Treasury Department during the last few years. The present Secretary has three or four times as much to do as any Secretary of the Treasury ever had before. When the head of a great department comes down and says he needs some relief, I think we ought to give it to him, and I ask that it be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. He does not seem to be present, and I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent for the day on account of illness, and I am paired with him for the day. Therefore I withhold my vote on this amendment. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and in his absence withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I ask whether the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who, I think, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to announce that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will allow my vote to stand.

I also desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is at home sick. I wish that announcement to stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Shields
Bankhead	Kern	Phelan	Smith, Md.
Bryan	La Follette	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Clapp	Lane	Ransdell	Stone
Fletcher	Lewis	Reed	Thompson
Hughes	McLean	Robinson	Tillman
Husting	Myers	Shafroth	Underwood
James	Oliver	Sheppard	Walsh

NAYS—20.

Borah	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brandegee	Harding	Nelson	Sterling
Clark	Kenyon	Norris	Sutherland
Dillingham	Lippitt	Poindexter	Townsend
Gallinger	McCumber	Sherman	Weeks

NOT VOTING—44.

Beckham	Fall	Lee, Md.	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Fernald	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	Goff	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Catron	Gore	Newlands	Swanson
Chamberlain	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Thomas
Chilton	Hitchcock	Owen	Vardaman
Colt	Hollis	Page	Wadsworth
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Warren
Cummins	Jones	Pittman	Watson
Curtis	Kirby	Saulsbury	Williams
du Pont	Lea, Tenn.	Simmons	Works

So Mr. OVERMAN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have been discussing here the question of the coordination of these salaries, and the adjustment of these salaries, and the duplication of work. I did have here one day a pile of books that high lying on my desk that the Bureau of Efficiency reported were duplications. I do not know whether they were or not; but that was the report they made to me. Now, I am going to introduce an amendment which, if adopted, will save this country $30,000,000, so I am informed. I want the Senate to consider what they are doing, and I ask everybody to listen to the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. That is a very rash act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, it will save $30,000,000, anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is carried out.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it is carried out properly and reported to Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 151, at the end of the bill, after line 20, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. The President is hereby authorized, during the vacation of the Congress, to take action looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government; and he is hereby empowered to transfer and, if deemed desirable, to consolidate bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, in order that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated. A report shall be made to the Congress on the first day of the next session thereof of any action taken under the provsions of this section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee exactly how this saving of $30,000,000 is to be brought about?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it will be brought about by the saving in printing, and in the saving through the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee to the next Congress as to the employees that can be dispensed with and the bureaus that can be abolished and incorporated with other bureaus. There is no question in the world in my mind that the next Congress will be able to save that much money to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, in all good faith, if he has ever known of an instance where an attempt of this kind has been made when a single clerk was dismissed?

Mr. OVERMAN. I never have known it to be done, but it seems to me it ought to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator believe that it will be done?

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course; under the law the Civil Service Commission has to give notice and have a hearing before dismissing any clerk. As the Senator from New Hampshire says and intimates, I never have known one to be dismissed.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; neither have I.

Mr. OVERMAN. But it is worth a trial to report to this Congress whether it can be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will amuse us for a few minutes, and it may amuse the country for a little while. More drastic action than that will have to be taken before this great saving, or any considerable part of it, will be made. There is never an instance where the force is reduced in one department or one division that those very men and women are not transferred to some other department or division, and the work goes merrily on, and the expenditure goes merrily on, and no saving whatever is accomplished.

Mr. OVERMAN. I admit that, but now I want to try to do that very thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to the trial being made; but I want to enter the realm of prophecy and say that instead of $30,000,000 the saving will come a good deal nearer 30 cents. With that I will content myself, and let other Senators discuss the matter if they see proper to do so.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. LANE. If more drastic and proper action could be taken to accomplish this saving, will the Senator kindly suggest it? He would like to do something which would remedy the evil, I assume.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I want very much to reduce the expenses of the Government, because I am an economist.

Mr. LANE. Yes; but what method does the Senator recommend?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know what the method would be, but I think this method has been worked out very hastily, and that it will accomplish nothing practical.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that I am a little moderate in view of the statement that was made by the leader on his side of the Chamber some few years ago that $300,000,000 ought to be saved?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but the leader on this side of the Chamber meant, as I happen to know, that if the affairs of the Government were placed in the hands of a business man or a business corporation with a free hand that saving could be made. Under our system, however, it can not be made, and never will be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator will also agree with me—because I have often heard his voice upon the floor of the Senate to that effect—that there are some bureaus of this Government that might be changed and consolidated with others.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my judgment; but I do not believe it will be done. That is the trouble.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it will be done or not, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I reach my conclusions from a long observation—not much experience, but observation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not worth another trial?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to it. I simply wanted to sound a note of warning—that is all—that the Senator's $30,000,000 saving is a dream, and nothing else. It is nothing else but just a dream.

Mr. HUGHES. More like a nightmare, would the Senator say?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, we might call it a nightmare.

Mr. NORRIS. A nightmare is a dream.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or we might use another phrase which has become somewhat classic, but which I will not use. Nothing will come of it; that is all.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if this very line of work is not now being undertaken by the Efficiency Board, from which Congress expects a report at the opening of the next session?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is no harm in the President acting together with the Efficiency Board in looking into this matter and sending a message and report to Congress. I believe the Efficiency Board are doing work along this line. I have agreed with everything they have done, and have helped them to get appropriations to do it; but I think there are some things that the President can do that the Efficiency Board can not do, and I should like to have his active cooperation.

Mr. OLIVER. It rather seems to me that this resolution would duplicate work that is now being done by the Efficiency Board, and it gives very, very broad powers. It gives power during the recess of Congress to upset a great deal of work that has been done by the Congress. I do not want to vote against anything that looks toward economy; but I would suggest that a good deal of consideration ought to be given before such broad powers are conferred as are conferred by this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he change his amendment by adding the word "regular" before the word "session."

Mr. OVERMAN. How would it do to say "during the recess"? I think that is better—"The President is hereby authorized, during the recess," in stead of "vacation."

Mr. NORRIS. There may be a recess for only 10 or 12 days.

Mr. OVERMAN. "The regular session," then.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, "the regular session."

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that.

Mr. SMOOT. Even then, Mr. President, I think that if we have an extra session of Congress it would be impossible to make the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, I am willing to say, "and report on the first Monday of December next."

Mr. NORRIS. That would be the regular session.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have adopted the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska and also the Senator from Utah, Mr. President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. This amendment involves no extra outlay of money, does it?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; not a dollar.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It does not create any offices?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not an office.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If it does no good, it will do no harm, then.

Mr. OVERMAN. It authorizes the President and the Efficiency Board to see if anything can be done. Why, Mr. President, it is known that we can not, in the short time we have, go into this subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope Senators will understand that I am not opposing it, but I have often been impressed before by the helplessness confessed by the Senate when anything of this character is proposed. The mention of such matters is always accompanied with the statement that we can not make the bad condition any better—sovereign in power, yet helpless to correct or improve an admitted inaccuracy or error. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that I do not see any special good to come from it; but whatever may come will doubtless be good. At any rate, let us hope so. I still hope that the time may come some day when the Senate will have the time to do itself that which is best for the American people and not depend upon somebody else to do it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the acting chairman of the committee a question about this amendment. I have simply heard it read, but, as I caught it, it authorizes the President to abolish any bureau of the Government he sees fit to abolish.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And then he can reorganize it in any way he sees fit.

Mr. OVERMAN. And report to Congress when it is done.

Mr. JONES. In other words, under this amendment the President can abolish all the bureaus of the various departments of the Government and reorganize them, if he sees fit, in the interest of economy.

Mr. OVERMAN. And report to Congress; yes.

Mr. JONES. That will simply bring about a condition of inefficiency and disorganization that nobody can measure, and we will have to have a provision for an assistant to the President at the next session—two or three of them, in fact.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this amendment should not be adopted on the theory that it relates to trivial matters or is of slight importance. It is very far-reaching in its significance, and I believe it should be adopted, because it is calculated to result in a better administration of the departments of the Government and in a saving of many million dollars annually to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, we hear much said in the Senate about the subject of economy. My observation is that every legislative officer campaigns on a platform favoring economy, and that no legislative officer consistently pursues or carries out that platform. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate reported the legislative, executive, and judicial bill this year with practically no increases. After giving very careful consideration to the subject it was decided that a bona fide attempt should be made to put into effect the principles of economy in the appropriation of public funds. The effort is threatened with failure.

I have reached the conclusion that if any reform worth while is ever consummated in these matters, if the tide of expenditures which is flowing high, and which within a few years will reach the $2,000,000,000 per annum mark is ever stemmed, it must be done upon a comprehensive scale, having in view conditions existing in all the various departments of the Government. If it is accomplished at all, it must be done in a broad and general way. Nothing of a substantial nature is accomplished by reducing a salary here and there, for such results are merely temporary and are not consequential.

It is undoubtedly true that in almost every department of the Government systems of accounting prevail which belong to generations that are past. I sincerely doubt whether the system of accounting that prevails in any of the departments could meet the approval of any expert accountant. There is almost unlimited duplication done in the work of these various departments.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] who has seen fit to ridicule this amendment by prophesying that if agreed to it will accomplish naught, has, during the course of the debate on this bill, illustrated this duplication by showing that in one department, approximately, 40 individuals have to pass upon a single item or account. There is no one who will justify or even excuse that practice. The Senator from New Hampshire is very experienced in legislative matters, and it may be that he is right in asserting that there is no possibility of practicing economy—a doctrine which we all preach when it applies to some appropriations in which our constituents are not particularly interested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has carefully examined the amendment that is proposed?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not examined the amendment with great care. It was submitted to me only a few moments ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he thinks we ought to place in the hands of the President the power to transfer, and, if deemed desirable, to consolidate bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, and then report to Congress when he has done it? That is all he can report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that every bureau and division and department of the Government may be torn to pieces by this action.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator's construction of the amendment is correct; and I stated in the beginning of my remarks that we ought not to adopt this amendment on the theory that it is not far-reaching.

We are investigating these various subjects now through what is known as the Bureau of Efficiency; and I think the Senator from New Hampshire will bear witness to the fact that, in so far as its work has come to the attention of the Appropriations Committee, it has proven very efficient, very fearless, and very courageous.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that bureau intends to do good work and is doing good work, but I will feel better convinced of that after we have gotten rid of some of the activities of the Government that they think are unnecessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think what has already occurred and is occurring in the Post Office Department is an illustration of the value of this work, and I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who in my judgment knows more about the details of the administrative affairs of the Government than any other man connected with it, will bear witness to that fact. If anything is ever to be accomplished somebody must be given power to act when definite information is obtained, else we will be always dealing with the matter in piecemeal and accomplishing little or nothing. If it is proposed to bring about these results by dealing here and there with a single bureau or even a single department, Congress will be besieged by those who have personal interest in the matter and the result will be that very little will be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is what troubles me, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. These departments have been established by legislation and the bureaus and divisions have been organized wisely as we have supposed, and yet we put into the hands of the President of the United States, taking it absolutely out of the hands of Congress, the power to disrupt the entire organization——

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to dismiss as many men as he pleases, to do what he pleases, and then report to Congress that he has done it. That is about the purport of this amendment as I read it. It may be that some good will come of it. I do not anticipate that much good will come from it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion just made by the Senator from New Hampshire and I repeat the statement I made in the beginning, that the amendment is far-reaching, but I am arguing now that if a better system of administration and a more economical system of administration is ever put into effect it must be done in this way or in some similar way. Congress can not deal with all these matters in their infinite detail. Congress does not have time to do it.

This amendment reposes it in the head of the Nation, who has just as much interest in the welfare of the people of this country and in the proper administration of the Government certainly as any other man in it, to take action when in his opinion economy and efficiency will be accomplished. The fact that a report must be made to Congress will, in the last analysis, give Congress the power and the opportunity of passing on the changes that are made in detail, and that is perhaps the only way it ever will be brought to Congress, unless upon recommendations made by heads of departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator, I think, is wrong there. The amendment gives the President the power to do this thing. It authorizes him to do it and to report to Congress that he has done it. What can we do?

Mr. ROBINSON. Congress can repeal it if it is objectionable. The Senator laughs. I hope he will find amusement in this subject, because the proceedings of the Senate during the last week have certainly not awakened much interest or afforded great pleasure to anyone. We waste a great deal of our time in discussing matters that are not before the Senate and not important, but this is of real importance.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the President under this is authorized to reorganize, practically to disrupt, the entire system pertaining to our executive departments, and if we are going to repeal it we simply have to reenact the laws, and that we would not do.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator proceeds upon the theory that the President of the United States wants to disrupt the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I am not making any criticisms.

Mr. ROBINSON. He has power to do that in other ways now, if he be that kind of officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. My suggestion would be, if this should be inquired into, I do not care who does it—the President if you choose, although I think he has an abundance of duties on his hands—but if he chooses to do it, let him report to Congress recommendations, and then we, acting upon those recommendations, could accomplish this reform. I think that would be the orderly way to do it. That is my opinion.

Mr. ROBINSON. The difficulty about that is, as I have been attempting to show, if we proceed in that way, we shall continue just as we have been proceeding for years. We will talk and talk and do nothing. The Efficiency Board is making these investigations, and, as the Senator from New Hampshire has admitted, is doing its work thoroughly, honestly, and fearlessly, and now, Senators, is the time to take a progressive step forward, if you are ever going to do it.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say to the Senator, in the first place, this authority we are giving the President in the ordinary course can not be executed or consummated without a great deal of work and consequently a great deal of time. In the ordinary course it will be impossible for him to bring about these changes before the opening of the next regular session of Congress.

I suggest, therefore, to the Senator that it would be better to confine the amendment to an authorization to the President to make investigations as to what changes are necessary, and that at the opening of the next session of Congress to submit a schedule of what bureaus may be abolished or what places may be abolished and what changes may be made. For my part I can not see my way clear to confer the power of action upon him.

Mr. ROBINSON. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it is very rare indeed, if ever, that Congress abolishes a bureau or abolishes an office. The political influences which are constantly brought to bear to perpetuate offices when once created make it a practical impossibility to accomplish the end sought in that way. We create offices, we create bureaus, we are constantly legislating into existence new instrumentalities of government, and they have multiplied until they are almost innumerable. But we rarely abolish an office. What can be the objection of Senators to taking a positive and aggressive step toward the abolishment of those that are no longer needed or the consolidation of those that are duplicating work unnecessarily, thus bringing about the economic and efficient administration of public affairs?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator suggests, I think very correctly, that Congress has not time to look into these details and do what the Senator thinks ought to be done. Is not that just as true respecting the President? This work would have to be done through some additional instrumentality provided either by Congress or by the President. Neither of them would do it personally. Why is it that Congress can not legislate directly upon that question and provide some means by which conditions can be changed?

I agree with the Senator thoroughly that it does need change. The business of this country is being very badly done, extravagantly done, and I would cooperate with him and other Senators to bring about a better condition of things. The question in my mind is whether you are going to help the matter by attempting to turn over to the President of the United States a duty that belongs to us.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator has said that he recognizes the necessity for a reform in the matter which this amendment covers. The condition is not a new one. It has existed for a long time. It existed prior to the date when the distinguished Senator from California first graced this body with his presence. We have all known for many years that this Government is inefficiently organized, and yet we have done little to bring about substantial reform. The reason for this is apparent. Congress is a political body. The abolition of a bureau of the Government must be accomplished in spite of great political influences or a consolidation of bureaus for that matter. We might do that in one particular, but if Congress undertook the work of revising the conditions existing in all the departments it would not have time for the other work committed to its charge. The President of the United States could not make the investigation which will be necessary before this amendment is carried into effect, but the Board of Efficiency which Congress has created, and which Congress is constantly paying to make investigations and reports and recommendations, can do the work. If the President finds that their recommendations are correct he can put them into effect and then put the burden on those who want to take a step backward rather than upon those who want to take a step forward. The Senator from California, of course, knows—everyone here knows—that the President can not personally make such investigation; but I repeat we have been dealing with this subject, some of us, for a quarter of a century, and yet we make no progress because of the infinite variety of details which are involved in the work contemplated. We shall make no great progress until we repose in some authority the power to do what everybody admits ought to be done.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. WORKS addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I want the Senator to understand that I am quite in sympathy with the view he has presented on this subject. I think the political party, if there is one, or if one can be organized, that will to some extent perfect the business side of the Government will render the greatest possible service to the people of the country; but I doubt very much whether the Senator is going in the right direction to accomplish that result. It certainly is a terrible arraignment of the Congress of the United States that it can not be done through this body. If we are so controlled by politics that these bureaus can not be abolished or the business of the Government reformed, this country is in a pretty bad situation; if we have to turn over to the President of the United States, the executive department of the Government, the duty that belongs to us, because we are so controlled by politics that we are not able or willing to do it, it is a sad commentary on the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from California argues in a circle, if I may be permitted to so characterize his statement. He admits the necessity for legislation. He admitted in his previous statement that Congress can not make the necessary investigations, and he supported that statement with the declaration that neither can the President do it. Therefore, he would have you reach the conclusion that there is no remedy.

Mr. WORKS. No, Mr. President, the Senator is not quoting me correctly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not quoting the Senator at all. I am taking the liberty of placing my construction upon what he said.

Mr. WORKS. Very well; then the Senator has placed a wrong construction upon what I said. What I meant to say, if I did not say it, was that Congress can not do those things directly, but it may provide means by which somebody else, some commission or organization created for that purpose, can do this detailed work. That is precisely true of the President as well; but certainly the Congress of the United States ought to be able to provide some means by which a large proportion of these bureaus could be abolished, because I think they should be, and have the business done on a business basis and in a business way. I do not see any reason why the Government can not do business in a business way as well as any other organization.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit an answer to that, I do not mean any reflection on Congress. I recognize the fact that legislative duties in the Congress of the United States have become very arduous. It is preposterous to talk about the United States Senate as now constituted, or as it ever will be constituted, doing the detail work which is necessary to make the reform contemplated in this amendment. We have done the best thing possible under the circumstances, the best thing which has been suggested. We have created a bureau or department, if you want to call it that, to make the investigations. We have tried it out, and we are satisfied, those of us who have gone somewhat into the details of its work, that it is doing conscientious and fearless work, and we are willing now to go forward and do something substantial and general.

You need not be afraid that the Government is going to be disrupted by the abolishment of bureaus and the consolidation of bureaus. Has the Government of the United States become so bureaucratic that its existence depends on the continuance of any bureau? Nothing that the President of the United States would approve, or any executive charged with responsibility to the people of this Nation, would accomplish any serious interruption in the administration of public affairs. The President more than any other one man is interested in the success of the administration of which he is the head. No function of government now in operation will be suspended. Everything that is being done will be continued. The waste arising from the duplication of work will be stopped. The President can order reforms to be put into operation when admitted deficiencies are disclosed. It is not purely a legislative duty that is intrusted to him; it is a practical work to carry forward the effect of the investigation which Congress has authorized and caused to be made. If we were to act on every report of the Bureau of Efficiency, we would probably debate one recommendation to abolish a single unnecessary bureau from the first Monday in December until the 4th of March.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in sympathy with the object sought to be accomplished by this amendment. Personally, I am not afraid of its adoption as it is now; but I want to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, and also to the Senator from North Carolina, would it not be advisable to provide in the amendment that these consolidations should be made by the President upon the recommendation of the Board of Efficiency? We have this board already established, and I understand that they are doing real good work. We are taking another step here that will give the President the authority, under the terms of the amendment, to disregard the recommendations of the board. If the report of the board is satisfactory, why not let the President and the board act together jointly? The President must have somebody to do this work, and let it be done through the instrumentality of that board.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the way provided.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the President have authority to carry out the recommendations of the board.

Mr. ROBINSON. Speaking for myself only, and of course I would not assume to speak for anybody else, I have no objection whatever that action should be taken only upon the recommendation of the Board of Efficiency or when recommended by the Board of Efficiency. But the suggestion made by the Senator from North Carolina, I think, answers the argument as to the necessity of having such an amendment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator whether the Efficiency Board has recommended the abolition of any of the existing bureaus?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. WORKS. How long has that Efficiency Board been in existence?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know the exact date of its creation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly all the heads of departments of the Government object to the Bureau of Efficiency making an investigation. The Post Office Department, however, has welcomed the investigation. The Post Office Department is the only department in the Government that has allowed, or at least has welcomed and invited, the Efficiency Bureau to make an examination of the detailed plans of the workings of the department with a view of recommending changes that will insure efficiency and save money. Through the recommendation of the Efficiency Board there has been saved to the Government of the United States hundreds of thousands of dollars in the Post Office Department here in Washington alone.

The Postmaster General at the present time is trying to run the post office in the city of Washington on business principles. He is willing to accept recommendations from this board. He puts the findings of the bureau into force by coming to the Appropriation Committees of Congress and asking that the changes recommended be made.

But I want to say to the Senator that that is the one department of our Government that so far has availed itself of the recommendations made by the Bureau of Efficiency.

I call attention of the Senator to page 31 of this bill, and there he will find amendments offered to the bill, agreed to by the Senate, authorizing the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate the methods of examining and auditing claims against the United States and accounts of disbursing officers, with recommendations, and so forth. That is one. Then to investigate the work of the Subtreasuries, and so forth. Then, again, to investigate the methods of transacting the public business in the Civil Service Commission and report to the Senate at the next regular session of Congress. Then to ascertain the rates of pay of employees and commercial statistics in different parts of the United States, and so forth.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator has not answered my question, whether this board has recommended the abolition of any bureaus.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that the board has no authority to recommend the abolishment of bureaus. This amendment is designed to give in effect that power to the board. The powers of this board are defined by law.

The Senator from California asked when this board was created and whether it has recommended the abolishment of any bureau. As suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

CLAPP], if this board volunteered without express authorization of Congress a recommendation that a bureau which Congress had created be abolished, Congress would resent it and abolish the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator is right about that. So far as my own experience and observation go, we have been creating new bureaus and new divisions ever since I have been in the Senate, and I have no recollection of any of them ever having been abolished.

Mr. ROBINSON. In reply to the question the Senator asked a moment ago, I will state that the clerk of the committee has called my attention to the fact that this bureau was created by act approved February 28, 1916. But it had been in effect in existence for some time prior to that, having operated at first in the Civil Service Commission. When it began to do real work the Civil Service Commission objected. Congress then expressly authorized the board and defined its duties in the act that I have mentioned, which was a general appropriation act. The bureau has labored under great difficulties ever since its creation, but in spite of that fact it has accomplished a great work.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say further for information along this line that under the last administration, as the Senator will remember, we appointed a Board of Efficiency and gave them $10,000 apiece. Whether they ever made a report to Congress I do not know. Nothing has been done under it.

Mr. ROBINSON. They made a report.

Mr. OVERMAN. They made a report but never did a thing. Here we had a board, paying the members $10,000 apiece. What came out of it? Absolutely nothing. Then, we got this man appointed, and he has done some things.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). The Chair would like to inquire who has the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have the floor, and I shall take pleasure in surrendering it in just a moment. I have consumed more time than I intended.

Mr. WORKS. I want to say that my question was not put with a view of criticizing the board, because I know nothing about its work. If the Efficiency Board has no authority to recommend the abolition of bureaus, I think it ought to have it, and either the President of the United States or somebody else should be given the authority to abolish a bureau on the mere recommendation of the board. I am quite in sympathy with that idea myself, but it may be that this amendment goes a little too far and turns over everything to the President of the United States and nobody else.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from California that if Congress will act on the recommendations that have already been made by the Bureau of Efficiency we will cut out of every appropriation bill many hundreds of thousands of dollars. But every time we try to cut out Congress will not do it; there is opposition to it; and we can hardly abolish an office in the Government when we know it is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. You can hardly abolish an office, and you know it, unless you create two new offices.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is about correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. It never has been done, and it will not be done.

Now, I want to conclude what I have to say with the simple suggestion that while I have not had an opportunity of studying this amendment for any great period, I am convinced that it will be practical; that it will accomplish results; and that it will save Congress a great deal of time and a great deal of labor. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not agree with the Senator from Arkansas in regard to the general incompetency of Congress. I am bound to think it does its work fairly well. Nor do I agree with his general sweeping denunciation of the Government. I think the Government of the United States is conducted about as well as any government in the world, and comparing the magnitude of its operations it is conducting it as cheaply as any government in the world. But that is neither here nor there.

The Senator from Arkansas thinks Congress should have the virtue to adopt this amendment, and not the virtue to apply a remedy in a particular instance, I take it. Does the Senator from Arkansas think we ought to give the President or any other person or any other commission the power to abolish the Children's Bureau? We discussed the question of the appropriation that ought to be made for the maintenance of the Children's Bureau here for three days or more. Having determined that matter, we instantly say to the President, "You can abolish the Children's Bureau if you desire, or you can consolidate it with the Census Bureau, or with a bureau in the Department of Commerce, or with the Bureau of Fisheries, or any other bureau of the Government."

I am not suggesting that I think the President would do that, but I am saying it is cowardly for Congress to abdicate its duty in that regard and transfer its obligation to anybody. It is purely a legislative function and not an Executive function.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows that the President would not do anything revolutionary. Congress does not want to go on with that sort of work. It will have its opportunity to act when the appropriation bill comes before it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I recognize that we could overturn anything the President might do, but that is no answer to my suggestion that having with infinite pains created certain instrumentalities with which to carry on the Government, we are then saying to some other person, if you do not believe that these instrumentalities are efficient you may abolish them. It is not intended, I take it from what I have heard, to give the President the power to abolish the Civil Service Commission and to remove all the employees of the Government from the rules of the law requiring admission upon competitive examination. That may be wise or unwise. We have thought it to be wise to require an examination upon merit. I am not going to discuss the soundness of the general system. I am saying that it is a reprehensible thing to do to try to transfer the authority to abolish the commission to somebody else.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under this amendment he could not abolish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair begs to inquire again who has the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have the floor, and I should like to resume and conclude. The Senator from Iowa rose to ask me a question, but made a speech in criticism of the remarks I made before he took the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not intend to enter into the time of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. My time is unlimited, so that is not an important consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I wanted to know is what is the meaning of "scientific coordination"? If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] had used the term, I would have no difficulty in interpreting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg the Chair's pardon. I took the floor in my own right and in my own time, I supposed. I will wait until I can do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa took the floor and stated that he desired to ask me a question. He prefaced his question by the remark that he would not go to the extent I had in making a general attack upon the efficiency or the assertion of the inefficiency of Congress. I want to reply to that for just a moment.

I had said during the course of my remarks that this branch of Congress wastes a great deal of time in the discussion of subjects that are not relevant, and I make no apology for that. The failure of the United States Senate to legislate, the pendency of many important questions before the Congress, the frittering away of time in the United States Senate by the delivery of speeches which nobody wants to hear and which no one reads, have discredited the Senate. I make no apology for saying that I regard the United States Senate as an inefficient body. I am willing to take my share of the criticism and censure that is implied by that statement.

If Senators who apparently have been asleep during the course of the last month could hear the murmurings of the people of the United States in complaint against the dilatory practices which prevail here, they would wake from their slumber and take the responsibility of passing upon the important measures which have already been too long deferred. I said that if we waited for the Senate of the United States to pass upon the question as to whether a bureau should be abolished or whether an office should be abolished we would make little or no progress, either concerning the subject matter of this amendment or with general legislation, and I maintain that is true. The only way to accomplish a comprehensive reform is by passing legislation necessary to ascertain what ought to be done and then authorize the Executive to do it. Put the burden of reversing action on the influences which oppose reform.

I have already too long detained the Senate. It is not often that I impose my views upon this body. I realize the many limitations upon my own knowledge. I would not be competent to do the work which is contemplated in this amendment and carry on my other legislative duties. It must be done by some one besides Senators and Representatives, and I submit that it is fair to repose the great authority in the Executive of the Nation. If that is done, I believe that substantial reforms will be accomplished in spite of the melancholy forebodings of the distinguished sage, the Senator from New Hampshire, who has had so much experience in these matters that he does not contemplate an attempt to accomplish anything in this behalf with any degree of hope or encouragement.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, in the shape in which this amendment is drawn I think it confers powers upon the President that Congress should hesitate long before conferring. A wide and far-reaching amendment like this ought not to be sprung suddenly upon the Senate without warning; and feeling, as I do, that it is clearly obnoxious to the rules of the Senate I make the point of order against it that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is made that the proposed amendment is obnoxious to the rule which prohibits general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I regret that there is a Member of the Senate who would make a point of order against an amendment like this, which is proposed to effect a great reform, when it was admitted, even on the other side of the Chamber by a former leader of this body that we are spending $300,000,000 more annually in the conduct of the affairs of the Government than we ought to spend. I say that this proposed amendment will save $30,000,000, and I am satisfied it will. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he still insists upon his point of order?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the authority which is proposed to be conferred upon the President can not be executed before the opening of the next session of Congress——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania insists upon his point of order, I am bound to admit the amendment is subject to the point of order. Does the Senator still insist upon his point of order?

Mr. OLIVER. I do, unless the framer of the amendment will so construct it as to limit it to investigation and report.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator insists on his point of order, I am bound to admit it, and I will do the best I can. I wanted some power somewhere to accomplish this object. We have had a board which has spent thousands of dollars and which has never accomplished anything. For 30 years we have been trying to do something and have not been able to do it. The best thing I can do now is to try to get a report, and then let us see if Congress will act; but they will not act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order, the Chair understands, is not insisted upon provided the Senator from North Carolina will change the form of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from California still insists on the amendment, I shall offer another amendment, but I do not think it will accomplish what is desired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will say that I am in entire sympathy with the reform which is sought for by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw the point of order. He knows that there can not be anything revolutionary done without a report to Congress. I ask him now, in the interest of economy, to withdraw the point of order. We shall be in session——

Mr. OLIVER. I will not confer upon the President of the United States, or upon anyone else, the power to do away with any bureau or to reconstruct any of the executive departments, as they have been established year after year and term after term by Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator insists on his point of order I will offer the following amendment:

The President is hereby authorized during the recess of the Congress to take action looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government, and he is hereby requested to report upon the question of transfer and consolidation of bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, in order that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated, and report with recommendations; and the report and recommendations shall be made to Congress on the first day of the regular session thereof, the first Monday in December, 1917.

Mr. OLIVER. I am in entire sympathy with that amendment, and I shall make no point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw the point of order to the amendment as modified?

Mr. OLIVER. To the amendment as modified I shall make no point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to see the amendment.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was simply going to suggest to the acting chairman of the committee that the point of order had not been ruled on.

Mr. OVERMAN. Everybody knows, Mr. President, that the proposed amendment is out of order, if any Senator objects to it, because it is general legislation.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. Does the Senator think it is quite in keeping to virtually direct the President to report at a time certain to Congress on his action?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is proper.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me it would be better to leave out the time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that we appeal to the Senate at this time to stand by the Committee on Appropriations in carrying out the recommendations next year of the Bureau of Efficiency. I say now that the Bureau of Efficiency will make more recommendations to Congress by the 1st day of December, 1917, than Congress will carry out. If we give the bureau authority to enter all of the departments of the Government for an investigation of this very question, and if we carry out the recommendations in their reports, we shall not have to authorize the President or anyone else to do anything other than that which the bureau recommends, and we shall save millions of dollars to the Government of the United States in doing it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Utah if the Board of Efficiency have made reports?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; they have made a number of reports, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Have this bureau recommended the coordination of other bureaus, and have they stated that some of this work is being duplicated; and if so, to what extent?

Mr. SMOOT. They have reported duplications of work, and not only duplications of work, I will say to the Senator, but they have reported the proper system of accounting that should be employed. They report what is absolutely necessary to put the Government departments upon a business basis. As I have stated before, about the only department of the Government which has adopted any of the reports made by the Efficiency Bureau is the Post Office Department in the city of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, right there——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah has paid a tribute to the Postmaster General two or three times during this session. Will the Senator specifically state how those savings were accomplished in the Post Office Department?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not state them in full, but——

Mr. GALLINGER. They have not dismissed any clerks, have they?

Mr. SMOOT. They have decreased the number of clerks by over 100 in the last three years, and I am only speaking of the Post Office Department in the city of Washington. Where deaths or vacancies have occurred they have not always been filled. No new clerks have been employed because of a vacancy occurring, but the Postmaster General has rearranged the work of the department so that to-day we find that the increased amount of work which has come to the department has been taken care of; and, if testimony amounts to anything, it has been taken care of in a better way than it has been in the past.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that the Postmaster General gives the Efficiency Bureau credit for bringing that improvement about. It is true that he has been in sympathy with the bureau's work. If he had not been, there would have been no change in the department, as there has been no change in most of the other departments.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Utah another question. I think the Senator will remember that a year or so ago I made a suggestion that there ought to be a coordination of some of the bureaus of the departments made, because I had discovered that much of the work was being duplicated. I know that there have been reports made by the Agricultural Department which really belong to the Census Bureau. Duplication of work of that kind, of course, ought to be eliminated. If the Efficiency Bureau has made reports, why have not those reports been printed, so that Members of the Senate could make use of them?

Mr. SMOOT. Those reports have been printed, I will say to the Senator. Not only that, but I do not believe there has been an appropriation bill passed within the last year which has conformed to the recommendations in those reports. The bureau has, however, only been in operation since the 28th of February, 1916, less than one year; but their reports have been printed. I have a number of reports from the Bureau of Efficiency that I have looked over carefully.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator that the Bureau of Efficiency ought to be given time to do this work, and then it will be for the Senate either to carry out their recommendations or to reject them.

I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, which, if adopted, would impose this great burden upon the President of the United States. So long as we have a bureau appointed to make investigations regarding this matter, I think we can wait until that bureau has done its work.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. One trouble with the Bureau of Efficiency is that their presence in the departments is sometimes resented. For instance, Mr. Brown, Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, has experienced a great deal of trouble on account of the resentment upon the part of Cabinet officers that he should be given power over them. I do not ask that power be given to any subordinate official over the Cabinet officers, but I am asking now that the President investigate and suggest a plan to Congress by which the desired reform can be brought about, and I do not think anybody ought to object to that.

Mr. JONES and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator from Washington, who, I think, rose first.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to ask a question in order that I may get the matter clear. I understood the Senator a moment ago to say that the good results accomplished through the Efficiency Board had been accomplished in the Post Office Department here?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in the city of Washington.

Mr. JONES. I wanted to find out where this improvement was made, whether in the work of the department generally or in the city post office here in Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. In the Post Office Department here in Washington; in the office of the Postmaster General, the offices of the First Assistant Postmaster General, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, the Third Assistant Postmaster General, and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and also in the city post office.

Mr. JONES. That is what I wanted to get clear.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say as to the working of the Post Office Department outside of Washington, because there has been no investigation made of that, so far as I know; but I do know that there has been an investigation made in the Post Office Department in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, I simply wish to add a further word before I take my seat. The Senate will notice that we have increased the appropriations for the Efficiency Bureau from $43,000 to $60,000, an additional amount of $17,000. The Senate committee recommended that increase in order that the bureau might extend the work they are now engaged in. If it is desired to secure information necessary to coordinate and bring the organization and workings of the departments to a business basis, all that we have to do is to increase this appropriation and give the authority to the Efficiency Bureau, which we are proposing to give in this bill. We shall then get a report before the end of next year, and if the Senate and the House of Representatives will carry out the recommendations that will undoubtedly be embodied in that report, I have no hesitation in saying that it will result in saving the Government of the United States millions of dollars annually.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it seems to me quite proper, if this work is to be done at all, that it should be done by the Efficiency Board. The very name "Efficiency Board" would imply that this would be a part of its work; but I think the trouble is, as I gather it from the statements of Senators, that the Efficiency Board has never had explicit direction and authority along this particular line.

Mr. President, the President of the United States himself can not personally do this work; we are all aware that he must avail himself of the services of some board or body in order that he may ascertain the facts upon which he will act or upon which he will make recommendations to Congress, if we leave it in the shape in which the Senator from North Carolina now proposes to leave it. I have heard read the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina, giving the President power to make investigation concerning this matter. As I have said, I believe it is part of the Efficiency Board's duty to do that; and I propose the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. OVERMAN it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Efficiency Board is hereby authorized and directed during the vacation to make thorough investigation looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government and to ascertain what work or activities of one bureau, division, or office may be transferred to another, or what bureaus, divisions, or offices in such departments may be consolidated, to the end that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated. Said board shall report the result of its investigations, with recommendations to Congress, on the first Monday in December, 1917.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, all the members of the committee know that that amendment will not do at all. The President will have to be given the authority that comes with the force of an act of Congress. In conference and in committees it has developed that there has been trouble, perhaps because of the lack of authority of the Bureau of Efficiency. Mr. Brown, the chief of that bureau, has made recommendations, some of which have been adopted, and yet the chiefs of divisions and Cabinet officers resent his being put over them. I want to put the President at the head of it, and then, in coordination with this bureau, he can make a report to Congress, and it will come with such force that Congress will be obliged to take some notice of it. Under the present circumstances all of the members of the committee know the great trouble Mr. Brown has had, and he is going to continue to have such trouble. The heads of the departments will continue to resent his coming within their particular spheres of action. If we give the President authority now to make this investigation and report his recommendations, we can get a better report and it will be more forceful.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that, after this debate, any department of the Government will refuse to allow Mr. Brown to prosecute his activities? And, again, can not the President order those departments to permit Mr. Brown to make his investigations? I should say so.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

The President is hereby authorized during the recess of the Congress to take action looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government, and he is hereby requested to report upon the question of transfer and consolidation of bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, in order that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, that seems to me to refer particularly and only to duplication and overlapping of work. Does the Senator think it will cause the making of a survey of the value of the work which the Government is receiving and take into consideration the equities between the employees and the Government as to the standard of service and wages?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that will all be taken care of. There is another provision in the bill concerning the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. LANE. Does the amendment provide for that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment is general in its terms, but there are in the bill special provisions in regard to investigations by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. LANE. The general terms as expressed, it seems to me, are not so important as the subjects to which I have referred. If the amendment accomplishes that purpose, I am quite in favor of it, but if it merely confines the work to investigating what bureaus overlap in their work, and leaves the larger and more important questions untouched, I do not think it would be of much value.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator must remember that there is an amendment already in the bill which, I think, cares for the matter which he has in mind.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will be adopted. This is not the first time Congress has authorized the President to take action to reduce the expense of running the executive departments of the Government. I have before me the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1912, in which will be found the following provision:

The President is authorized to reorganize the customs service and cause estimates to be submitted therefor on account of the fiscal year 1914, bringing the total cost of said service for said fiscal year within a sum not exceeding $10,150,000 instead of $10,500,000, the amount authorized to be expended therefor on account of the current fiscal year 1912; in making such reorganization and reduction in expenses he is authorized to abolish or consolidate collection districts, ports, and subports of entry and delivery, to discontinue needless offices and employments, to reduce excessive rates of compensation below amounts fixed by law or Executive order, and to do all such other and further things that in his judgment may be necessary to make such organization effective and within the limit of cost herein fixed; such reorganization shall be communicated to Congress at its next regular session and shall constitute for the fiscal year 1914 and until otherwise provided by Congress the permanent organization of the customs service.

Under that authority the then President of the United States, Mr. Taft, did reorganize the service and there was saved in the first year $350,000, and, as has been well said by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], a proper reorganization of the bureaus of this Government and the prevention of the duplication of work will save each and every year from forty to fifty million dollars. I hope the amendment will be agreed to and that the effort made by this Congress to prevent the duplication of work, to consolidate bureaus, to discontinue needless offices and employments, and reduce expenses will be successful.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator was the Efficiency Board created at the time of the passage of the act from which he has quoted?

Mr. CURTIS. The Efficiency Board, as I understand, was in existence at that time. The Efficiency Board, as a matter of fact, was not created last year. An Efficiency Board of some kind has been in existence for a number of years. I think the first one was appointed during President Taft's administration; but the members of the committee will remember that last year there was some trouble because of the fact that one of the departments wanted to eliminate the Efficiency Board; they wanted to have it removed from the rooms it had been assigned, and so Congress in the appropriation bill of last year provided for its permanent establishment.

The Senate will remember that when the Indian Appropriation bill was under consideration a year ago, and while the measure was in conference, an item authorizing the Efficiency Commission to do certain work was stricken from the bill, because it was said those in authority would not consent to the Efficiency Board entering the department and making an investigation and report. By reason of that statement the opposition here was strong enough to defeat the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill and send it back to conference, and authority was given for the investigation to be made.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator think if the Efficiency Bureau had been permanently established at the time of the passage of the act to which he refers that there would have been any need of the act itself conferring upon the President the power therein provided for?

Mr. CURTIS. I am afraid there would have been; I am afraid that the various departments would oppose the Efficiency Board coming in to make investigations, but I think if they are authorized and directed to make investigation by the President, and an order is issued by him, then there will be no trouble.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Presient, I should like to ask the Senator if he believes that an order from the President for an investigation by the Efficiency Board ought to have any more potency than an act or resolution of Congress?

Mr. CURTIS. No; I do not, and I do not know that it would have; but I know that it did appear in the debate a year ago that after the Congress by an amendment had authorized the Efficiency Board to investigate a certain department the information was given to the Senate by the chairman of the committee that the item was stricken from the bill in conference because the head of the department opposed the Efficiency Board making the investigation. Senators will recall that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask the Senator if, as a matter of fact, the efficient part of the legislation from which he has quoted with reference to the reorganization of the customs service was not the authority given to the President to make the changes that he found it desirable to make?

Mr. CURTIS. I think so. I might state that the investigation of the customs service a number of years ago showed that many thousands of dollars were being wasted each and every year. It was costing the Government from $100 to $1,500 in some places to collect a single dollar, and $200 or $300 in some places where there were no collections made whatever. I had the pleasure of offering an amendment giving this authority to the President of the United States. That amendment was not adopted at that session, but later on the amendment which I have read was adopted, and the President, acting upon the reports made to him by his subordinates, consolidated certain ports of entry, abolished useless offices, and saved to the Government $350,000 that year, as directed by the provision, and I understand that saving has been made each and every year since. If $350,000 could be saved in that service, how many millions might be saved if the same rule should be applied to the various departments of this great Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion and to the arguments which have been presented. I have come to this conclusion from what has been stated, and I should like to be corrected if I am wrong:

The Efficiency Board which has been established has been doing excellent work. The Efficiency Board recognizes all of the needs which the Senators have been discussing this afternoon. The only obstacle in the way of that board is the obstruction placed in its way by the Cabinet officers. The Cabinet officers are the creatures of the President. We now propose practically to take away from the Efficiency Board and to discredit the work that they have been doing by saying to them: "We will put you directly under the control of the President"—under the control of the President, whose Cabinet officers have prevented, up to date, the very investigation which Senators demand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the investigations now being conducted by the Efficiency Board are different from those authorized by this amendment. They now investigate as to the number of clerks required, the character of clerks, and so forth. They have not the power, and they ought not to be given the power, to investigate as to the duplication of service and the abolishment of bureaus. The bureau has only a particular line of work at present—that is, to investigate how better business methods can be adopted in these departments, what clerks can be reduced, and matters like that. They have no broad authority such as is conferred by this amendment. What I desire is that they shall be able to act in conjunction with the President, and I say to the Senator that better progress will be made in that way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me ask the Senator a question. If this amendment is agreed to, the result will be to place in the hands of the President the responsibility for these investigations, will it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. Mr. Brown, who is the head of the Efficiency Bureau, has a duty to perform under this act. If the Senator will get the bill and read it he will see the authority granted there. He does not work outside of it. This amendment does not say anything about what measures the President shall adopt. I suppose he will use this man whenever he can.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is there any power conferred in this amendment which the Efficiency Board does not now possess?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is altogether different and far-reaching. The other is only limited.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, as well as to the Senator from Michigan, that the amendment ought to be modified so as to authorize the President to make use of and utilize the work of the Efficiency Board and require the Efficiency Board to report to him. That would avoid duplication. The President could utilize the work of the board, and that would be the end of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator is right about that; but under the law now the head of that board has to report to the President. The President will have his report; and in addition to that, the President will receive reports as to bureau consolidations and take the whole matter into consideration and broaden it so as to have the two reports.

Mr. NELSON. Is the Efficiency Board required to report directly to the President?

Mr. OVERMAN. To the President; yes. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that there is a provision on page 31, which I think I will read:

> The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the methods of examining and auditing claims against the United States and accounts of disbursing officers, and of accounting for receipts and disbursements, and shall submit a report to the Congress, with recommendations, at its next regular session.

That all goes to the President. The head of that bureau has a particular, limited work to do. This amendment enlarges that work and gives the President power to use him or any other departmental officer he wishes to use in order to make this investigation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me now repeat my question to the Senator. As I understand, the only criticism that has been made of this Efficiency Board or of its work is that the Cabinet officers do not cooperate with, but rather obstruct, its work in the departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say Cabinet officers; I said chiefs of bureaus and others in the departments. They all resent it, because they know that some of them have got to go. The whole department resents it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is there any question in the mind of the Senator that if the President suggested to those Cabinet officers that this board should have full opportunity to investigate, it would be given that opportunity?

Mr. OVERMAN. They have that authority now, and would do it, I think. They do not complain to him. They complain to Congress. At present, you see, their authority is limited. They could not report on the question of the abolishment of a bureau or the consolidation of a bureau or the duplication of work. We did give them special authority to investigate the duplication of work as to printing matters, and so forth; not duplication of work in general, but duplication of printing. That is as far as they have gone.

I do not know, Mr. President, whether our legislation here is going to stand in conference or not, because there is a great deal of opposition to it; and I want some broad power—not a limited power—to take in this whole subject, and let us see what we can do at the next session of Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to look at pages 31 and 32. That language was written in there because it was thought it would be necessary to enable this bureau to go ahead with work which it wanted to do and could not do unless authorized. At first, the bureau was under the Civil Service Commission, but friction arose and the bureau was placed directly under the President, so that it would not be under any department. There seems to be, and I think it is reasonable to suppose that there would be, a sort of comity among the departments, the bureau chiefs, and so on, and they resent anybody coming in to show them how to do their work. That is where the trouble has come. They have been opposed to it, because, when the representatives of the Efficiency Bureau go into a bureau they go in there to see if they can not dispense with some of the help they have, if they can not suggest to them that certain work could be done with fewer men, that their system of accounting is not up to date, and so on; and I suppose the people in these bureaus think they know as much about it as anybody else does.

So the language that is written into these appropriation bills has come, fragment by fragment, for the last two or three years. That is, they have done some work, and they find they have to come to the Committee on Appropriations to get authority to do a little more. Why any bureau or department or commission should object to a set of experts coming into better conditions in that commission or bureau or department I do not understand. Nevertheless, I suppose it is human nature that they should do it.

I do not think it makes very much difference one way or the other about the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The force and effect of it is lost, in my judgment, when you do not authorize the President, when he gets a report from this board of experts—if I may call them such—that a certain bureau ought to be limited in its work, to stop it right there and report to Congress. Of course, the President is going to get his information from this very bureau. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SMOOT. And he can not get it in any other way.

Mr. BRYAN. He can not get it in any other way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Florida, in whose judgment I have a good deal of confidence—I know he has looked into this matter very carefully—if he thinks there is anything in the point I make; that is to say, if we now adopt this amendment, will we not in some measure discredit and weaken the work of the Efficiency Board?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think so. If I did, I should be very much opposed to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the only objection I have to it. I am in favor of the principle, the idea, of the amendment; but if it is true that this board is doing good work, and we have now added to its powers and given it more authority in this bill, then if we say that the head of these Cabinet officers who have obstructed the work is to be given charge of it all—is to be put in charge, practically—it seems to me it means that we are not going to have as efficient work as we have been having on the part of the Efficiency Board.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, Mr. President, this bureau reports directly to the President, and the President will get whatever information he gets from this very bureau. I do not think there will be any conflict. I doubt if much will be done, however, except what is being done by this bureau. There is this good that it may do: In view of the discussion which has taken place during the pendency of this bill, and the attention which has been called several times to the fact that there is duplication of work in these various bureaus, it may cause the President to take a more active interest in it than he otherwise would.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it seems to be agreed on all sides that something should be done to systematize the work of the different departments of the Government. About that, I think, there is very little difference of opinion. It seems now that the power and authority of the Efficiency Board is so limited that it would not be able to do what we really want done. If this matter should be referred to the Efficiency Board in the first instance, and then to the President finally, he would find this difficulty about it, it seems to me:

It is perfectly apparent that the heads of departments, who are the advisers of the President, are antagonistic to any movement of this kind. They resent any effort on the part of Congress to deal with this question in any way. If there should come about a conflict of opinion between the Efficiency Board and a member of the President's Cabinet as to what should be done in the department, what would likely occur? The President would be almost certain to take the advice of the head of the department as against the Efficiency Board, and you would find difficulty in carrying out any project of this kind for that reason, it seems to me.

If the authority of the Efficiency Board were increased to deal with this very question of the abolition and consolidation of bureaus and anything else that might lead to greater efficiency in the departments, and they were authorized to make their reports to the Congress of the United States and call upon Congress to act upon their suggestions, we might get at a matter of that kind.

I see that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] smiles at that idea. That is one of the difficulties about it. We have no confidence in ourselves. It is openly stated here that Congress could not be expected to do anything along those lines, for political reasons.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I should be perfectly willing to vest the power in the Efficiency Board itself, although I do not know the members of it or who they are. I should be willing to vest it in any body out of whom there would be some likelihood of getting action. But I have served around here long enough to know that, in my opinion, it would not be worth walking across this Chamber to get the legislation to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. WORKS. I am very much afraid the Senator is right about that; and I agree with him that it might be better to establish some organization—the Efficiency Board would probably be as good as anybody else—to determine these questions absolutely. I do not think it would be a wise thing, for the reason I have stated, to commit it to the President, where there would be an absolute conflict of opinion between the heads of the departments and the Efficiency Board as to what ought to be done.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the first act of the Efficiency Commission of which I have any recollection had to do with the consolidation of customs divisions, as I recollect it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what they were first appointed for.

Mr. HUGHES. There had been an effort going on during all of my service in the House to bring about that consolidation. It was shown, year after year, that the maintenance of certain customhouses cost five or six thousand dollars a year, and that sometimes they would collect as much as 80 or 90 cents in a year. [Laughter.] That matter was notorious. It was scandalous. It was debated before the Houses; the newspapers called the attention of the country to it; but the gentlemen who were interested in those customhouses in various parts of the country pooled their forces and retained them. Finally the consolidation was had and the customhouses were abolished by a sort of trick. I mean by that it was done as it is attempted to be done here, by giving the President some power; and the people who gave the President the power did not understand the power they were giving him, or they never would have given it to him. It was done on an appropriation bill, I think, and a great part of it went in in conference.

At any rate, the power was given to somebody. It was given to President Taft, as I recollect. The customs divisions were consolidated and a number of useless offices were abolished, and the greatest roar of righteous indignation went up from the various legislative bodies that constitute this Congress that ever touched my ears in all my service.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the word "righteous." The Senator ought to say "unrighteous."

Mr. HUGHES. Anybody who has served here for any length of time knows how difficult it is to abolish a place. I would not have any faith in the President's being able to stand up against the pressure that would be brought to bear upon him if it were necessary to turn out the people who could be dispensed with in the interest of economy. It will not, however, be necessary to turn them out. The President can so manage this affair that these men can all be preserved in their status. They can all be kept upon the list, and they can be transferred about from one bureau to another, as is done in the case of the Pension Office employees.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think that these people ought to be retained in the service of the Government if they are not needed?

Mr. HUGHES. Why, no; I do not think so. Whether I think so or not, however, is a matter of small moment. They would be retained.

Mr. SMOOT. There are deaths and resignations going on all the time.

Mr. HUGHES. As the Senator from Utah suggested, there are deaths occurring constantly, and there are a few resignations, despite the popular belief to the contrary. Every once in a while a man does resign from the Government service.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there is also a constant necessary expansion of work, requiring the constant increase of those who can render the service, that would undoubtedly take care of the situation in the main.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no question about that. Some reference has been made here this afternoon to the change that was instituted in the Office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department. There were a great many clerks there whose services were dispensed with. I will not venture to say how many.

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred and three.

Mr. HUGHES. The services of 103, the Senator from Utah says, were dispensed with there by the installation of machinery, and the work was brought up to date. But those people were all taken care of. They were transferred to various other departments of the Government. None, that I know of, were absolutely thrown out of the service, and, even if they were temporarily suspended, they retained their civil-service status, and they would have the right to be appointed when certain other positions were to be filled.

It is only in that way, however, and it is only by giving somebody the power that we can bring about the desired results. I would not give this power to anybody if it carried with it the authority to increase places. But what difference does it make if we give a man the power to reduce places, to abolish places, and consolidate places when we all want places abolished and consolidated? I do not think we will gain much by it; but we can not lose. The pressure that would be brought to bear upon any official of the Government who was charged with this duty and given this power would be something terrific; but as long as he has not the power to increase the places the people—and they are what Congress has in mind—must be the gainers.

Why, we have no conception, and the people have no conception, of the true condition of affairs in the Government service to-day, and as it has been for a number of years. I remember being driven over to the station one day by one of the cab drivers out here, and I got to questioning him as to how he managed to make a living. It had always been more or less of a mystery to me how those chaps out in the quadrangle existed from year to year on the small amount of business they seemed to do. He told me that he had a fixed compensation which came from two men whom he drove to the Pension Office every morning. It was a disreputable looking sort of a rig that he drove, and I could not imagine any highly paid members of the Pension Office staff being driven to and from their work in this sort of an arrangement. I questioned him a little, and I found out that they were not driven down there because they thought they could afford to drive to and from their work; but two of them engaged this man to drive them down there, because they could not walk from the house to the carriage, and they could not walk from the carriage to the Pension Office. Each morning he reported to their houses and helped them out and into the carriage, and he helped them from the carriage to the Pension Office; and at night the operation was repeated in the other direction.

That will give you some sort of an idea of the way the Government's work is being performed. Not so very long ago, in my service in the other body, the man at the head of one of the departments appeared before one of the committees and testified that if the elevators did not run 70 per cent of his force could not get to work. [Laughter.]

Are we going to continue to let these things go on? If we are, it is only a question of time, and a very short time at that, when the civil service will absolutely break down. We will be unable to get the work of the Government transacted. Somebody will have to take over the responsibility and the duty of consolidating and shifting and adjusting, and putting certain people to doing certain work that they can do, and giving other people an opportunity to do work that they can do.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does not a part of the difficulty to which the Senator refers—that is, retaining a lot of helpless, inefficient, superannuated men in the service—arise from the fact that we have not in this country, as they have in most other countries, a system of pensions for civil employees of the Government?

Mr. HUGHES. Of course. There is no question about that.

Mr. NELSON. And would it not be a good plan to establish such a system, not on a basis of funds furnished by the Government, but on the basis of funds contributed by these men out of their salaries, requiring them to contribute a certain percentage?

We have an illustration of how such a contribution system works in the beautiful Soldiers' Home out here belonging to the Regular Army. Barring the funds that Gen. Scott brought back from Mexico, all the revenues and all the costs of that institution have been derived from small contributions made by the soldiers of the Regular Army, the privates and noncommissioned officers, out of their pay, and out of the fines imposed by courts-martial. They were so successful in that that a few years ago they had enough funds to enable them to cease requiring any contributions from the soldiers of the Army. To-day that magnificent institution, one of the best in the country—the very best, in fact—is supported without a dollar of expense to the Government. That institution has been built up, barring the contribution that Gen. Scott brought in, by the contributions of soldiers in the Army.

Now, why could we not do something of that kind in the civil service, instead of keeping in the service a lot of helpless old men? I have seen them. Perhaps it is not very gracious in me, approximating old age, to speak of these things, and yet, after all, it has struck me as peculiar. I have seen old men and women helped on the cars and helped off the cars going to their offices, and I have gone into those offices and found them sitting in chairs all day, reading the newspapers, and once in a while taking a little nap. [Laughter.]

The only way in which we can get rid of this condition is by establishing a system of pensions. I can very well understand how the heads of these bureaus and the heads of the departments are possessed of the milk of human kindness, and when these old men become helpless and have no means of support they do not feel like turning them out in the cold. The only way they can get around it is to reduce them from $1,800 to $1,600, and from there to $1,400, and from there to $1,200, and $1,000, and $900, and so on, as long as they can possibly keep them there; and that is the way, indirectly, in which we pension them.

There are to-day hundreds of men and women in the departments who are practically getting pensions from the Government in that form. That is, they get the smallest amount of salary—$840 or $900 or $1,000. Men and women that were once getting from $1,400 to $1,600 and $1,800 are getting that, and it is practically nothing more than a pension.

In order to reform the civil service, and reform it from the bottom up, you must establish a system of pensions and retirements. You must require retirement at a certain definite age, and allow the employee a pension, and let that pension fund be created, as it is in most other countries, not by contributions from the Government but by taking out a small portion from the monthly salary of every clerk, and establishing a fund in that way. That is the way to reform the civil service, and you can not reform it from the ground up until you establish a system of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I agree with every word the Senator has said; and I would admit the absolute and utter hopelessness of doing anything under the provision originally suggested by the Senator from North Carolina if it were coupled with the suggestion that those holding the places we could dispense with were to be turned out of the service, because I know that that would present an insurmountable obstacle to putting into effect what the Senator originally suggested. I think it would be easier to deal with the proposition that confronts us now if we had a retirement plan. It would be cheaper for the Government to-day if we could retire, at five or six hundred dollars a year, a great many civil servants who are getting as high as twelve, fourteen, and sixteen hundred dollars a year, and are doing practically no work.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me for just a moment?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest that we have made a little progress in the Coast Guard Service, as we call it. It used to be the Revenue-Cutter Service. We first put the members of that service on the same basis as officers of the Regular Army. Then, in order to help out the Life-Saving Service, we tried to pass a bill for retiring those people, when they got old and helpless, on a small portion of their salaries; but we were met with the objection that it was establishing a civil pension. So, in order to get around that technical objection, they said in another Chamber—I need not specify where; Senators can guess—"If you will combine the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service and merge them in a new institution, and call it the Coast Guard Service, we will allow theses life-saving men to be retired, and provide for a system of pensioning them."

A year ago we tried to do something for the Lighthouse Service. The poorest paid employees in all this broad land are the keepers of our lighthouses. Their average pay is not over $600 a year. I secured the passage a year ago or so, I do not remember the date, of two bills prepared in the department. One proposed to increase the pay of lighthouse keepers from $600 to $700 a year. The other proposed to provide for a system of retirement. The Senate with unanimity almost passed those bills, and if that retirement would only pass the other body of Congress, those men would be provided for. But we are met with the objection to civil pensions.

It seemed at first to be a very serious matter to me to embark on a system of civil pensions, but I do not see how we can possibly purge the civil service of the Government, how we can possibly put it on a solid footing, without providing in some form for a system of civil pensions, so that when men get disabled either from old age or other causes and are unfit to perform their share of service they can be put upon a retired list and have some provision for their old age. Unless you can accomplish that the system will continue as it is to-day. As long as there is a drop of the milk of human kindness in the bureau chiefs and heads of departments they will hesitate to turn out the old helpless people in the service.

I do not want to delay the proceedings on this bill, and it may seem ungracious for me to inject these remarks, yet, Mr. President, I can not help doing it. I have given the matter some thought. While I was in the first instance opposed to civil pensions, I can not for the life of me, after studying the question carefully, see my way to cure the evil, the dry-rot that is now in every department, except by establishing a system of civil pensions.

Mr. HUGHES. I agree with what the Senator has said. I believe myself the absence of some such system as he has described is a great stumbling block in the way of these attempted reforms. That is what we are trying to do now. I can cite the experience of my own municipality. We had a police force on which most of the men were in about the same physical condition as the old servants in the Government service now. They were on the police force, but they could not do police duty any more than these old men can do clerical duty. They were replaced under a proper civil-service law by young, strong, vigorous men, and, if my memory serves me right, we have had a better police force and it did not cost any more or but little more money than it cost before.

We have no civil-pension system in this country. I hope we are going to have one soon. I rejoice in the fact that the last Democratic platform in terms declared in favor of some form of retirement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will have a chance to vote upon the retirement plan as an amendment to this bill. If I am informed correctly, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, intends to offer an amendment to the bill providing for a retirement plan for Government employees. The amendment will provide that an employee reaching the age of 65 shall have the privilege of retirement, but compulsory retirement will be enforced at the age of 75. At any time between the age of 65 and 75 the head of the department in which the employee is working may question his ability to perform a full day's work and ask for his retirement. If the employee doubts the judgment of the head of the department, he can have the question submitted to a commission and it in turn will decide as to whether he shall be retired or not.

The plan provides a payment on retirement of one-half of the salary received by the employee, but in no case to exceed $600 per year. To carry that plan out, with the contributory system provided for, would take about 22 or 23 years before it will be on a paying basis, and in the meantime it will cost the Government in the 22 years about $140,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I venture to say that we are spending $140,000,000 needlessly this fiscal year. I venture to say that we are paying out for services more than $140,000,000 to people who are unable to render the service to the Government for which they are being paid. I venture to say that the net loss to the Government for services paid for and not received will amount to $147,000,000 for this fiscal year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator made any calculation about that?

Mr. HUGHES. I know that no one can dispute it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I dispute it most emphatically. The Senator had better look into that.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator can not prove that I am wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not prove that he is right.

Mr. HUGHES. I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the amount of all the salaries paid to employees of the Government amounts to $399,000,000 this year. So, I think, the Senator is a little high in his figures.

Mr. HUGHES. I think I am nearly right. I thought perhaps I was a little low, but anyway I am sorry that the Senator felt compelled to modify his original amendment. It was a long step in the right direction.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have modified it.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand the Senator was compelled to modify it, because if a point of order had been insisted upon it would have gone out; but for the life of me I can not see why any Senator really in favor of economy and against extravagance, and I believe practically everyone in this Chamber is in favor of economy and against extravagance in the abstract, should object to the amendment as originally proposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention to the report of the United States Bureau of Efficiency, Document No. 1793, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, which is quite interesting evidence on this subject. The bureau reports:

> As a result of this work the annual estimates for appropriations for the executive departments have been reduced by $260,000. Changes have also been effected in the departments that did not result in reduced estimates, but either prevented increases or will eventually cause reductions of about $140,000, and plans have been submitted for changes in methods which should, if put into effect, result in a further annual saving of more than $375,000.

It will be remembered that the present Bureau of Efficiency was a division of the Civil Service Commission from March 25, 1913, to February 27, 1916, and since then it has become an independent establishment. The last appropriation for it was $40,000, May 10, 1916. The report further states:

These savings have been effected by avoiding the necessity for filling vacancies and appointing additional clerks, rather than by dropping clerks from the rolls. In no case has the bureau recommended the dropping of a clerk, although it has necessarily approved the dismissal of a few employees for inefficiency in accordance with the Executive order establishing a system of efficiency rating in the Post Office Department. The bureau has made a special effort to find suitable places for all employees displaced on account of improvements in methods and in most cases it has been successful in finding positions satisfactory to the employees.

So in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota this pruning out of employees need not cause any distress or displace people absolutely. They can be used in the extension of the service and in the expansion of the work of the Government as it goes naturally on.

I think the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina was a sound one, and I think perhaps if we can not get the original proposition, any move in this direction is advisable, because while the President is not obliged to accept the recommendation or advice of the Bureau of Efficiency, undoubtedly he will be influenced by what they suggest. If he has their advice that in a certain department there are more employees than are needed in certain bureaus and there could be changes made to the advantage of the service in the promotion of economy and certainly in the promotion of efficiency, he would be empowered to make the orders carrying out those recommendations; and I have not any doubt but what under some plan or arrangement like that efficiency would be promoted and a great saving to the Government would be accomplished. I think a movement of this sort is in line with the efforts which we have been previously making, more or less feeble, and at the same time there is a possibility of accomplishing a great deal of good in promoting efficiency as well as in promoting economy.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the Bureau of Efficiency. I felt that I ought to do that. There are, of course, two questions here not immediately involved. The question of how to make provision for those clerks who have reached an age when they are no longer efficient is one question which will be dealt with probably under the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I only want to say, with reference to that at this time, that whatever we may think of a civil-service pension list it is inevitable; conditions are bound to enforce it, and when that question comes up I desire to offer some suggestions.

What I want to say about the Bureau of Efficiency is that when the bureau was first created the power or authority was very limited, and, while I was not opposed to it, I was not at all enthusiastic over its creation. I want to make that statement.

From time to time we have enlarged its power. We are enlarging its power in the bill to-day. After studying its work somewhat from a spirit not of hostility but lack of sympathy, I want to testify to the efficiency of that bureau. I believe the bureau has demonstrated that it is one of the most valuable adjuncts which Congress has created. Having formerly taken the attitude of one at least wanting in sympathy, I felt it was only due to make this public acknowledgment.

I think we should adopt the amendment. I should like to have the amendment in its original form adopted. We may as well recognize the fact, deplorable perhaps as it is, that we have got to make some provision that will relieve Congress from the necessity of facing a condition which, owing to human nature, we practically have been unable to face. In a proposition that simply deals with the question of the transfer of employees, it seems to me we ought not to be too particular as to what particular power or authority is vested, whether in the President or in the Efficiency Bureau or in the coordination of their activities. The deplorable fact remains that we have been unable to meet the condition, and by vesting this additional authority under the coordination of the authority conferred upon the President, I believe we will be able to effectuate a very valuable reform. I wanted to make this public statement with reference to what I had seen and learned and my change of views from one of want of sympathy to one of full sympathy with the creation and work of the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to submit some data respecting a particular matter. We have heard a good deal said since this bill has been before the Senate as to possible ways of saving money to the Treasury. We have heard a good deal about duplication of work, about large and even extravagant expenditures. I wish to speak of a matter with a view to calling the attention of the Efficiency Bureau, of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, and of the Congress to what I think is, or at least what strikes me as being, an abuse which if corrected would save a considerable sum of money to the Treasury without impairing the effectiveness of the public service.

Some days ago I went down to the bureau in charge of the collection of the internal revenue, and also to the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the collection of customs, to make inquiry concerning certain information coming to me.

The salaries paid to collectors of customs at ports and to other officials subordinate to the collectors are, to my mind, unduly large, large to the point of actual extravagance as compared with the salaries and expenses incident to the collection of the internal revenue. For example, at the port of New York in the last fiscal year there was collected in customs $152,943,408.27. In the district of New York there was collected of internal revenue $84,803,404.95.

Mr. President, it costs the Treasury $2.70 for the collection of every hundred dollars taken in at that port, but it costs the Treasury only 38 cents on the hundred dollars for the collection of the internal revenue. I have a list of the important ports showing the same general condition, which I will ask to print in the RECORD, without consuming time to read it. The sum of the matter, as shown by this list, is that during the last fiscal year $215,346,735.78 of customs were collected in all the ports where customs are collected throughout the country. To collect that amount of customs it cost $9,280,797.33, or $4.30 for every hundred dollars collected.

During the same year there was collected of internal revenue throughout the country $512,733,287.77—considerably more than double the amount of customs collected—but it cost the Treasury to collect more than a half billion of internal revenue only $7,199,163.32, or $1.40 on the hundred dollars collected, as against $4.30 on the hundred dollars for the collection of customs.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The figures which the Senator from Missouri is presenting are very interesting, and I assume that the Senator will readily see that it is a much more expensive process to collect customs duties than to collect internal-revenue duties. Collectors of customs have to go through a process that takes cognizance of every importation that comes into the country, while the internal-revenue tax is paid to collectors in each State and by them transmitted to the Treasury in bulk. Of course, I do not mean to say that that is not an excessive cost in the collection of import duties, but there is a difference, which I think the Senator from Missouri will readily appreciate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the difficulty of collecting internal revenue, of preventing frauds of various kinds, requiring men to go into every community to ferret out the frauds and to prosecute the criminals, is as great, it seems to me, as are the difficulties involved in examining cargoes coming in in order to prevent undervaluation and to prevent smuggling of articles that ought to pay a duty, and various things of that kind where fraud may be practiced. Those conditions have to be met by the trained forces, or supposedly trained forces, under the collectors; but the same is relatively true, although along somewhat different but not less difficult lines, in preventing frauds and collecting the revenues to which the Government is entitled under the law relating to the internal revenue.

Mr. President, at New York the collector of customs receives a salary of $12,000. That is equal to the salary of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am informed he has eight deputies or assistant collectors under him, who, I am told, receive from $7,000 to $9,000 each. How about the internal-revenue collector? The internal-revenue collectors of that same city receive $4,500 and their deputies receive $2,500. There is no collector of internal revenue anywhere in the country receiving over $4,500, and no deputy who receives more than $2,500.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. STONE. Let me just make the comparison—whereas in these ports the collectors of customs receive $12,000, $7,000, $6,000—scarcely one of them receives less than $5,000. You can take the seven principal ports on the Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Pacific and you will find that the salaries received by the collectors of customs are from nearly double to two and one-half times as much as the collectors of internal revenue in the same cities receive, and the salaries paid to their deputies run in the same proportion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Missouri made a comparison as to the amount collected in the city of New York, for instance, from customs and from internal revenue?

Mr. STONE. I have already stated that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be interesting.

Mr. STONE. It is interesting, and I will restate it; but I yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York is entirely willing that the Senator from Missouri should first reply to the Senator from New Hampshire. I will ask for the Senator's generosity a moment later.

Mr. STONE. For the fiscal year 1916, in the port of New York, or district of New York, the amount of customs collected was $152,943,408.27. In the same district the amount of internal revenue collected was $84,803,404.95. It is true that in the district of New York the amount of customs collected is about 45 per cent greater than the amount of internal revenue collected, but the salaries paid to the officials collecting the customs revenue are from, approximately, two to two and one-half times as much as those paid to the officials collecting the internal revenue.

In the other ports, outside of New York, the comparative salaries run somewhat in the same proportion, as will be shown in the table I mean to print in full. The aggregate amount of internal revenue collected throughout the country is largely in excess of the amount of customs. It is only in the port of New York that the amount of customs collected is in excess of the amount of internal revenue collected.

Mr. President, I can cite the port of Boston, the port of Baltimore, the port of New Orleans, the port of San Francisco, and so on, where the collectors of customs receive $7,000 per annum, which is $2,000 more than the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who has control and supervision over all customs collections at all the ports of the country. No wonder that it costs $4.30 for every $100 received to collect customs and only $1.40 on $100 to collect internal revenue.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to ask leave to print these tables and the communications which I have here, furnished in response to my personal request by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and by the Second Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, having charge of customs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that request now?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir; a request to insert these tables and communications in the RECORD for the information of Senators, and particularly of the members of the Appropriations Committee and the Efficiency Board. These salaries ought to be equalized. There ought to be a readjustment of salaries throughout the country everywhere; there is no doubt about that in my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted the Senator from Missouri to print the matter referred to in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement showing collections of the Customs and Internal-Revenue Services for the fiscal year 1916; also salaries of certain officers.

NOTE.—In addition to the collectors at the seven ports (customs) whose salaries exceed that of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at the port of New York there are 12 additional officers of the Customs Service whose salaries exceed that of the commissioner, as follows:

Survey of customs	$8,000
Appraiser of merchandise	8,000
Naval officers of customs	8,000
Board of General Appraisers (nine)	each 9,000

Salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,500 per annum.

(Salaries of officers taken from latest issue of the Blue Book of the Census Office, dated 1915. Other data taken from the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year 1916.)

INTERNAL-REVENUE BUREAU ACTIVITIES AND ECONOMIES.

Efficient business methods inaugurated in Internal-Revenue Service and a fair and impartial enforcement of laws during present administration resulted in uncovering gigantic frauds and evaded taxes to the unprecedented amount of more than $50,000,000, of which $22,509,576.41 was assessed and collected during the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1916. This total recovered amount was greater by $2,700,000 than the entire cost of collecting the total revenue receipts of $1,308,413,205.59.

These frauds and most of the evasions existed unchecked and undiscovered during 12 or more years preceding this administration.

Eleven million three hundred and twenty-six thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars and eighty-two cents was unearthed in corporation excise tax alone, $8,443,707.60 of which was due since 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913.

Five million six thousand six hundred and ninety-six dollars and ninety-two cents of income tax otherwise lost to the Government was discovered and collected.

Nine hundred and eighty-four thousand seven hundred and ninety-one dollars and forty-one cents in compromises of minor evasions was turned into the Treasury.

Gigantic oleomargarine frauds amounting to more than $27,000,000 existing unchecked during previous administrations were brought to light. The statute limitations barred assessment of all but $5,168,-166.13, the other being collectible by suit. To date $950,406.87 has been recovered and $1,000,000 more is expected to be recovered in the near future.

Four million two hundred and forty-one thousand five hundred and fifty-five dollars and forty-five cents from frauds and evasions of distilled spirits, tobacco, and miscellaneous taxes was paid into the Treasury.

One gigantic whisky conspiracy operating for many years in more than a dozen States was hounded to light. Eleven conspirators tried to date have been convicted and are serving prison sentences. Three hundred and eighty-three thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars and sixty cents of evaded taxes and fines in this one case is a matter of record. It is estimated that more than $20,000,000 was evaded in remote years by this one conspiracy.

In one oleomargarine conspiracy 34 offenders in a single city were convicted or plead guilty and sentenced to terms of imprisonment totaling 63½ years and to pay fines aggregating $138,000.

One investigation of tobacco frauds extending over three States resulted in the seizure of 236 factories of the offenders and the uncovering of a large amount of tax.

ECONOMIES EFFECTED.

While the above millions of taxes otherwise lost to the Government were being ferreted out through the energetic activities of the commissioner and his organization, more efficient methods for handling the public business were put into operation and economies effected which result in a saving of more than $500,000 annually.

Four hundred thousand dollars is saved annually through the discontinuance of Government gauging at rectifying establishments.

Fifty thousand dollars is saved in clerks' salaries annually by elimination of duplicate and unnecessary work and installing of modern equipment.

Fifty thousand dollars is saved annually in cost of paper, printing, ink, and labor through improvements made in form and size of internal-revenue stamps.

COST OF COLLECTION.

The activities of the bureau is reflected in the cost of collection. The average cost during the past three years was only $1.51 per $100, as compared with $1.67 per $100 for the four years of the previous administration. If the rate of collection under this administration had remained as high as the cost of the previous administration, the additional expense to the Government during the past three years would have amounted to approximately $2,000,000.

The records of the Internal-Revenue Bureau show that never in its history have results been achieved in any way comparable with those of the last three years. The amount of evaded taxes discovered and economies effected does not in any way measure the value of the efficient administration of internal-revenue laws to the Government, the honest trade, and the public in general. This strict and impartial enforcement of the internal-revenue laws has not only brought additional revenues but will prevent a recurrence of such frauds and conspiracies so long as the present policies are continued.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1917.

Hon. WM. J. STONE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request of to-day relative to the compensation of collectors of internal revenue, etc., I have the honor to advise you that the maximum amount of salary that can be paid under the law to any collector of internal revenue is $4,500 per annum. The compensation of collectors of internal revenue was limited to this amount by the act of February 8, 1875 (18 Stat., 309), and this act, as amended by the act of March 1, 1879 (20 Stat., 327), also limited the compensation to $4,500 per annum.

In fiscal year 1875 the total collections from internal-revenue sources amounted to $110,071,515, and in 1879 to $113,449,621.38. In fiscal year 1916 the internal-revenue receipts amounted to $512,723,287.77. There was collected in last fiscal year in one collection district $42,475,733.33 as internal-revenue taxes, and the collector for this district received compensation of $4,500 per annum.

No chief deputy in any of the 64 collection districts receives more than $2,500 per annum as compensation.

When the Internal-Revenue Service was established in 1862 the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was fixed at $4,000. Under the act of March 3, 1875, fixing the compensation of the bureau force in Washington, the salary of the commissioner was increased to $6,000. The rate of compensation so remained until July 16, 1914, when it was raised to $6,500, the present rate.

The responsibilities imposed upon the commissioner are heavy, the importance of the office is great, and the functions have widened in scope and magnitude very materially in recent years owing to new revenue laws, many in effect since the salary was increased to $6,500. The commissioner has supervision of a force approximating 5,000 employees and has control of annual appropriations amounting to over $8,000,000.

The cost of collection in fiscal year 1916 was 1.4 per cent, the lowest cost for collecting internal revenue in the last 50 years.

Sincerely, yours,

W. H. OSBORN, Commissioner.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have to refer to your verbal inquiry of Mr. Peters's confidential clerk relative to salaries paid to collectors of customs and collectors of internal revenue.

I inclose herewith a copy of a book prepared by the Treasury Department, giving the salaries of all presidential officers, with certain exceptions, in and under the Treasury Department, wherein you will find a list of the officers mentioned by you, together with their salaries. The salaries of collectors of customs were established on a fee basis by section 2659 of the Revised Statutes, and some were later changed to compensation per annum by an act of Congress. (See p. 35, Supp. Rev. Stat., Vol. I, 1874–1891). Upon the reorganization of the customs service in 1913 all collectors of customs were placed upon a per annum basis. (See H. Doc. 1450, 62d Cong., 3d sess.)

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to ask the Senator if the information which he has in hand goes so far as to inform him whether or not a considerable number of the employees in the Internal-Revenue Service who work in the city of New York are not in fact residents of other States?

Mr. STONE. I know nothing about that. I assume it as probable that that is true, although I am not definitely informed. The Senator probably knows more about that than I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My information on that point is not conclusive, but, so far as it goes, it leads me to believe that a considerable number of the employees are residents of other States; and that results in their being able to collect from the Government, in addition to their salaries, $3 per diem because they are nonresidents, which tends to increase the cost of the collection of internal-revenue taxes.

Mr. STONE. That may be another abuse which ought to be corrected. I am not criticizing the nonemployment of New Yorkers or the employment of people from the outside. It is immaterial to me where they come from. It is a question of what the work costs the Government. Is there any further question the Senator desires to ask?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to say that the information I have is to the effect that a considerable number of these employees working in the Internal-Revenue Service in the city of New York are not and never have been residents of the State of New York; that some of them come from as far away as North Carolina, and then do not reside in the city of New York, but reside in New Jersey, so that they are entitled to $3 per diem subsistence in addition to their salaries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I am glad to have that information and to know that some of the employees in New York are coming from other States, because the great complaint I have from my State is that many employees are sent out from New York.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to make one observation I neglected to make?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say that the salaries for internal-revenue collectors and likewise those for customs collectors are of long standing. They were established for internal-revenue collectors, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue informs me, first, by the act of February 8, 1875, afterwards amended by the act of March 1, 1879. The salaries of the collectors were then fixed at $4,500; and Mr. Peters informs me, in giving me the statutes fixing the salaries of customs collectors, that they go back as far as 1874 and 1891. It has been a long time. At the time the salaries of the collectors of internal revenue were fixed by the law of 1875, the amount of internal revenue then collected throughout the country was only $110,071,515; and when that act was amended in 1879 the amount of internal revenue then collected was $113,449,621.38, while now the amount of internal revenue collected is over $500,000,000, more than double the amount collected upon customs at all the ports of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri was very unhappy in making the comparison between the cost of collecting the internal revenue and the cost of the collection of customs; but I think he has done a service in calling attention to the extravagant salaries paid to the collectors of customs and the assistant collectors of customs at ports of entry.

There is no comparison in the actual cost of the collecting of revenue from customs and the collecting of the internal revenue of our Government. Of the amount of internal revenue collected, $512,000,000, over half, nearly two-thirds, comes from tobacco and liquor. Of course, there is very little expense attached to the collecting of that tax. The balance comes mostly from the income tax, and the expense of collecting it is nominal as compared with the collection of customs dues.

For instance, to-day over half of all of our importations come in free of duty. Now, every pound of those importations has to be examined. Many of the articles have to be counted; they all have to be weighed and an account kept of them, so that the statistics of our Government will be correct as to the amount of importations of every class of goods, whether they be entered free or whether they be entered under a rate of duty fixed by Congress. So the comparison of the percentage of cost of collecting does not, in my opinion, prove anything as to what salaries ought to be.

Take the whole of the salaries that are paid to all of the collectors and deputy collectors: It would be a very, very small percentage upon the amount that is collected—I mean the salary alone—an infinitesimal percentage; but the expense attached to the collection of customs is considerable, not taking into consideration the wages paid. I know most of the employees of the Government are underpaid in comparison with what the collectors and deputy collectors receive. Why should the collector of the port of New York receive $12,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hate to interrupt the Senator, but that is the very thing I am asking to have done right now by this amendment. I hope the Senator will let it go to conference. I am sorry that this debate has been injected, because the amendment that I am introducing is designed to carry out the very idea suggested—to investigate and see about it.

Mr. STONE. I simply wanted to give notice that there was such a situation. I did not start the debate.

Mr. SMOOT. I would have been through before this time if I had not been interrupted, because I do not want to take an undue time of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Can the Senator from Utah inform me what salaries the board of appraisers are getting?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the board of appraisers get $9,000 each, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. And how many of them are there?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not looked it up of late. There are seven or nine, as I remember.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are nine, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew there were very few. I did not remember the exact number. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri, however, that I believe the highest salaries paid by the Government of the United States, when you take into consideration the responsibility and the class of the work, are those that are paid to the collector at the port of New York and the deputy collectors, and, I might say, in all of our ports of entry; at least, in the principal ports of entry of the country. It ought to be stopped. Why, only last year on an appropriation bill I tried to defeat a provision that allowed collectors $4 per diem when absent from home. The collectors of New York live in New Jersey, cross the river twice a day at a cost of 10 cents, and draw their per diem of $4 on the ground that they are absent from home. The item was put in the appropriation bill over my protest, and the practice ought to be rectified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before the question is put on the substitute I desire to perfect it by inserting just three words. I think perhaps this Efficiency Bureau should report to the President, and hence I want to insert——

Mr. OVERMAN. That is already provided.

Mr. STERLING. It is not provided in this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. The general law provides it.

Mr. STERLING. If the general law provides it, I am satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. FLETCHER. May the substitute be stated?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that the substitute in its present form amounts to nothing. Unless we have some power above this man that assists him and aids him, it will amount to absolutely nothing. I know what I am talking about. I know how they have refused to give these people rooms, even. I know how the head of the board is hampered at every step he takes. Unless we have the President in charge of this matter the amendment might as well not go in. It is nothing more than a waste of time.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am the author of the substitute, and I think I may say a word in reply to the Senator from North Carolina—just one word, and that is all.

It has been stated on the floor of the Senate this afternoon that the Efficiency Bureau has been retarded in its work by being refused facilities by the several departments. That may be true under the general powers of the Bureau of Efficiency, under the general scope of its work; but here is an amendment that directs the attention of the Bureau of Efficiency to a particular work for a particular purpose, and I do not believe that there is any department of the Government or any head of a bureau but that will say to the Bureau of Efficiency, "You shall have all the facilities that we can afford you in order to conduct this investigation."

Mr. President, if that is not the situation, it is to be deplored, and a remedy is needed; and I think perhaps the report of the Bureau of Efficiency will disclose whether or not they have been afforded the necessary facilities by the several departments of the Government and heads of bureaus. For that very reason, if for no other, I think this amendment should prevail. Let us know, indeed, whether the heads of departments can shut out the Bureau of Efficiency from making proper investigations authorized by the Congress.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have the Senator state just exactly how this substitute differs from the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. STERLING. It differs from the amendment as the amendment is now proposed in this respect: The President is to do it all under the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. KENYON. And the Senator eliminates the President entirely?

Mr. STERLING. I eliminate the President and provide that it shall be done by the Bureau of Efficiency, and that the Bureau of Efficiency shall report to Congress on the theory that it is work peculiar to the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator's substitute, then, simply eliminates the President's connection with the matter?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that if he had been receiving the telephone messages that I have he would not introduce such an amendment. They resent the idea of one man being given power over all of these Cabinet officers, the heads of these great departments. The head of this board will not be able to do any effectual work on that account.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the following provision, on page 32 of the bill:

Officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of the duties imposed on it by law, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose.

Then I want to call the Senator's attention to the language on the preceding page:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the work performed by the Subtreasuries and report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries may be transferred to other offices of the Government or banks of the Federal Reserve System; and for the purpose of this investigation the representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency shall have access to all necessary books and other records of the Government.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for calling attention to that provision. I had thought, once, that perhaps I should have inserted in my amendment a provision to the effect that heads of departments and heads of bureaus should be required to furnish these facilities; but that is fully covered by the part of the bill read by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, let us have a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to say a word or two, or three—maybe half a dozen.

It seems to me that you will not be putting a fair burden upon either the President or the Board of Efficiency if the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is adopted, for this reason: The Board of Efficiency will naturally be a bit timid about making a stringent report upon some of the departments when the board know that the head of that department has been appointed by the President, and they might fear they would offend him. Unless the head of the board is a man with a good deal of backbone, and a purposeful man, it will weaken his recommendations, perhaps, when they should not be weakened.

In addition to that, the President has more than he can do. He can not check up these things. Did you ever read one of the reports of this Board of Efficiency, or try to analyze one of their reports on methods of bookkeeping? It takes a Philadelphia lawyer to work out one of them. It would take a certified accountant to tell what they are about, and to analyze them on their merits.

It is not fair to either of them. The President should be freed of this burden, for he has to meet every day the men, his own appointees, whose methods are being criticized, and whose forces, may be, are being trimmed in consequence of the criticism. It is an unfortunate position in which to place either one of them.

The best place for the report to be made is right to Congress. They are the direct representatives of the people. I do not think, as a rule, they do any favors on either side of the question. It is merely their duty to see that the business is carried on properly and as economically as possible.

Therefore I shall favor the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The substitute was rejected, on a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the original amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, here is one amendment which the chairman of the Committee on Patents asked me to offer for him, which I will accept, and let the matter go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, following line 15, it is proposed to insert:

The Committee on Patents of the Senate is hereby directed to investigate the needs of the Patent Office respecting both its force and its equipment, and to report to the Senate at the opening of the next session of the Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask that that amendment be stated once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a remarkable request to come from the Commissioner of Patents. The Commissioner of Patents might well make that investigation himself; but in view of the amendment just agreed to, offered by the Senator from North Carolina, it does seem to me that we had better not agree to this amendment. It is unnecessary, and it is foolish, and it is particularly foolish as coming from the Commissioner of Patents. I hope it will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before any other amendments are introduced, I will say that I am going on with the bill; but I want to ask unanimous consent at this time that at the hour of 4 o'clock to-morrow we shall take up the calendar under Rule VIII, and proceed under that rule with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, to continue until the Senate adjourns.

Mr. MYERS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. OLIVER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. As I understand, his request is to consider the unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. While as a general rule we do not accomplish very much by night sessions, it does seem to me that the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar might very well be carried on at a night session, and save the daytime for other matters.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator, except that we can not go on with the calendar to-morrow night. I thought we might take up two hours to-morrow afternoon in passing these bills and get as far along as we can; and then, after that, we can take up the calendar at night where we left off, and get through with it in that way. To-morrow evening, however, there is a sort of general understanding——

Mr. JONES. Of course, if that is the situation, that is another matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is right about it, and I fully agree with him.

Mr. JONES. I simply wanted to suggest that one thing we can do at night is to take up these unobjected bills on the calendar. Those who are interested in the bills will be here.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, is this a request for a unanimous consent?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he amend the unanimous-consent request by limiting it to the consideration of Senate bills on the calendar.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. OLIVER. My reason for that is that it is very important to get the Senate bills passed, so as to get them over to the House in time to have them passed by the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I think we will get all these bills up. There are a good many pension bills that will have to be considered.

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly willing to except all pension bills, but I really think we ought to pay special attention to Senate bills, because if we do not get these Senate bills out of the way here we never will get them over to the House in time to be passed. We can devote another day, later on, to the consideration of House bills on the calendar, and that will finally pass them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what disposition he is making of this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going on with this bill until half past 5, and then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to ask for an executive session. I think we will get through with most of the amendments by that time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it the purpose of the Senator to conclude the consideration of this bill this afternoon? Does he expect that that will be done?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, Mr. President, that is impossible, I think. There are a few amendments that I think will be adopted without any debate. I want to get those in the bill, and then leave open any contested matters.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the Senator now asking for a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the bill to-morrow afternoon?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, no. I will say to the Senator that the unanimous-consent request is that to-morrow evening at 4 o'clock we take up the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar for two hours, from 4 o'clock to adjournment.

Mr. CLAPP. Is the calendar to be considered before the appropriation bill is disposed of?

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill will be disposed of by that time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. We do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is requested. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not object, but I wish to emphasize the position taken by the Senator from Pennsylvania. We can take bills that have passed the House and pass them within a week or two of the end of the session, but the Senate bills that are meritorious and should be passed ought to be sent to the House at as early a day as possible.

Mr. OVERMAN. The request is for the consideration of unobjected Senate bills and House pension bills.

Mr. OLIVER. Unobjected bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of unobjected Senate bills?

Mr. OLIVER. And pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And pension bills. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that that is a matter which could easily be disposed of. If we do not want to consider House bills, we can simply object to them.

Mr. OLIVER. There are House bills that we would not like to object to. I would not want to put ourselves in the position of objecting to them.

Mr. GRONNA. It is the request of the Senator to consider only Senate bills?

Mr. OLIVER. And House pension bills at that time.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS. There are upon the calendar quite a number of House bills to which amendments have been made by Senate committees. It seems to me it would be quite as important to get such bills back to the House as to get original Senate bills to the House.

Mr. OLIVER. Not quite as important, for they can be disposed of by conference. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that when a bill has once passed the House and has been amended in the Senate there is a quick way of obtaining action by both Houses.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator insists on his request without modification, of course I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 37, line 10, I move to strike out the period at the end of the line and insert a comma and the following: "and the State, War, and Navy branch printing office is hereby abolished."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It is simply carrying out what the committee intended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 10, after the word "State" and before the period, insert a comma and the words "and the State, War, and Navy branch printing office is hereby abolished."

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I wish to say that the abolishment of this branch printing office will save to the Government $25,998.75 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 46, line 17, I move to strike out the words "by the use of labor-saving devices," and the same amendment on page 47, beginning in line 5, and including line 6.

I will say, Mr. President, that the amendment if agreed to will allow the Post Office Department to use seven employees whom they can not now use under this appropriation because of the fact that there is no room for them to work upon the labor-saving devices and the further fact that they can not use those devices.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, there are seven supernumerary employees and we are changing the bill so as to give them employment? I suppose that is the substance of it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the object of it is this: They can use them in that department for other work, but under the wording of the law they can be used only on labor-saving devices. It simply authorizes the Postmaster General to take these seven employees and use them in work that they can do and which it is necessary to be done and not try to use them on labor-saving devices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 95, lines 23 and 24, an amendment was adopted in these words:

Public, No. 132, Sixty-fourth Congress, page 42.

It should read:

Public laws, first session Sixty-fourth Congress, page 300.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment at that point was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 98 of the bill the paragraph beginning at line 21 and ending on page 99, line 6, was passed over at my request. I now offer the following amendment, and will then explain it. I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to any grade or class in which less than 40 persons are appropriated for.

Mr. President, I will explain that so that the Senate may understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us understand where it is proposed to insert it and exactly what change it makes. Let the Secretary report it.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "promotion," on page 99, line 3, insert:

Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to any grade or class in which less than 40 persons are appropriated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say if the Senator had made that 10 or 12 clerks it would have been all right. Still I know it will be considered in conference, and I will let it go to conference. I will not say anything more about it, but let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. On page 46 there was an amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in line 21. I move to strike out the words in lines 21 and 22 "during the fiscal year 1918," and before the words "The Secretary," line 21, to insert the word "Hereafter."

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that amendment will not be adopted, because it would make this a permanent law. There may be conditions in the office that we ourselve would want to change; but the amendment I have offered has been adopted, and it will only interfere with a certain class of clerks if the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida now is adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill can not intelligently be considered unless amendments are sent to the desk and read from the desk. I do not know what we are considering now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Senator from Florida will please submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. BRYAN. I send the amendment to the desk in order that the Secretary may read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "during the fiscal year 1918," and before the words "The Secretary," line 21, insert the word "Hereafter," so as to read:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury may diminish from time to time, as vacancies occur by death, resignation, or otherwise.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. On page 7, line 3, after "two thousand," I move to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read:

Three assistant clerks, at $1,440 each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 4, after the numerals "$2,000," strike out the word "two" and insert "three," so as to read "three assistant clerks at $1,440 each."

Mr. BRYAN. The reason for that, I will say, is that on page 11 in repealing the Senate resolution we repealed one that applied to a clerk in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It seems to me it would be better to let the language repealing the resolution stand and, inasmuch as the clerk is needed in that committee, to provide for him in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that out of the contingent fund of the Senate this clerk has been paid for years. The committee thought it wise to abolish all such clerkships. However, this clerk belongs to the Post Office Department; he has been there for years, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 119, after line 3 and the committee amendment, insert:

In order to effect economy in the matter of auditing and accounting, the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, stations, or non-accounting offices in any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that proposed to apply to all the cities of the country?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it will require more clerks, of course?

Mr. BRYAN. No. I can explain it to the Senator in a minute.

Under the present plan there are some 55,000 post offices. Forty-five thousand of them are in the fourth class. Under the present system of accounting an account is kept with each of the offices. It is now proposed to arrange the offices into districts. Of course, there will be a first-class office in a district. That first-class office will account for the fourth-class offices and the department will deal with the larger office.

It is stated here in a memorandum furnished by the department that the accounts kept will be reduced from more than 1,000,000 to less than 100,000, and that doing the work in this way will save something over half a million dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely I have overlooked some legislation that has been agreed to. Have we legislated to abolish the postmasters throughout the country in the large offices except that we make classes and then have clerks?

Mr. BRYAN. No; this does not contemplate the abolishment of any post office.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not suppose we had legislated along that line.

Mr. BRYAN. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely I do not understand this matter at all. We will take it in a city of 25,000, we will say, or 10,000, and as a rule they have one or more branch offices in the city. There are a good many in this city. Exactly what does the Senator's amendment contemplate, in a few words?

Mr. BRYAN. Here in Washington, if this were not the Capital and if the accounting were done by the main office, it would account for the branches and for all the fourth-class postmasters in a certain territory, and the department would hold the main office accountable for the stock furnished them—the stamp account, stamped paper, and the supplies generally. It is set forth that they will have in the Post Office Department here less than 100,000 accounts, whereas they now have to account with each one of the 45,000 post offices, and the accounts run up into a million in number. The saving according to this estimate will be about a million dollars. It does not abolish any post offices. It authorizes the concentration of the accounts.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida what that question has to do with this bill? It seems to me that it belongs to the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Senator will notice immediately preceding page 119 there is a rearrangement of the help in the Post Office Department, including the auditors, and as this falls under the auditor's work the Post Office Department asked the committee to offer this amendment in connection with it.

Mr. WEEKS. It is pretty difficult to get the full import of what the amendment means. It gives the Postmaster General authority to appoint superintendents in the outside offices.

Mr. BRYAN. No; it does not do that. It would hold the postmaster at, say, Nashville, Tenn., to account to the Post Office Department for perhaps a dozen offices immediately around that city, if they were fourth class or below the second class, perhaps. It merely concentrates the bookkeeping. The postmaster of that city would take up the offices around in the outlying territory and the Post Office Department here would hold him responsible instead of the smaller offices.

Mr. WEEKS. What would the postmaster at Nashville have to do with these superintendents?

Mr. BRYAN. It places the burden on him. Here is what it would do. I will read the memorandum.

[Memorandum for the Postmaster General.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1917.

The following changes in the system of postal accounting, involving a reduction in the number of accounting offices, is respectfully recommended. It is believed that the installation of the proposed system would result in more effective administrative supervision at the smaller post offices, insure better postal service to the public, and provide a more efficient system of accounting.

PRESENT SYSTEM.

In the fiscal year 1916 the postal revenues amounted to $312,057,683.83, and the receipts from money orders issued $765,722,336.80, making a grand total of $1,077,780,025.63.

On January 1, 1917, there were 55,610 post offices in operation, of which 45,393 were fourth class. There were also approximately 7,000 branches and stations which serve the public in the same manner as regular post offices. It is generally admitted that the service at branches and stations is more efficient than at the average fourth-class post office, because they are under the immediate supervision of the postmaster at a near-by office, and cases of incompetency, neglect of duty, or improper conduct are speedily disclosed and remedied. A fourth-class postmaster is accountable to the department at Washington direct, and there is no personal supervision except through the occasional visit of a Post Office inspector, who on account of the multiplicity of their duties seldom visit the smaller offices. The department has no other means of keeping informed as to the character of the service which the postmaster subsequently renders except through the medium of correspondence, complaints on the part of the public, and reports from the Auditor for the Post Office Department relative to the nonrendition of accounts or failure to deposit surplus postal and money-order funds.

The present system of accounting is not satisfactory, because it necessitates the preparation and settlement of more than a million monthly and quarterly accounts annually, many of them from postmasters at the smaller offices who are unfamiliar with the preparation of accounts. It also involves the transmission through the mails of approximately 5,000,000 separate remittances of surplus funds, many of them consisting of only a few dollars. Not only does the maintenance of such a cumbersome system materially augment the clerk-hire cost, but it likewise necessitates the holding of larger money-order reserves at these offices, thereby increasing the liability of loss by fires and burglaries.

PROPOSED SYSTEM.

It is recommended that the larger post offices be designated as "accounting offices," and that all stocks of postage stamps, stamped paper, money-order forms, and supplies be sent to them direct for distribution to the smaller, nonaccounting post offices, in the same manner as at stations in the larger cities. The postmasters at the nonaccounting offices would report direct to the accounting postmasters, deposit their surplus funds, and receive their supplies from him daily, weekly, or as often as local conditions might require. Under this plan the stocks of money-order forms, stamps, and other supplies could be reduced to a fraction of the amount now carried, and thereby decrease the liability for loss on account of thefts, etc. As postmasters at the larger offices are almost invariably selected from the ranks of successful business men of demonstrated executive ability, there can be no doubt that their advice and supervision would result in an immediate and marked improvement in the character of the service rendered to the general public at the smaller offices. That the system of accounting outlined is feasible is demonstrated by the fact that the larger post offices render the accounts for the stations and branches in this manner now. The postmaster and the service at the nonaccounting office could be continued as at present, the change involved being the matter of accounting, with the benefit which would result from the supervision of the postmaster at the accounting office.

SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTING AT POST OFFICES.

Each of the 55,610 postmasters renders a stamp account and a postal account at the close of each quarter. In my opinion, it would be a marked advantage to consolidate these accounts, and require the accounting postmaster to render a monthly account, and thereby make it possible for the department to complete the settlements and compile a financial statement covering the fiscal operations of the Postal Service within 30 days after the close of each month, and in time to be utilized by the various officers of the department in the administration of the service. Under this plan the number of accounts to be settled would be reduced from a million to less than one hundred thousand annually.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXAMINATION OF ACCOUNTS.

The administrative examination and summarizing of accounts, which has operated so successfully with respect to expenditures for mail transportation and supplies, representing annual payments of $100,000,000, and revenue collections on account of stamps and stamped paper totaling upward of $277,000,000, could be extended to the combined monthly stamp and postal accounts of postmasters.

MONEY-ORDER ACCOUNTS.

The audit of postmasters' money-order accounts presents a radically different problem from that encountered in any other class of Government accounts, due to the fact that money orders are valid for payment for 12 months from the last day of the month of issue. It follows, therefore, that a postmaster's money-order account can not be finally audited until all orders issued by him have either been presented for payment and returned as vouchers or become invalid by lapse of time. Obviously, under such conditions it would be impracticable to make a double examination of money-order accounts—once in the Post Office Department and again in the Treasury Department. After thorough consideration, I have reached the conclusion that the system worked out by the Dockery Commission, after months of investigation and study, and subsequently enacted into law, is still the best solution of that problem. Moreover, the findings of that commission are further strengthened by reason of the introduction of automatic electric machinery, which has to a large extent eliminated the human element in the audit, cut the cost in half, and placed it on a plane of almost absolute mechanical accuracy.

FINAL AUDIT AND SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

As outlined, the proposed system contemplates that postmasters at accounting offices shall forward a consolidated monthly account to the Post Office Department direct for administrative examination and summarizing, after which the accounts, copies of the journals, and all supporting vouchers, pay rolls, and abstracts shall be sent to the Auditor for the Post Office Department for final audit and settlement. While I am not in position to estimate the economies which would undoubtedly result in post offices and in the Post Office Department if the proposed amendment is adopted, the expense of auditing in this office would be reduced by at least a quarter of a million dollars annually.

CHAS. A. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think there is some virtue in providing a central reservoir to furnish supplies to outlying post offices, and I should think there might be some saving in the amount of stock carried at the small offices; but if this proposition contemplates giving the postmaster at the central office any authority over the appointment or removal or having anything to do with any of the employees of the postmasters in the subordinate offices, I am opposed to it.

Mr. BRYAN. It does not. I will say to the Senator, it has no such purpose in view. It is simply designed to let the accounting of the smaller offices be done at a central office, so that the department here would have a less number of accounts to go through and examine. The postmaster who furnishes the supplies would do that at the central office.

Mr. WEEKS. I understand the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question. This amendment, as I understand, is based on the theory that it will work an economy, and I hope it will; but it has occurred to me that it will necessitate a great many additional employees in the accounting offices throughout the country, and that possibly the saving will not be very great. Furthermore, it seems to me that they have certainly got quite an efficient system of accounting here, or they ought to have, where it is concentrated; and they can take care of it, I should think, much better than to have the various offices throughout the country taking care of the accounts.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, the smaller offices then would get their stamp supplies and their forms from near-by offices.

Mr. JONES. I understand that.

Mr. BRYAN. And the office of the auditor would only check up the main office from which the supplies were furnished.

Mr. JONES. I understand that; but when it comes to economy, the offices throughout the country that furnish the supplies to the outlying offices will have an additional burden imposed on them, and they will come here for additional help.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know as to that. Here is a memorandum handed me just a while ago by the chief clerk of the Post Office Department. It says:

[Memorandum for Senator BRYAN.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 24, 1917.

The Postmaster General has asked me to say to you that you may state to the Senate that if the amendment which you are to offer on the floor, providing for the establishment of nonaccounting post offices, is enacted into law the resulting economy to the Government will approximate the increased amount called for in the legislative bill, under the Smoot amendment, viz, $564,561.50, and at the same time immeasurably increase the efficiency of the service.

W. I. DENNING, Chief Clerk.

Mr. JONES. I can see how it will make a saving to a certain extent in the office here in Washington City, but I should like to know whether or not the department has taken into account or made any estimate as to the additional employees throughout the country which such a provision as this will require?

Mr. BRYAN. In the memorandum which I read a few moments ago they said they would save a quarter of a million dollars in the office in Washington, and that they would save three-quarters of a million dollars in the country.

Mr. JONES. How will they save that in the country?

Mr. BRYAN. But evidently from this memorandum they would not save that much, because this is a little less than $600,000 all told.

Mr. JONES. I do not see how they are going to save very much throughout the country. It seems to me they will require additional employees throughout the country, because the offices that are made the central accounting offices are going to come in and ask for more help. They are going to say it makes additional work when they have to look after these offices; that they must have an additional clerk, or possibly more than that; and instead of bringing about economy outside of Washington, it seems to me that it will make more expense outside. I am not going to make any point of order myself against the amendment, but it does seem to me that it will not save much.

Mr. WEEKS. I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill. I think it should be taken up by the Post Office Committee and considered there.

Mr. BRYAN. We are considering the item for the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and I think I can offer the amendment in such a form as to bring it within the rule.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose we let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WEEKS. In addition to the amendment not being germane, it seems to me it is general legislation.

Mr. BRYAN. I think perhaps it is subject to that point.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not wish to interfere with anything that will mean real economy.

Mr. BRYAN. Suppose we let it go over until to-morrow morning. I will publish in the RECORD the memorandum from the chief clerk of the department, and the Senator can read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is done I should like to repeat the inquiry I made of the Senator from Florida. The Senator is always frank, and I take what he says unreservedly when it is as to a question of fact. I ask the Senator if this amendment contemplates the abolition of postmasterships in cities and the establishment of a system by counties or otherwise, with clerks in the place of postmasters. I have been told in the last 10 minutes that that is exactly what will occur under this amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. I asked the Postmaster General that very question, and he said "no"; that he had no such idea in contemplation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That has been agitated, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BRYAN. He said that this amendment was not intended to accomplish that purpose at all, but was merely designed to bring about economy in accounting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. If this amendment is adopted and there is one postmaster appointed, and he is the postmaster of the district and all others are suboffices, the clerks in the suboffice under the central office would not have to be appointed through the civil service. There is nothing in the law that would compel that.

Mr. BRYAN. The clerks in what office?

Mr. SMOOT. The suboffice that is under the post office that is to be reported to.

Mr. BRYAN. They are fourth-class postmasters, and they would make their own reports.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, why would not the postmaster appointed in a city, we will say, be over all the other suboffices within a given district, which would report to the postmaster in the city. They are fourth-class postmasters to-day, but will they be fourth-class postmasters if the amendment is agreed to? Will they not be merely clerks at the other offices, and will not those offices be suboffices and, therefore, not under civil service?

Mr. BRYAN. That amounts to the same thing the Senator from New Hampshire asked me. I asked the Postmaster General in regard to that, and he said that was not the purpose at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been informed that that would be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. The letter that I have published in the RECORD states that the purpose is to simplify the accounting by having the accounting done in central offices, as to the stamps furnished, the forms, and various kinds of books, and the post office in the center will keep the run of the accounts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand the amendment goes over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment goes over.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] desires an executive session. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is not present, but I presume he would like to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate; and I ask that that be done.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 25, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-living God, in whom we live and move and have our being, forgive, we beseech Thee, our sins and cleanse us from all guile, that we may stand in Thy holy presence with clean hands and pure heart, receive the assurance of Thy blessing, be guided by Thy wisdom, upheld by Thy strength, and reflect Thy love in thought and deed after the splendid example of the world's great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday——

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BAILEY. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the national revenue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the national revenue. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will call the committees.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

When the Committee on Foreign Affairs was called,

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum of the House is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-five gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Edwards	Jones	Oliver
Barchfeld	Fairchild	Kahn	Patten
Beakes	Finley	Kennedy, Iowa	Pou
Beales	Flynn	Kiess, Pa.	Pratt
Bennet	Foster	Lafean	Ragsdale

Davenport	Haugen	Mooney	Winslow
Davis, Minn.	Henry	Moss	Woodyard
Davis, Tex.	Hill	Nelson
Driscoll	Hinds	Norton
Dupré	Humphreys, Miss.	Oldfield

The SPEAKER. On this vote 340 Members responded to their names, a quorum.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. There is a bill (H. R. 19944) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to acquire, by purchase, certain lands embraced within the battlefield of Gettysburg, and making appropriation therefor. In some way it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and clearly it ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7644. An act to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Wichita Falls, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Commerce.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On January 18, 1916:

S. 6864. An act providing for the continuance of the Osage Indian School, Oklahoma, for a period of one year from January 1, 1917.

On January 19, 1917:

S. J. Res. 186. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River; and

S. J. Res. 194. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur March 1, 1917, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 7644. An act to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Wichita Falls, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DIVERSION OF WATER OF THE NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to call up the bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is improperly on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to authorize private persons and corporations to divert water from the Niagara River above the Falls in the United States for the purpose of generating power, electric or mechanical. It is not a proposition involving a tax or charge upon the people. It does not touch appropriations of money or property. It does not require such appropriations to be made. It does not authorize payments out of appropriations already made. It is not relieving any liability to the United States for money or property or referring any claim to the Court of Claims. The only theory that I can conceive on which this bill should be placed on the Union Calendar is that it touches the grant of property of the United States or that it relates to a tax or charge upon the people.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This bill, when it was reported to the House, was placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman is mistaken. The bill as reported was placed on the House Calendar. I believe it was changed to the Union Calendar in the House. If it was changed from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar in the House, I do not think the point of order would lie against that, because the change was made by the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman I am not advised on that point as to the change of reference of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The bill as reported to the House was printed. A copy of the bill, which was printed January 15, 1917, was referred to the House Calendar in order to be printed. Now, I think there was a change of reference to the calendar made in the House itself and a day or two after that; but if so, no point of order will lie against it, because that is action taken by the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think so. I think it will, but the first thing we ought to consider is the circumstances under which that change was made. I have no information on that subject. Now, if it was changed by unanimous consent a certain situation is presented, but if in an unauthorized manner another situation would be presented.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the fact is. I do not know of any way it can be changed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I assume, Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the wrong calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must assume the bill is on the right calendar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then the question of change to another calendar is irrelevant, and it is unnecessary to discuss it. I want to take up these things in logical order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, here is what the RECORD shows: January 12, 1917, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed; January 15, 1917, referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed; January 16, 1917, ordered stricken from the House Calendar and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed. On page 1517 of the RECORD the RECORD shows that it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I inquire whether it actually appeared in the printed House Calendar as being on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It did.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. On that point I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that the House by unanimous consent can not, so far as Calendar Wednesday is concerned, put a bill on a calendar that it does not belong on. If the bill is now on the wrong calendar, it can not be called up. Calendar Wednesday was created for a certain purpose; that is, to call up bills on certain calendars. Now, if a bill is not on one of those calendars, whether it may have been put off by unanimous consent or not, is not the controlling factor. The point is, where is the bill now when it is sought to be called up. Is it on the right calendar? Is it on the calendar which gives it a place of privilege? That is the issue, it seems to me, we have to decide. I submit that it is not on such a calendar, and therefore is not within the rule providing for Calendar Wednesday and which gives it privilege.

Mr. Speaker, this rule requiring bills to be put on a calendar is for a purpose; that purpose is to give Members notice that a certain bill will be called up. Now, if this bill ought to be on the House Calendar and is not there, Members who wanted to be heard on the bill have had no chance to be heard, have had no notice it would be called up. Hence it would be improper to call it up.

The SPEAKER. Has it not been on the printed calendar? What other notice could there be?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It must be on to-day's calendar, not that it was there a few days ago or could have been on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. But it has been on the Union Calendar, and has been there for several days.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If I may be allowed to proceed with that point as a secondary point, it is on the wrong calendar, and can not be treated as being on any calendar.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt the authority of the House to refer to any calendar by motion?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do, unless it is on Calendar Wednesday. We may, by unanimous consent, on Calendar Wednesday proceed with a bill in any way we choose, but the rule is mandatory, and requires that a bill shall be in a certain position when it is called up, and if it is not in that position it may be objected to; and the point I am making is that this bill is not in that position.

Mr. MANN. The House has the authority, if given the right to make the motion, to refer it to any calendar or any committee. The House can refer any bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When it does that the bill loses the privilege to come up on Calendar Wednesday. It must be on Calendar Wednesday, in the position which the rule says it must be in; that is, on a certain calendar.

Mr. MANN. You can call up a bill on Calendar Wednesday either from the House or Union Calendar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman jumps from one point to another. As soon as I catch him on one he is off on another. I propose to deal with the suggestion as to whether that bill is now properly on any calendar at all. If it is on the wrong calendar, it can not be brought up. That is the position I take.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes that the House has no control over its own business.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I assume that the House has rules which guide it, and unless those rules are waived at the time they may be waived, they must be adhered to.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think that all the Members of the House have as much power as a rule?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They have it to-day, but they did not have it last week. They could not do away with the rule last week by unanimous consent. A Member might get on the floor and ask unanimous consent when only half a dozen Members are here, to dispense with all the rules of the House both for that day and all time to come. It seems to me such a position is utterly untenable.

Now, if the Speaker is of opinion that by the action taken in the House unanimous consent agreements, if any are made, would waive the question whether this bill be on one calendar or another, then I have nothing further to say. But if the Speaker be not of that opinion, then I will take up the question of whether it can be considered when it is on the wrong calendar.

The SPEAKER. The House has absolute control over its own business, and could by unanimous consent abolish every one of these rules in a minute and a half. It could put the bill on the Private Calendar if it wanted to.

Now, as to this Wednesday business, you take bills from the Union and House Calendars indiscriminately. So much for that.

Now, this bill ought to be on the Union Calendar, where it is. Section 6 of the bill says:

The Secretary of War, in granting any permit for the diversion of water under this act, shall include therein a provision requiring the payment to the United States of a reasonable annual charge, assessed on the basis of the quantity of water diverted.

That brushes the other points out of the way. The point of order is overruled.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I rise to ask for the correct reference of a bill. Here is a bill (H. R. 20410) to create a temporary building commission for the purpose of investigating all the public-building needs and methods of the United States in order to recommend a public-building policy. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I judge, inadvertently. It certainly ought to have gone to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reference——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we can not understand what is taking place.

The SPEAKER. It is House bill 20410, a bill to create a temporary building commission for the purpose of investigating all the public-building needs and methods of the United States in order to recommend a public-building policy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It appropriates $50,000. The Committee on Appropriations has as much jurisdiction over it as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It appropriates that much for the purpose of paying the expenses of the commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objected. That is the end of it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, that the reference be changed.

The SPEAKER. You have to make that motion by direction of your committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Very well. I will get a meeting of the committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ESCH, for seven days, on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein two memorials from the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, addressed to the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two memorials from the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF THE NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] been put to the House yet? He made some request.

The SPEAKER. He just simply called up his bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think he made some request.

The SPEAKER. These other gentlemen impigned on the scene with some motion or other. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the House resolves itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 20047, for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. Would he not consent that we take up, when we go into the committee, a proposition to extend the time or change the date mentioned in the joint resolution, which fixed March 4 next as the date for the expiration of the right to use that water for a year; meanwhile to consider a proposition to act upon the suggestions made before our committee by the Chief of Engineers and Col. Keller and the Secretary of War on this proposition day before yesterday?

Mr. FLOOD. I would not, Mr. Speaker. The conference committee changed the date of the joint resolution from the 4th of March to the 1st of July. The House and the Senate have agreed to that change. This bill has been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs for several years, and that committee considered it as carefully as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War or anyone else could have considered the proposition. I think it is but fair to this committee to lay it before the House now. I do not consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 20047, with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes, with Mr. ALEXANDER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20047, which the clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman frm Indiana [Mr. CLINE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, the subject matter of this bill came under the consideration of Congress in 1906, when President Roosevelt sent his message to the House recommending that the jurisdiction of the Niagara River as a navigable stream be taken charge of by the Federal Government. Certain information had reached the President that large diversions of water authorized by the State of New York and by the Dominion of Canada from the Niagara River had been made by granting franchises for generating electric power. In 1902 there was created an International Waterways Commission. In 1906, when the President sent his message to Congress he incorporated in that message a request by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that the International Waterways Commission should report to the House the condition existing at Niagara Falls with reference to the diversion of water from the Niagara River and its effect upon the scenic beauty of the Falls and upon the navigation of the connecting lakes as affected by the diversion.

That committee made its report on the 22d of March, and the request was complied with on the 22d of March by the International Waterways Commission, making a report which was followed by a message of the President in 1906, on the 27th of March, incorporating the report of the commission and making certain recommendations to Congress. The commission found that there had been authorized five great power companies at Niagara Falls to take certain amounts of water aggregating 60,900 cubic feet of water per second from the river above the Falls, setting out the amount that was apportioned to each company; also stated that that diversion would affect the scenic beauty of the Falls, lower the level in Lake Erie, and consequently affect navigation, and recommended some legislation be taken to prevent such large diversion.

The diversion authorized by the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada called for about 27 per cent of the amount of water going over the cataract. This condition alarmed the President, and he recommended that legislation be had along these lines. He also recommended that Congress recommend to the Secretary of State the negotiation of a treaty with Great Britain with relation to the diversion of the water from the international boundary line. He recommended that pending that negotiation, before a treaty could be made, Congress enact certain legislation temporarily to supply the necessities that would arise in the case and also to prevent undue deflection of the water.

In less than 100 days after that suggestion was made by President Roosevelt Congress passed a law, in 1906, known as the Burton law, setting out the amount of water that should be apportioned to the companies on this side of the river. The Burton Act was a temporary act and limited to three years, during which time it was expected that a treaty would be promulgated to take care of the situation.

The treaty was declared operative in 1910 on the 13th of May, and in the meantime the Burton Act had expired. Congress, recognizing the importance and the necessity of taking care of the situation, by resolution twice renewed the Burton Act. The Burton Act finally expired, I think, in 1913 or 1914, since which time there has been no direct legislation on the subject.

The Burton Act provided for the diversion of water to the amount of 15,600 cubic feet per second above the Falls. It provided that the Niagara Falls Power Co. should have 8,600 cubic feet, the Hydroelectric Manufacturing & Power Co. 6,500 cubic feet per second, and the Erie Canal 500 cubic feet per second, amounting in all to 15,600 cubic feet per second.

The power companies had already become organized and were diverting water at that time. They were organized about 1893 and began the development of electric current. I may say that one of those companies had been creating mechanical power at Niagara Falls for 60 years, a company known as the Shellcroft Co. As soon as electricity began to be developed this company participated in the development of electric power. At that time there was a small population at Niagara Falls—about five or six thousand people.

The development of two companies on this side of the river in conjunction with three on the other side of the river induced a larger population to come, until now there is a city of between 45,000 and 50,000 people located at Niagara Falls and engaged in some of the largest manufacturing enterprises in the United States. A great many electrochemical products are manufactured at Niagara Falls exclusively and used in all the manufacturing industries of the country. I mention that to show the great importance of the entire subject connected with the diversion of waters of Niagara River above the Falls and the use of electric current in manufacturing and for lighting purposes.

The Burton Act provided that there might be imported from Canada 160,000 horsepower. The treaty that was afterwards proclaimed provided for the diversion of 20,000 cubic feet per second on the American side, and 36,000 on the Canadian side. The Burton law limited, however, the diversion on the American side to 15,600 cubic feet per second. Of course, it had nothing to do with the diversion on the Canadian side, but the provision for the importation of electric current was based on the assumption that the American enterprises on this side would get the development of electricity on the other side because there was at that time more current created than the manufacturing industries of Canada could use.

In a short time after the Burton Act was passed there was appointed in Canada, or created in Canada, what is known as the Hydroelectric Commission, that had entire charge and jurisdiction of the development of electricity and its transmission. The Hydroelectric Commission of Canada having that authority provided that the diversion of waters of Niagara River on the Canadian side and the creation of electric current for exportation should be subject to the demand by Canadian authorities—that one-half of the current created could be withdrawn at any time for the benefit of Canadian enterprises.

Under the Burton bill there had been imported the largest amount at any one time, 180,000 horsepower. By the creation of the condition at Niagara Falls the demand became so great on the American side for horsepower that many enterprises located on this side formerly were obliged to go to the Canadian side to get the power they wanted. That demand increased so rapidly, Mr. Chairman, that the Hydroelectric Commission of Canada has withdrawn from export something like 75,000 horsepower, leaving about 110,000 horsepower now being used by the American side that is created on the Canadian side and imported over here. Connected with this question has been the interest of the State of New York as a State, as a sovereignty, and whatever rights it has in the development of electric power. On the other hand, the civic associations of the country were protesting against the use of the water for manufacturing purposes upon the theory that it affected the scenic beauty of the Falls.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs have had this bill or similar bills under consideration for the last 4 or 5 years. They have thrown the subject open to a thorough investigation, and all the parties who desired to be heard upon this subject have been heard. Consequently the committee report the bill now under consideration. I will not take very much time in explaining the provisions of the bill, because they are very fully set out in the report accompanying it.

The first question was to determine who should have the right to divert water, and under what circumstances it should be diverted. Something like $60,000,000 of capital have been invested by the power companies in the manufacture of electricity at Niagara Falls on the American side. There have also been located on the American side manufacturing enterprises with a capital of something like $50,000,000. Electrical power is now very extensively used in western New York. The city of Buffalo and towns and villages in the State of New York within a radius of 50 miles of Niagara Falls are dependent upon the electricity generated on the American side and imported from the Canadian side to keep their business going. Numerous petitions have been sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, showing the necessity for larger diversions of water, insisting that the full amount of 20,000 cubic feet per second be granted to these power companies; that is, that we should authorize the use of 4,400 cubic feet more, or the difference between 15,600 cubic feet and the 20,000 cubic feet authorized under the treaty.

The committee, after careful consideration of the subject and after some personal investigation, concluded that the diversion of the additional 4,400 cubic feet would not affect the scenic beauty of the Falls to their detriment, and that considering the need for more power now existing at Niagara Falls, the diversion of this additional 4,400 feet is necessary. I may say that the American users of imported power have been notified that there will be withdrawn from exportation 50,000 horsepower more by the 1st of June. The committee have drawn this bill with the intention of being absolutely fair to the power companies and fair to the people.

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. CLINE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I think there are a good many Members on the floor of the House who feel that this power is wasted, that it ought to be utilized, and I think they would go to the extent of utilizing it beyond the point of destruction of the scenic beauty. That is the thing that concerns me. I am afraid of that tendency. These gentlemen say that the Lord has put that power there for use, and that only a few people see the scenic beauty of the Falls. I am concerned as to whether this legislation will endanger the beauty of the Falls.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to my friend from Ohio that the committee have been very much concerned over that proposition, and with possibly one or two exceptions on the committee they believe that the diversion of 4,400 feet more will not disastrously or seriously affect the scenic beauty of the Falls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CLINE. The committee incorporated in this bill one of its most important sections, seeking to have the water that is diverted from the Niagara River used to its highest efficiency. One of the companies at Niagara Falls secures 10 horsepower per cubic foot from the water diverted. Another company taking water at the same point and returning it to the river at the same point that its competitor does develops 20 horsepower per cubic foot. The committee believe that parties taking water from this great reservoir ought to be required to secure the very largest possible efficiency that can be developed. For instance, one power company takes 8,600 cubic feet per second and develops about 90,000 horsepower. If it developed the same amount of horsepower that its competitor does it would develop 163,000 horsepower from the same amount of water.

Mr. FESS. And what it does not develop is an actual waste of power?

Mr. CLINE. So the result is that this power company is taking from the Niagara River more than 300,000,000 cubic feet every 24 hours, from which it derives no benefit, and from which the manufacturers receive no benefit. The policy of the committee is to require that company to develop that power for the benefit of western New York and its great manufacturing enterprises, and I will say to my friend and to the committee that the company propose to do that.

Mr. FESS. Does this bill require it?

Mr. CLINE. This bill requires that, and the company has already set aside a sinking fund variously estimated at from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 for the purpose of complying with the requirements of this bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Have the American enterprises ever drawn as much as 20,000 cubic feet per second from the river?

Mr. CLINE. American enterprises have never drawn 20,000 cubic feet until the 17th day of this month under the special permit, and that is for special purposes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not think, and the committee did not think, that if this maximum were used it would seriously or disastrously destroy the scenic beauty of the Falls. Does the gentleman think it will destroy it to any extent?

Mr. CLINE. Not to any visual extent. Theoretically, of course, it will. I want to say this one further word in reply to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]: The difficulty experienced by these two companies arises from the fact that one company takes the water from the river, drops it down 130 feet through its penstocks onto the wheels, and then carries it a mile and dumps it back into the river, losing in its tailrace 80 or 90 feet of fall that it ought to utilize, while the corresponding company takes the water and carries it to the place where it proposes to return it to the river and there drops it into its penstocks with a fall of about 212 feet, and consequently gets the benefit of that additional fall.

I say that the purpose of this bill is to correct those conditions and to supply to the people of Niagara Falls and the vicinity all of the power that could be generated from the use of that much water.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is there anything in this bill or in existing law that definitely defines what are State rights, what are the Federal rights, and the rights of the riparian owners?

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that the position of the committee is that when the Federal authority takes jurisdiction of a water power or of a navigable river that authority supersedes the rights of all riparian owners and whatever rights the State has. That is, the Federal Government will not divide its jurisdiction in a question of this kind with a State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a bad bill. It is a bill that the House ought not to adopt. It is one that if adopted we will spend a good deal of our time hereafter regretting.

I wish there was time in which to discuss this bill fully before the membership of the House. There are many serious defects in it. A half hour is wholly inadequate to point them out.

This bill is on the Union Calendar, but it ought to be on the Private Calendar. The title of it, "To regulate the diversion of water from Niagara River," is misleading. It ought to be entitled "A bill to grant for all time the water power of Niagara Falls to exploiting companies that have enjoyed that benefit for the last 20 years." That would, at least, be candid and advise the House in respect to the nature of the measure.

Twenty years or more ago the generation of electric power at Niagara Falls was entered into by the Hydraulic Power Co. and by the Niagara Falls Power Co. They were granted all the rights they asked for by the State of New York. They acted upon the theory that a riparian owner could do whatever he pleased. They have diverted the water as they pleased down to this very good day, and have never paid the State of New York one cent, except in the way of ordinary taxes, and have never paid the National Government one cent. In every measure that has been passed by Congress the rights of these two generating companies, these two exploiters of the people of western New York, have been carefully safeguarded. The Burton Act provided that only these same two companies should be permitted to use water under it. In the resolutions which were passed extending that act, every time it was provided that only those two companies should be permitted to continue to use the water or should have any advantage from it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In a moment. The other day, when we passed a resolution on the subject, we carefully provided that the water must be taken by those who are now using it. We might as well have mentioned in that resolution the names of the Hydraulic Power Co. and the Niagara Falls Power Co., and we might just as well put those names in this bill and give them exclusive privileges at Niagara Falls, for by the construction of this bill we have made it impossible for any other person or concern to come in and get a permit. This bill is so framed that it is absolutely impossible that there should be any competition with these two concerns. The other day the attorney for one of these concerns, after having given careful consideration to the bill, and having objected to some of the provisions that have been forced into it by amendment in committee, remarked to a member of the committee, "There is one thing about this bill; you have fixed it so that nobody can get any benefit out of these Falls except the two companies that are now getting it." That was at least candid; and I want to say to you that nobody who has made a study of this bill can for a moment doubt that statement. You are perpetuating concerns which have no right to be perpetuated; you are perpetuating a privilege which has never been granted by the people of the United States; you are making permanent the ownership and control of rights which have been usurped and which have been grossly abused.

I say these rights and privileges have been abused by these two companies. Why do I say that? Because they have been allowed to do just as they pleased for the last 20 years. They have been allowed to sell power to whomsoever they chose to sell it; they have been allowed to charge whatever they wanted to charge; they have been allowed to discriminate among consumers at will; they have abused these great privileges with the utmost tyranny toward the people of western New York.

I do not represent anybody in western New York. They have their Representatives here; able, and no doubt they have their own views about this matter, and I do not cavil with them. But I have heard voices from western New York. Still, small voices have come to me; the voice of the inarticulate mass of the people of western New York has come to me to plead against the perpetuation of this exploitation. I may not have heard the majority voice. Perhaps it is the minority voice. You know, a man is like a wireless-telegraph system. He hears what he is tuned to hear. Just as the installation must be tuned to gather a certain message, so must the man be tuned to gather a certain message. I have been tuned to gather the message of the exploited class; I have been tuned to gather the message of the masses of the people; I have been tuned to gather the voice of the man who has no newspaper, of the man who uses current in a small way, of the man who toils, of the man who has corns on his hands. I want to say to you that if you are tuned to catch that kind of a voice you can not give your vote in favor of this bill.

This bill purports to deal with the Niagara River above the Falls. Some of you gentlemen perhaps do not know that there is just about as much power possibility below the Falls as there is above the Falls. The fall from the foot of the Falls to Lake Ontario is about 100 feet. There are vast possibilities in the way of power development in the lower part of the river. This bill deals with the upper part of the river. It makes it impossible that permittees under this bill should develop that power with the greatest head, with the greatest efficiency.

It makes it impossible for them to develop the power at the greatest efficient head. Over on the American side we are now developing power, one of the companies, at a 212-foot head, and the other, I think, at a 140-foot head. On the Canadian side they are just about to install a development at 305-foot efficient head. That means something. Every foot you allow water to fall adds one-eleventh of a horsepower for each cubic second-foot to the power that may be generated. We are fixing it in this bill so that there can be no efficient development on the American side. We are fixing it so that this water will have to be turned back into the river, and if there be any development below the Falls the water will have to be taken out again, carried through tunnels at vast expense, and then dropped into Lake Ontario with much of the power lost. Why should that be done? Because there are two concerns there whose interests we have to protect. That is why we should do it. Because there are concerns there already with installations that are employed to develop electric power and therefore it will not do that we should provide that full 305 feet or more in order to get this power for the benefit of the public.

I was amused by one statement in the majority report filed on this bill. It says this:

> Every phase of the situation has been patiently and carefully considered, and in the opinion of the committee the provisions of the accompanying bill do no violence to any interest, and fully conserve, promote, and protect the rights of the United States, the State of New York, the companies operating at the Falls, and of the users and consumers of electric current, and yet preserve the scenic beauty of the Falls.

The committee says in its report that this bill "protects the rights of those who are operating" at the Falls. I insist that these concerns have no right which should be protected. Congress has never granted them any rights, but for 20 years they have sat there and taken toll from the people and overcharged them for current and discriminated and abused their privileges and have heaped up their millions, and they have been more than paid back every cent that they ever invested in their plants. One of those concerns has a vast capitalization that is all water, not a single dollar of real money invested in the capital stock, and every year they pay 8 per cent on all their millions of water in addition to the 5 or 6 per cent to the bondholders. They have got $5,000,000 hoarded up in their treasury. They have hoarded up their money until they have a surplus of $5,000,000 in their treasury out of unjust and outrageous charges.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it not a fact the State of New York gave them the right to construct and use the water before the United States Government ever took jurisdiction over the subject?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will answer the gentleman. The State of New York gave those people anything they asked for. The State of New York attempted to give the same rights in reference to these waters as it has given away elsewhere in the same State. Only the other day the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Long Sault, and so forth, Co. against Call, held that no State had authority or power to grant any rights in a navigable stream; that it had no right whatever to do it; that such a grant was absolutely void; that the States only controlled navigable streams in trust for the people and could not grant them away, but must manage them as trustees.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield? I wanted to refer to the decision. I think the gentleman misapprehends the effect of the decision.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I must ask the gentleman not to interrupt me. The gentleman undoubtedly will have time in which he can expatiate on the decision. The gentleman knows lawyers differ sometimes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have the decision in my hand.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I suppose that gives the gentleman a correct interpretation of it. I have also held it in my hand. [Laughter.] There is not time sufficient to discuss this bill as fully as it ought to be. It is full of faults. You can drive a four-horse team through it in a dozen places. But I want to talk to you and show how these companies have treated the people of western New York in their charges. They are imposing upon them. They are not giving them a square deal.

The schedule rates for power on the American side range up from $20 per horsepower. I got these figures from the New York Public Service Commission. From that figure it runs up to 8 cents per kilowatt hour. Now, on the Canadian side what do we find? We find the electrical situation over there is under the control of a public commission, a commission which is not trying to make any profit out of the people, but which buys 100,000 horsepower from Canadian hydroelectric concerns, who are right across the river from the American developers, at $9 per horsepower. On the American side the companies are selling power at a minimum of $20 per horsepower.

Mr. SNYDER. That is $20 per horsepower per year?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. On the other side, right across the river, they are selling at $9 per horsepower. This Canadian commission is delivering that power to 100 or more municipalities in Ontario at prices which are shockingly low when we compare them with the prices being charged on the American side.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman what the charge per horsepower is in Alabama on the Coosa River project?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They charge all the traffic will bear.

Mr. AUSTIN. Give us the figures.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They charge anything they like.

Mr. AUSTIN. Can not the gentleman give us the figures? It is in his State.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I can not give them exactly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us have the benefit of that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is not the question that is before us.

Mr. AUSTIN. But the gentleman is comparing the Canadian price to that which is being charged on this side.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I said they charge all the traffic will bear. I can not be more specific than that.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is indefinite and not specific.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much is it? Tell us.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not know. I tell you that they charge all the traffic will bear.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What locality are these gentlemen talking about?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Coosa River, in Alabama.

On the Canadian side at Niagara, following our example, about 15 years ago the Government granted to the Ontario Power Co., Canadian-Niagara Falls Power Co., and Electrical Development Co. the right to divert water for power purposes, and these concerns started out upon the same general plans which had previously been followed on the American side. However, they have not been permitted to continue in that fashion.

In 1905 the Legislature of Ontario incorporated the Hydroelectric Power Commission as a public cooperative agency, with authority to purchase or generate power and to transmit the same for distribution among Ontario cities and towns at cost. Under this plan 99 communities in Ontario are now being served.

While authorized to construct works for generating power, the Canadian commission considered it proper to respect the investments of the existing generating companies. There were already three companies with generating plants on the Canadian side having quantities of power available for sale, so that the commission, not desiring to interfere with them, followed the course of asking those companies to bid to supply it with power at a price which would protect their bondholders and shareholders. As the result a contract was entered into with the Ontario

Power Co. for 100,000 horsepower for 30 years at $9 per horsepower.

The entire 100,000 horsepower was not used at the beginning. It was to be delivered at the bus bar of the company to the commission. The latter constructed transmission lines to various cities as they accepted the plan and the amount of power increased each year until at present when the entire 100,000 horsepower is being taken. In addition to this the Canadian commission is generating power at Severn, Wasdells, and Eugenia Falls, and has six plants in operation in the "Trent."

The most recent report of the commission to which I have access is for the year ended October 31, 1915, and my facts are taken very largely from it.

The commission is purchasing power at $9 per horsepower from the Ontario Power Co., at Niagara, and is generating it directly at the other points mentioned. It is being transmitted practically all over Ontario, almost every city and town being supplied. The power is sold to the municipalities at cost plus the expenses of the commission and an amortization charge based on a 30-year plan. The municipalities own their own distributing systems and sell the power to consumers substantially at cost.

At the date of the report referred to the commission had assets of $12,900,000, practically all of which consisted of its works. The cities had, together, $17,600,000, consisting of reserves of $3,400,000 and their distributing systems.

Over on the American side, at Buffalo, one-fourth of the distance from the point of generation that Toronto is, they are charging $20 to $200 per horsepower, and the basis is 8 cents a kilowatt hour. It is a sliding scale that goes down to about 4 cents. The price on the American side is more than double what is being charged in Canada. And this does not apply to the city of Toronto alone. There are 99 cities in Ontario that are getting the benefit of this system. Toronto consumers before the cooperative system was instituted paid 8 cents for domestic current and——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In just a moment. In 1915——

Mr. AUSTIN. Give us the technical terms. Is that per kilowatt?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to be interrupted by the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. I just wanted you to straighten it out.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The city of Toronto, with a population of 470,000, received power at $14 per annual horsepower and in turn charged consumers 3.9 cents per kilowatt hour for domestic and 2.8 cents for commercial current. Toronto consumers before the cooperative system was instituted had paid 8 cents for domestic and 12 cents for commercial current. During 1915 in Toronto alone $1,393,000 was saved to consumers by the cooperative system. Toronto uses 100-watt lamps for street lighting; they cost $8 per annum, figuring 74 cents per capita for street lighting.

The city of Hamilton has 101,000 population. Its power cost is $14 per horsepower. Its 100-watt street lights cost $8 per annum. It sells domestic power at 3.7 cents per kilowatt hour and commercial power at 1.9 cents. The previous rate was 8 cents, and over $250,000 was saved to its consumers in 1915 alone.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's statement has furnished me with the information I desired.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. London, with a population of 56,000, pays 55 cents per capita for street lighting. It sells power to domestic users at 2.4 cents and to commercial users at 3 cents. The previous rate was 9 cents per kilowatt hour. London saved its consumers $263,000 in electric charges in 1915.

Windsor, with a population of 22,000, has a higher rate on account of its great distance from the point of generation. It pays $38 per horsepower for power and distributes it at 4.9 cents per kilowatt hour to domestic users and 3.9 cents for commercial use. Its previous rate was 12 cents for domestic and 8 cents for commercial use. Windsor street lighting costs $1.39 per capita. During 1915, $35,800 was saved to Windsor users by the cooperative system.

The Canadian commission also supplies electric energy to farmers upon terms so cheap that they use it for thrashing, sawing wood, chopping ensilage, lighting, and other farm purposes. The average cost of current to farmers during 1915 was 5.5 cents per kilowatt hour.

In 1915 the Canadian commission served 120,000 different users. The lowest cost was 2.4 cents for domestic and 1.9 cents for commercial current. The average cost for all Ontario was 3.9 cents for domestic and 3.1 cents for commercial current. Prior to the beginning of the commission's operations the average cost of these same users was 9.8 cents for domestic and 10.4 cents for commercial power.

The demand for light and power under the just and economical methods of the commission is rapidly increasing. The commission is now installing a new plant at Chippewa and Queenston Heights. They will utilize the water remaining to Canada under the British treaty with an effective head of 305 feet, with the result that 300,000 horsepower additional will be produced.

THE AMERICAN WAY.

On the American side the Niagara Falls Power Co. is diverting water with only a 140-foot head, and is getting, as I am informed, only 11 horsepower per cubic foot. The Hydraulic Power Co. has a 212-foot head and get about 19 horsepower per cubic foot. These concerns at present take 15,600 cubic second-feet and there remains to us under the treaty 4,400 cubic second-feet.

The difference between power cost in Ontario and the prices charged on the American side is shocking. I have been able to learn of no American consumer who gets power for less than $16 per horsepower. This is the rate given to some of the big manufacturing concerns at Niagara. The lowest rate in Buffalo is $20 per horsepower, from which price the charge ranges to as high as $200 per horsepower. Buffalo users not of the favorite class take power upon a sliding scale, upon a basis of 8 cents per kilowatt hour with 1 cent off for prompt payment. This charge is double the charge in Toronto, which is more than three times farther from the point of generation.

I see no reason why we should not learn a lesson from Canada in the generation and distribution of hydroelectric energy. Why should we not have our own public agency to develop the available power at Niagara in the most efficient way, get the most energy we can out of the water we have, and sell it to our people on fair terms? Why should we allow a middleman's profit, or the profit of two or three middlemen, as the case may be?

The Niagara power generating and developing interests and their affiliations ramify through practically every big financial interest in America. Is not the arm of Congress strong enough despite the opposition of these interests to write a just and fair law for the development of Niagara power for the benefit of the people to whom it really belongs? Is it possible that we are to be forced to allow a private profit out of this great natural resource, the property of the people? Is the system so fixed on us that we must continue to allow the masses of the people, middle and small consumers, to be sweated and exploited by the rapacity of those who have fixed themselves at Niagara?

Mr. PLATT. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is done in Canada under State and not under the Federal Government. You are going to take away from the State of New York authority to do anything of that kind.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It does not make any difference whether the commission is created by the Federal Government or the government of one State. That has nothing to do with it. Under the Canadian system the Province of Ontario has the right to do this. The State of New York has not the right.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes; it has.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will please not interrupt me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The State of New York has not any right in this power nor has any other State. The United States of America controls that power, and we should create a commission, the Federal Government should create a commission, to see that the people of New York are no longer exploited by these private interests.

Mr. PLATT. The Public Service Commission of New York regulates it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why can we not do it here? Why should the United States be the most reactionary country in the world? Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a civilized nation on earth except the United States that considers it necessary to have a private go-between, a middleman, between a great natural resource such as Niagara is, and the man who takes the product of that resource. Not a country. It is done in England; it is done in Germany; it is done in France; and it is done in Canada. Why can we not do it here? Are we more conservative than they? Is it one of the accepted political principles of America that in no instance will we allow municipal ownership? Will we not under any circumstances allow the people who own the resources to get the benefit of them directly? Will we insist always on taking the resources and giving them to some grasping, rapacious middleman to use them to oppress the people?

What they have in Canada is in principle nothing more than municipal ownership, and that is what we ought to have in New York; that is what we ought to have at Niagara. We ought to have a district in western New York composed of the people who use this power, and they should be allowed to develop it for their own benefit without giving a profit to anybody.

Mr. TEMPLE. Do the municipalities or the Province or Dominion Government in Canada own the generating plants?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Canadian power commission, created by the legislature of Ontario, as I am informed, owns nine generating plants. Before the commission was created certain private corporations had been given rights at Niagara. That commission is not developing power itself at Niagara, but it is taking power from those developing concerns. But the commission is not confined in its activities to Niagara. There are other water powers in Ontario. At Port Arthur, 1,000 miles from Niagara, they have a plant owned and operated by this commission, generating hydroelectric power and selling it to the people at a price less than half what the people in Buffalo are getting it for.

Mr. TEMPLE. Do I understand that each one of the generating plants at Niagara on the Canadian side is a privately owned plant?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They are, but one of them sells to this commission at $9 per horsepower, and right across the river their American competitors are fleecing the people to the extent of a minimum price of $20 a horsepower, right in Niagara, delivered at the company's bus bar.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it not true that the same parties own the Ontario Power Co., on the Canadian side, that own one at least of the power companies on the American side?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Canadian Niagara Power Co. is owned by the same group of American capitalists from New York City that own the Niagara Falls Power Co. on the American side. Now, as to the Ontario Power Co. I have not specific information, but I have reason to think it is also owned by or affiliated with the same interests. It is all one thing. That is all it is. And I want to say this further, Mr. Chairman, right on that point——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In a moment. I want to say this, that these generating concerns, wherever you find them in the United States, are affiliated. They stand as one; they stand to keep the people from enjoying the benefit of their own natural resources. They keep a periodical going for the purpose of discounting and discouraging anything like municipal ownership and discrediting it and lying about it, trying to make out it is a failure. Whenever any effort is made in this House or in any other legislative body in the United States to provide for cooperative ownership it is met with the united opposition of all those concerns. Each one of them has its hand in the pockets of the people, and as a plunderbund they stand together for squeezing the people. Each one wants to guard his own interests first and then guard the interests of the rest of their crowd.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman tell how much any of these Canadian cities have lost in distributing this power?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They have lost nothing.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman tell us if these Canadian plants pay the Canadian Government anything for the use of the water with which they generate the power?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Those operating and generating concerns on the Canadian side, as I am informed, pay 75 cents a horsepower to a park commission, which uses the money received to beautify a park around the Falls.

Mr. DILLON. So that the Canadian Government does get some advantage from it?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They get it at $9 per horsepower, and the concern that gets the $9 pays the park commission 75 cents of it to beautify the park.

Mr. DILLON. Another question, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman give me the total amount which the Canadian Government is receiving from these various plants per year?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The amount is about 220,000 horsepower, so I am informed, and they get 75 cents per horsepower for the beautification of the surrounding country at Niagara Falls.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I wanted, before the gentleman finished, to have him state his attitude in regard to Government ownership of water-power projects. As I understand the gentleman's position, he is opposed to private water powers in general. Is that correct?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Most emphatically not. But at Niagara Falls, Mr. Chairman, where it is not an experiment—the demand for the power is there, the people live there, when the teeming millions of western New York are crying out for it, and when it is not an experiment in mechanical operation—where we know it will work, we know what it costs, and no chances are being taken on it, why should it be turned over to these private concerns that stake nothing, risk nothing, hazard nothing, in order that they may get the profit out of it? Unless a man is prepared to say, "I will never consent to the people owning and cooperatively managing the things they use"—unless a man takes that position, he ought not to oppose the public ownership at Niagara Falls.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many corporations are there between the water and the consumer of the electric current?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There are in some instances three, and never less than two.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And there are in all instances two.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, these generating concerns are not willing to take the trouble to fleece the people themselves. They do not do their own skinning. They farm out the business of skinning the people to intermediaries. The Buffalo General Electric Co. has that privilege in the city of Buffalo. They get that power at $16.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They get that power delivered at Buffalo at $16 per horsepower, a level amount of $16 per horsepower, and turn right around and sell it to the people of Buffalo at from $20 to $200 per horsepower.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. For information. Is the gentleman informed as to the amount of water taken from the Niagara River on the American side as compared with the amount taken on the Canadian side?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am. About 36,000 cubic feet per second is authorized to be taken on the Canadian side and on the American side 20,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. KREIDER. What treaty or relation is there between the United States and Canada that governs the amount of water that is taken from the river?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is the treaty provision. I have been trying to find out why the Canadians were allowed to take so much more water from the river than ourselves. It looks to me as if we had the right to take as much water from the river as they have. It is as much our water as it is theirs. I was under the impression that our allowance was affected by the Chicago drainage canal. But I learned yesterday that it was done in order to protect great vested interests; that the great United States of America had conceded to Canada 16,000 cubic second-feet of water more than we get in order to prevent competition with American interests, so that the Niagara companies might have a monopoly. That is another reason why we should wipe out this incubus that has fixed itself upon Niagara. Let us wipe out this selfish interest. It stands in the way of development. It stands in the way of justice and progress. Not only are we allowing these companies to exploit our own people, but to serve their interests we are conceding to the people of Canada rights that belong to us. We ought to denounce the treaty and get all the water that belongs to us, a fair division of the water of Niagara, and develop it for the benefit of our own people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Foreign Affairs took up the question of Niagara Falls water power nearly six years ago at the extra session which was called in 1910. Since that time we have had hearings, and many people, representing all interests, have appeared before the committee, and there are over 500 pages of hearings upon this Niagara Falls proposition. The committee wanted to protect the Government and to protect every interest concerning Niagara Falls. It found that the Government had not taken jurisdiction of the Niagara Falls situation early enough, that the National Government had taken no interest in the matter whatever, but that the State of New York, assuming that it had jurisdiction in the premises, had granted certain rights to certain individuals to take water from the Niagara River and to develop power. Certain men went in there at that time and put their money into a rather doubtful enterprise. To-day we can hardly realize that in those days it was doubtful. They invested somewhere around $50,000,000, two companies going in there, as they thought, upon a proper right, that granted them by the State of New York, the Government of the United States assuming no jurisdiction and apparently intending to assume no jurisdiction. Nothing was done by the National Government until President Roosevelt sent his water-power message to Congress, and then the Government took jurisdiction in the premises, Congress passed the Burton resolution and began to consider the question of diversion of the water at Niagara Falls. We must remember that there are many interests involved. There is not only the question of the development of the power, but the question whether the scenic beauty of Niagara will be destroyed or in anywise lessened. Then there is the question as to the great towns and cities which have grown up around this power plant and the great industries that have grown up, which, because of certain recent inventions, have begun to manufacture articles that go into commerce, which have made these various manufacturing enterprises more beneficial to the public and more profitable to those interested. I am also told that there is involved the manufacture of an article which goes into the drinking water that supplies some 400 towns and cities in this country. So the problem has grown into an immense one, and a very complicated one. It is not, as my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] would say, that you can dismantle the plant and that somebody else can come in and take those rights if they can get them. It has grown into one of those things which must be either owned by the Government or regulated by the Government and thus placed under Government control. It has grown to such proportions that you can not say to somebody, "If you will give us a certain price for the water you may come in and take it." It takes years to construct these plants. It takes considerable time to develop the companies to supply the electricity.

The gentleman from Alabama goes into the question of subsidiary companies, and says that these power companies do not supply the current directly to the consumer. That is very true in many instances. In various towns along the border other electric companies have grown up as distributing companies. They have secured the right to distribute to consumers in the various cities and towns in which they have been incorporated, and if a new company were to come in there and try to get the right to erect poles or to put in subways and go into competition with the established companies, they would find it absolutely impossible to do so. You must have the supply companies in order to distribute the current.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman will defer his question until later, and make a note of what he wishes to ask me, I will endeavor to answer it.

Now, after holding all these hearings, discussing the whole proposition in committee and having the various individuals before us, we have finally drafted what we believe to be a complete bill, or as complete as we could possibly make it. In that bill, on page 2, we say that any State in which the power is furnished may have control over it; so that the passage of this bill does not affect the control of any State wherein electric energy is distributed, but that State may control its distribution and control the price; and a State like New York, having a great public-service commission, ought to be able to say to these companies what they shall charge, how the power shall be distributed, and where it shall be distributed. If the States do not do it, certainly this Government should not be compelled to enter into those things. We have left the question of taxation to the State, and the only thing we have provided that they shall not do is that they shall not be allowed to levy a charge for the rights and privileges acquired under the provisions of this act. In other words, the State is left in absolute control of the situation, except that it shall not charge for the rights which we are granting and for which we expect to be paid.

We also went into the question of the construction of these plants, providing that the plans for them must be submitted to the Secretary of War, examined by the Board of Engineers, and when passed upon, that the plants must be constructed in accordance with these plans, subject to a penalty if they deviate from the plans which were passed upon.

We went into the question of efficiency. I believe it will be absolutely impossible to get any more water from above the Falls than the 20,000 cubic feet per second provided in the treaty, so far as the water on this side is concerned. For that reason we believe every horsepower that it is possible to get out of that water should be developed. One company at Niagara Falls, the Hydraulic Power Co., is getting 19 horsepower per cubic foot per second. The Niagara Falls Power Co. is getting 10 horsepower per cubic foot per second. We have provided that the Secretary of War shall require this latter company to dismantle its plant and remove it if necessary to another place; also that it must get not less than 20 horsepower per cubic foot per second, and that will require the expenditure by that company of perhaps some ten or twelve million dollars.

I was talking casually the other day with the president of the Niagara Falls Co. and I spoke to him about this legislation. He said, "What we want is some permanent legislation, so we may know what we can do, so we can get capital to come in and invest in our company, and if it is necessary to dismantle to do so and build our plant in such a manner that we will get the 20 horsepower per cubic foot per second the bill requires." The company can not do anything, they can not get the capital to go ahead and do things unless we give them some guaranty that they will be protected in their expenditure of money under some legislation enacted by Congress.

We have provided that if the diversion of this water in any wise affects the navigation of the river or the efficiency of the river as a boundary stream the Secretary of War may revoke the permit. Therefore if it is found that it is interfering with the rights of the National Government the Secretary of War may absolutely revoke the permit.

Then, in order to comply with the ideas of some gentlemen of the committee, we have further provided that these permits shall run for only 50 years, so that the Government under ordinary circumstances may recapture its rights again at the expiration of 50 years.

Section 6 of the bill provides that—

> The Secretary of War, in granting any permit for the diversion of water under this act, shall include therein a provision requiring the payment to the United States of a reasonable annual charge, assessed on the basis of the quantity of water diverted.

This provision would give the Government proper remuneration for the water which these companies would take, and we thought that by making it so much per cubic foot per second instead of so much horsepower it would be a greater incentive for these companies to develop every horsepower possible out of a cubic foot of water. If they were to pay $20 per cubic foot, they would want to get all of the power out of that cubic foot that they possibly could, because the more power they could get the more profit to the company.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. As I understand, the gentleman wants to protect the companies now engaged in business at the Falls. I want to ask why, in granting these permits, any different rule should apply than in granting any other permit that is to be granted under other acts, for instance, the general dam act.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Because these men have gone in and expended their money under what they thought was authority from the State of New York. Under the general dam act that the gentleman speaks about a man may go in or he may not, the works are not constructed.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I presented a proposition to this House last year asking that a municipality that had parted with several hundred thousand dollars of its property to the United States Government be given a preference, and this House turned it down on the ground that there should be no preference given in granting permits. Did the gentleman from Maryland vote against my proposition?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not remember the proposition at this time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin was recognized.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I think this is one of the most important pieces of legislation before the House that has been presented at this session of Congress, and every Member should be here. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Driscoll	Howell	Porter
Aiken	Edmonds	Humphreys, Miss.	Pou
Anthony	Edwards	Jacoway	Pratt
Barchfeld	Esch	Jones	Price

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 20047) relating to the diversion of water of Niagara River, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to the called; that 309 Members had answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 28 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion of Government ownership during the debate, but from my point of view that subject is not necessarily involved in the consideration of the pending bill, and therefore I shall not discuss it. I am opposed to the bill and in favor of acting in accordance with the advice given to the Committee on Foreign Affairs at its hearing day before yesterday by Col. Keller, of the Corps of Engineers, and by Gen. Black, Chief of Engineers, both of whom are familiar with the great difficulties of this problem, their advice being in effect that this bill be not enacted into law at this session, that the time limit fixed in the joint resolution recently passed be extended until March or later in 1918, and that meanwhile there be an investigation and a report by a commission of disinterested experts. I shall later quote from their testimony. I desire first to answer a question asked here a moment ago by a gentleman who, after asking it, contradicted the reply made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. Here is a correct statement by the gentleman from Alabama of facts taken from the report, dated October 31, 1915, of the Canadian commission, which I will read in answer to the question:

The commission is purchasing power at $9 per horsepower from the Ontario Power Co. at Niagara, and is generating it directly at the other points mentioned. It is being transmitted practically all over Ontario, almost every city and town being supplied. The power is sold to municipalities at cost, plus the expenses of the commission, and an amortization charge based on a 30-year plan. The municipalities own their own distributing systems and sell the power to consumers substantially at cost.

In 1915 120,000 different users in Canada paid the Canadian commission the following-named rates for the use of electric current, the lowest being 2.4 cents per kilowat hour for domestic purposes, and 1.9 cents for commercial purposes. "The average cost for all Ontario was 3.9 cents for domestic and 3.1 cents for commercial current." In this country for the electric power generated at the same cataract, the people pay 8, 9, 10, or 12 cents. There are always at the Falls, on the American side, two or three separate, private companies, never less than two, between the water and the ultimate consumer of the electric power.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not stop to answer now, as my time is limited. The gentleman will please pardon me. For the power at Niagara the lowest rate in Buffalo is $22 per horsepower, from which the price ranges as high as $100 per horsepower. The lowest price paid there that any one could find—and I take this from my colleague, Mr. HUDDLESTON, who told me that it was the result of his inquiry—the lowest price charged there to an American consumer was $16 per horsepower.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one proposition involved in the pending bill, and that relates to the development, use, and control of hydroelectric power generated from water diverted above the Falls. The bill as originally introduced provided for the control and regulation of hydroelectric-power development not only above but also below the Falls. The provisions concerning development below the Falls were stricken from the bill. But the engineers and the Secretary of War believe and recommend, and after listening to their statements and recalling all the other testimony before the committee I believe that this gigantic problem of development and control, both above and below the Falls, should be solved in one bill. At this point let me direct attention to important testimony, still unprinted, which was taken day before yesterday before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Secretary of War Baker said:

Gen. Black has handed me some figures showing that 20,000 cubic feet per second used below the Falls would develop 600,000 horsepower, while the same diversion of water as now used develops 250,000 horsepower, showing that the gain from using the same water below instead of above would be about 75 per cent—or 150 per cent.

Attention has been called to-day to the fact that this bill was reported to the House after it had been a long time before the committee. Mr. Chairman, the mere fact that a committee has favorably reported a bill is entitled to respectful consideration. I have entire respect for each member of that committee, for with all of them I have with much pleasure served as a fellow member. But I have more than once seen a large majority of a committee favorably report a bill to the House and then seen the House agree with the minority of the committee and defeat the bill, and subsequent events prove that the minority of the committee was right in all of their contentions and the majority utterly wrong in theirs. I well remember one especially important case of this kind.

So, although the opinion of the majority of a committee is entitled to respect, it ought not absolutely, without regard to the facts, to control the judgment of Members of the House.

They do things differently in protecting the public interests in some other countries. Here is what they did in one instance in Switzerland and Germany, as reported in 1914 by Robert P. Skinner, a United States consul. In an official report he says:

The works at Rheinfelden were begun 15 years earlier. The company has a capital of 12,000,000 marks ($2,856,000). This enterprise is the result of a common effort between the German concern and the Swiss Canton of Basel City. The cantonal authorities first proposed to build independent works 6¾ miles above Basel, where there is a fall in the Rhine of 16⅔ feet. Eventually the German and Swiss interests were consolidated and the Kraftübertragungs-Werke Rheinfelden, A.-G., obtained the concession.

Before the German and Swiss interests were fused there was a prolonged discussion of the subject, participated in by the Grand Duchy of Baden and the Swiss Cantons of Argau, Basel City, and Basel Land, and the principal point discussed was the advisability of giving over the concession to a private corporation. The Canton of Basel City reserved the right to be represented in the board of managers of the corporation and in the financial management, and provided for the interests of future users of current. The profits of the concern are limited by the terms of the concession, and should they be exceeded, consumers are entitled to a reduction in rates. During the fiscal year 1913 the company's net earnings were 1,055,993.40 marks ($251,326), and it paid a regular dividend of 8 per cent and a superdividend of 4 per cent out of the available surplus.

Now, what does that plant charge consumers for power, and what do consumers in this country pay? I recall that only two years ago in debate here the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Donovan, spoke of a reduction in that State in the charge per kilowatt hour from 16 cents to 12 cents. What do they charge consumers over there under this arrangement by which a company is allowed to earn, and does earn, regular dividends of 8 per cent and superdividends of 4 per cent? I read from the same report of our consul:

Prices for a 500-volt current for industrial purposes are quoted per kilowatt hour as follows: For the first 10,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0214; 10,001 to 20,000 kilowatt hours, $0.019; 20,001 to 30,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0166; 30,001 to 50,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0142; 50,001 to 80,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0119; 80,001 to 120,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0107; 120,001 to 150,000 kilowatt hours, $0.0099; 150,001 and more kilowatt hours, $0.0095.

Charging such rates for industrial purposes, they make an 8 per cent regular dividend and a 4 per cent superdividend, and yet gentlemen are called socialists here when only trying to legislate reasonably, in the interest of the American people, and seeking a wise solution of this problem at Niagara Falls. However, the mere calling of ephithets does not frighten away from his duty any man worthy of a place on this floor. [Applause.]

The problem of the development of the water-power resources of the country and of the generation and control of hydroelectric current is the greatest industrial problem before the American people. The water powers of this Nation are its only great natural resources which are inexhaustible. You can exhaust veins of coal, you can exhaust resources of timber, but the water flow is inexhaustible. So long as the world shall endure you can not destroy the power of flowing water to generate electricity. It is this fact, together with the further fact that the electricity thus generated can be carried and successfully used for industrial purposes hundreds of miles from the water powers themselves, which make the development, distribution, and control of hydroelectric power the greatest of our industrial problems.

A day or two ago when we had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs the Secretary of War, a member of the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], asked whether it would not be well to insert in the Cline bill—the bill we are now considering—a provision for an investigation and report as to the possibilities of hydroelectric development below the Falls, and thereupon Gen. Black, the Chief of Engineers, who, as Members of the House know, is a West Point honor man, and is now soon to go upon the retired list, said:

I think if you were to do that it would be better to direct an investigation to be made of the best method of utilizing the power of Niagara Falls, above or below; and if it should be deemed wise by the committee to do that, it would be a very simple matter to extend the authority given to the Secretary of War a few days ago by joint resolution to cover the additional period. That, I think, might make it unnecessary to pass the Cline bill now—

The bill before us—

That, I think, might make it unnecessary to pass the Cline bill now; and I should think it might be advisable not to pass any bill until further and full information is before the Congress than is apparently before it to-day.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield. I have only a very few minutes, and the gentleman will have an abundance of opportunity. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have no opportunity to get time, but I would like to ask a question for information, and, if the gentleman has not time, I do not want to rob him of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I probably have less information than I have time, but I will yield to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman. I desire to inquire if the gentleman has any exact information relative to the charges made the consumers on this side of the boundary line? Now, some information was given in the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. I have reason to believe that is full of great irregularities and inaccuracies; but if the gentleman has made an independent investigation and can furnish us much information, I should very much like to have it.

Mr. COOPER of Wiscosin. I can not give the gentleman the exact charges, but I am reliably informed that one company has a $5,000,000 surplus and $5,000,000 of watered stock and that it pays dividends on the water.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have been informed that the company to which the gentleman refers as having a large surplus has never paid a dividend on its stock. Now, will the gentleman yield for one more question, which will be brief?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have in my hand blank contracts which the Buffalo General Electric Co. requires the people of Buffalo to sign before they serve them, and these contracts say that the maximum rate is 8 cents per kilowatt hour.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the gentleman must well know, if he has investigated the subject at all, that there is the widest range of price to consumers using electric power, between those who use surplus power, between those who are using great quantities of power, and between those who are small consumers.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I trust the gentleman will not take up all the time the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the gentleman is not putting it fairly——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. These figures show what the sliding scale is, and it shows it did not go below what I said in my remarks, about 4 cents per kilowatt hour.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is not this a fair assumption? Is it not fair to state also that the Secretary of War, on the exact point the gentleman from Wisconsin has just very properly brought to the attention of the committee, stated that this larger proposition would contemplate the absorption of the two powers already in existence, and, that being the case, could not that absorption be made in the future if we desired to make it with the Cline bill as a permanent law as though we were now operating without this Cline bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know that I can answer that any more effectively than by quoting from the testimony given day before yesterday by the Secretary of War himself. However, I am unable to find that testimony now. It has not yet been printed and the typewritten manuscript of it, on the table here, is a most confusing compilation; the numbers of the pages running from 1 to 37 and then beginning again and running from 1 to 33.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will have my time extended I will yield to any number of questions, but inasmuch as I have but a very short time to cover a very large subject, and shall in any event do this very imperfectly, I must decline to yield. However, the gentleman looks so grieved I will yield to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he thought it possible for a corporation to have $5,000,000 surplus and $5,000,000 watered stock at one and the same time? Does not the surplus cover the stock and show it is not water?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The committee was told by a gentleman from New York that the stock issued by the company was watered, and he was a man entirely familiar with the facts.

Mr. PLATT. Well, I was asking the gentleman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suffice it to say, gentlemen, that Col. Keller, of the Corps of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Black, said that it would be wise to have a thorough investigation, not only of the possibilities above the Falls, but also of the possibilities below the Falls; that tunnels must be dug; that engineering works above the Falls might possibly be necessary to prevent the erosion which is now destroying the hitherto well-known contour of the Horseshoe Falls. A great economy in the use of water with a much larger development of hydroelectric power and the possible preservation of the scenic beauty of the Falls were some of the things which the engineers suggested that a thorough investigation might show.

Now, no harm could come to these companies if to-day, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of War and the engineers, we were to pass a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission of experts to make such an investigation and to report, say, in December next, and extending the time recently granted to the companies now using the water. They would have all of their rights preserved and Congress would secure the information which the engineers say that it ought to have before it pass any bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The bill provides for revocable permits not exceeding 50 years. I am not sure what is meant by that. Is it the idea to issue 50-year permits? And I ask, right in connection with the question the gentleman is discussing, whether at this time we ought to complicate the matter by causing investments to be made that might create equities when a different development would be more economical?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We could very well word the resolution extending the time so that it would not induce investments and create vested rights which would complicate the situation by limiting the use of the water to the corporations now using it and enjoying those privileges.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the question I want to get answered, if possible, is where it is contemplated, under the terms of the bill, that there will be issued 50-year permits?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the understanding we have. But revocable, of course.

Mr. SHERLEY. It says "revocable," but presumably they are going to require a good deal of money to be invested in order to use the water that the permit grants. Now, I doubt if they will get that under a short lease.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If we should extend the time, the expenditure would not be large. They, having absolute control there, could make an expenditure and charge rates to compensate them. Moreover, in any arrangement which may be made there must, of course, be ample compensation provided for losses, if any, occasioned by legislation. The primary consideration here ought to be the protection of the interests of the people—the consumers, the public—but, of course, always with the understanding that those who have made investments shall not suffer the loss of even one penny by anything done or permitted to be done by Congress.

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is the revocation which is written in here to be a punitive one, if the conditions of the law are violated, or is it at the option of the Government to revoke it at any time?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are revocable at any time when there is a violation of the conditions of the law.

Mr. FESS. But suppose we have discovered some new plan that this bill would antagonize and we ought to revoke it in order to inaugurate the new plan; could we do that, or must it be on the violation of this law that the revocation comes?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, is one of the questions that came to my mind immediately upon hearing the testimony of the engineers. The possibility, as they said—I believe they think it a strong probability—that an investigation would show that there could be much more economical use of the water—much greater efficiency in developing power—it occurred to me at once, as suggested by the question the gentleman has propounded, that we ought to wait and have this investigation made rather than to proceed to do something after the difficulty has arisen.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it the judgment of the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is inadvisable to pass this bill at this time?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is, Mr. Chairman, unquestionably. The testimony of two men as competent and disinterested and high-minded as are Gen. Black and Col. Keller, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, would, I think, cause anyone to pause who has so slight a knowledge as I possess of the possibilities of electrical development.

Mr. LONDON. Was that testimony taken after the bill had been reported?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That testimony was taken after the bill was reported. It was taken on day before yesterday.

Mr. LONDON. What was the occasion for taking the testimony?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know. I came into the room when they were testifying.

Mr. SABATH. It was on the Smith bill, providing for below the Falls.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; it was on the Smith bill. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman says, I believe, or suggests, that the resolution we passed the other day be continued for a year, and in the meantime we have an investigation of the whole situation. If that was done, would it prejudice any rights under present conditions at all?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think the extension can be so worded that it will not prejudice any rights, and I do not think it would—any more than it did the resolution we recently passed—jeopardize the rights of any person or corporation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact is it would make a smaller limit of the amount that might be diverted?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The resolution as passed gives them 20,000 feet, which is the maximum amount permitted to be used on the American side, under the terms of the treaty with Great Britain. The new resolution would not lessen the amount nor modify the conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague from Wisconsin?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. Then I will yield to the gentleman and others. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] asked a question a moment ago which brought to mind something that I read recently in issues of Collier's. One article was by Edison, another by Tesla, another by Steinmetz, the chief engineer of the General Electric. There are not three greater electricians, if indeed they have their equals, in the world. These masters of the science agreed in saying that however rapid—amazing—the development had been in recent years, yet it was nothing at all to be compared with what in the near future is certain in the matter of hydroelectric development and in the uses of electricity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the leave granted I add excerpts from the report—printed since the debate—of the testimony of Gen. Black, Chief of Engineers, and of Col. Keller, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, before the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Gen. BLACK. The farther back that recession takes place in the Horseshoe Falls the greater will be the amount of water diverted to that particular point; so that water will come from both edges of the Horseshoe Falls and from the American Falls. The way to stop that—and it can be stopped—is by constructing adequate engineering works which will tend to spread this flow of water over a greater area and decrease the wear at any one point.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CLINE. How much recession has taken place, Colonel?

Col. KELLER. The total recession is a matter I do not know about absolutely. In 1907 and 1908, when we made our measurements, we figured that from the beginning of the period when accurate records were available the recession had been about 150 feet, and that up to that time the rate had been about 5 feet per year. More recently I understand the rate has been accelerated and is now about 6 feet per year.

Mr. CLINE. Have you made any estimate of the cost of the engineering project for the distribution of the water?

Col. KELLER. No, sir; no formal estimate has ever been made. The proposal was first made by us in our report of 1909 and 1910, in a general way, and, inasmuch as Congress had never given us a mandate to investigate the matter, we naturally did not feel at liberty to prepare an estimate.

* * * * * * *

Gen. BLACK. The language of the text is "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits"—apparently more than one. Take the conditions at the gorge. There have been three general plans offered to the War Department at one time or another for the utilization of the power. One was for a dam at the gorge. That has been very seriously objected to by engineers who have investigated it, partly because of the certainty of drowning out existing power sites and because of the very great danger of increasing the ice gorges.

The third plan, which is a practicable plan and which, excepting for the amount of water taken away, would work no injury to the appearance of the Falls, is the channel plan. We have not had time to investigate this carefully. This bill has never been referred to us officially at all. The Cline bill has never been referred to us at all. Col. Keller has been looking at this matter and knows a great deal about it from previous investigations; but personally the first notice I had of this hearing was on Friday afternoon. Of course Saturday we could not do much. We did what we could Saturday.

Col. KELLER. I think the ground has been rather completely covered, except in reference to a question asked by Mr. MILLER, which Gen. Black, in a way, referred to me.

I wish to explain that the investigations which have been previously made by the War Department in regard to the power situation on the Niagara River were all predicated on the authority which was granted in the Burton Act of June 29, 1906, which relates specifically to diversion above the Falls. So that we have made no determination of what could be done below the Falls, because we were not asked to do that.

* * * * * * *

Gen. BLACK. I think if you were to do that, it would be better to direct an investigation to be made of the best method of utilizing the power of Niagara Falls, above or below, and if it should be deemed wise by your committee to do that it would be a very simple matter to extend the authority given to the Secretary of War a few days ago by joint resolution to cover the additional period. That, I think, might make it unnecessary to pass the Cline bill now, and I should think it might be advisable not to pass any bill until further and better information is before Congress than is apparently before it to-day. * * *

The idea which the Secretary had did not embody at all the confiscation of the power given to existing companies, and I think if we do so that it would be better to get a maximum amount of power developed and that the companies that do exist should be compensated.

Mr. HARRISON. They could be dissolved and suffer no monetary loss.

Gen. BLACK. Another advantage of that method would be this, that any conduit prepared there by the United States could be prepared so that any given amount could be increased to any extent that was deemed wise in the future. It would not be limited in any way, but the amount actually taken could be limited. It makes a measure which is more elastic than any other that has been introduced up to this time.

In regard to the amount of water taken, as we know, there are about 56,000 feet taken by the two countries above. We are only going to take 40,000 below. That is what is proposed for the United States. What Canada will want, I am quite uncertain; but it looks to me as though it might be possible, and an investigation may show, that with adequate compensation works a greater amount could be taken from above the Falls and none diverted below, and the whole amount converted into energy at one point, putting the compensation works to restore to the Falls the broad sheet that formerly existed. That would leave intact the beauty of the rapids and the whirlpool below, which is an important feature.

So, if my recommendation were asked for, I would say get a little information before acting.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GOODWIN. How long would it take to make that investigation and submit a report?

Col. KELLER. Probably a year would be sufficient; that is, an entire working season.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose we should pass the necessary legislation by the 4th of March. When could we have a report?

Col. KELLER. I think you could get a fairly valuable report by next December.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can I have one more minute?

Mr. FLOOD. I regret I have given out all my time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I consent to the gentleman in charge of the time on that side having five minutes more.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time for general debate be extended.

Mr. SHERLEY. You can not do that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because the rules of the House prevent it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I withdraw my request.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this controversy over water power has been proceeding in this House for five or six years. Those of us who have stood for conservation of water power have insisted, first, that there shall be compensation to the Government for the use of the power possibilities in our rivers granted to public-service corporations or even to private individuals. We have contended that there shall be some method of regulating the cost to the consumers, and we have contended that there ought to be in any bill that passes this House a reasonable recapture clause. And those of us who have been Members of this House for a considerable period of time have witnessed the policy I have outlined here develop on this floor.

The general dam act, pending now in conference between the two Houses, was not made by any committee of this House. It was made here on the floor, and by tremendous majorities, and the power groups in this country are beginning to understand that any rights they succeed in obtaining from Congress must observe those principles, no matter what view the other branch of this Congress may take for the present.

This bill preserves these principles for which we have been contending, at least so far as these principles apply to the situation at Niagara. We are advised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one interruption?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this bill contains no provision whatever that the rate shall be reasonable?

Mr. RAINEY. I think it contains that principle, but I will get to that phase of the question soon.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not.

Mr. RAINEY. We are advised by the gentleman from Wisconsin that distinguished engineers, who have been long in the service of the United States and are approaching the retirement period, have said that they want more time in which to consider this question in order to suggest what this bill shall be. They have had six years of time. During a considerable portion of that time these companies, without warrant of law, were diverting waters from above the Falls at Niagara.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman says these engineers have had six years of time.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not a fact that they have had since 1906, 11 years ago, and an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make an investigation?

Mr. RAINEY. I think the gentleman is right. In the House here we have been holding up water-power development in this country for six years, and now the engineers insist that we shall hold it up for a still longer period in order to give them time to study the problems at Niagara. We have educated these engineers in our schools free of charge. We have permitted them to direct the expenditure on our rivers of scores and scores of millions of dollars. We have the right to believe that they understand the fundamental principles of hydraulics, and I think they do. They know what the declivity is there at Niagara, and it has been known for over a century. They know what the stream flow is there at Niagara, and that has been known for perhaps nearly that length of time.

These are the elements to be considered in reaching their conclusions; and, so far as I am concerned, if they are not prepared to make up their minds now as to how the diversion ought to be made there, at the easiest place in all the world to make diversions for the purpose of developing hydroelectric energy, it is time we went to our State universities and selected from them our engineers to pass upon these questions.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not remember that in the Sixty-first Congress the Army engineers filed a report, No. 105, and another report, No. 143, covering two very large volumes, exhausting the whole subject?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I remember that; and even if there is anything in their position this bill gives them the right to control absolutely the structures and the canals and all the other works to be constructed there for the purpose of diverting water and generating power, and companies developing power there, or diverting water there, must submit, first of all, to these engineers the plans of their structures, and the engineers must approve them, just as they approve dams in our navigable rivers; and if any changes are to be made by these companies the changes must meet with the approval of these engineers. If there is any better way of securing the services and the judgment of these engineers and permitting them to control these diversions, I do not know how it can be arranged.

This bill does provide for the regulation of cost to consumers all the way down the line. It provides that that regulation shall be made by the public utilities commissions in States where the power is used. I am aware that is not always the best way of doing it, because on the Mississippi River we have a tremendous development of power under permission of Congress, and every horsepower of hydroelectric energy developed there can be delivered in any one of three States, and either Iowa, Missouri, or Illinois can use it all. Those States all have their public utilities commissions, and we are presented there with the possibility of the delivery in one State of all the power that can be developed there, and we are presented with the possibility of a competition between the public service commissions of those States, which may result in the delivery of that power in that State whose public utilities commission will permit the power company or transmission and distributing companies to charge the highest price and not the lowest price to the ultimate consumers. But this bill provides against an emergency of that kind. I am assuming that the power developed there can possibly be delivered in more than one State. Perhaps a portion of it can be, at any rate. But this bill provides that those rates shall be subject to review by the Secretary of War, and if there is any attempt to charge rates that are improper and too high the Secretary of War can prevent it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The gentleman says "subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Which virtually means that the Secretary of War shall regulate and control the rates?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; if it is necessary to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. There are three fundamental principles which must be recognized in every bill of this sort in order to have it perfect. Does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of War, or any other Secretary, is in a position to determine what rates shall be charged for service if we simply leave it in that way without providing the necessary machinery to enable the Secretary of War to determine equitably what the proper rate shall be?

Mr. RAINEY. I hope the gentleman will not take too much of my time. This bill provides that the public-utilities commission of a State can fix the rate, subject to review by the Secretary of War; and the Secretary of War has at his command at all times the services of these distinguished engineers to advise him.

The bill we are considering prevents waste. I understand that the structures at Niagara, as at present arranged, and the diversion canals are so imperfect that there is a loss of from 35 to 45 per cent of the power possibilities there, and that over one-third, perhaps nearly one-half, of the water diverted above the Falls is permitted to go back into the river again without accomplishing in the way of hydroelectric development what it ought to accomplish. A loss of this kind is indefensible, and the control of the diversion canals and structures given the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers by this measure ought to have the effect of preventing waste of this character.

The bill provides for the preservation of the scenic beauty of the Falls. This feature does not appeal to me as strongly as the power possibilities. However, a large portion of the people who live in the United States are anxious to have the beauty of the world's greatest cataract preserved. As long as this sentiment prevails it will be necessary, in my judgment, to recognize it in water diversions at Niagara. There may come a time, however, in the future when the demand for this power may be so great as to minimize the effect of opposition of this kind.

So far as I am concerned personally, I would prefer to see Government ownership and distribution applied to power possibilities in our rivers. I realize, however, and have realized during all the discussions of this subject which have occurred in this House in recent years that it is impossible to hope for this for many years in the future. Therefore, I have been anxious to preserve in any grants of power where there are declivities in our rivers the principle of compensation to the Government. There is possible at Niagara—at the Falls and in the gorge below the Falls—a hydroelectric development of perhaps 7,000,000 horsepower. I understand it is possible to develop there 3,000,000 horsepower in the gorge and at the Falls without interfering with the scenic beauty of the Falls. If at some time in the future the Government should collect a toll of $1 per horsepower per year, which would be a reasonable charge, the revenue possibilities at Niagara might exceed $3,000,000 per year. There is at the present time an actual development in our rivers of 7,000,000 horsepower. A very conservative estimate would place the power possibilities in our rivers at from fifty to seventy-five millions of horsepower per year. Not long ago our Geological Survey estimated these possibilities at 300,000,000 horsepower. With storage possibilities on the watersheds of our rivers, the revenue from this source in the future assumes tremendous proportions if the Government reserves the right to charge tolls. We are not at liberty to give away generously the last of our national assets—the power possibilities of our rivers. Inasmuch as we can not have, in my judgment, in any reasonable time in the future Government ownership and control of the facilities for generating and distributing power from our rivers, we ought to reserve to the Government, as this bill does, the right to collect revenue out of these national assets.

A considerable portion of the population of the United States seems to be irrevocably committed to the theory of indirect taxes. Even assuming that tolls to the Government will increase the cost to the consumer of power, the great party to which I do not belong can not object to this method of indirect taxation. In this country, however, the cost of hydroelectric power is regulated by the possible competition of power generated from coal, and in no other way, unless public utilities commissions in the various States can be induced to adopt the policy of regulating, according to a different standard than this, the cost to the ultimate consumer of power. I expect in time to see an adequate regulation in this particular by our public utilities commissions.

Fortunately we will in the future have always presented to us the development and distribution of hydroelectric power in the Province of Ontario by the Government. I have before me the very illuminating reports issued annually by the hydroelectric power commission of that Province. These reports will always be available in this country, and a public sentiment can thereby be created which will compel public-utilities commissions to protect the consumers of hydroelectric energy from exorbitant charges by the generating and distributing companies.

The bill does not appear to me to contain an adequate recapture clause. In fact, it contains no recapture clause at all. The permits, however, are revocable and run for a definite period of 50 years. The structures are already there and only require such modifications as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may prescribe. The condition at Niagara, therefore, is not in this particular the condition presented at points where no development has as yet been attempted. However, I expect to vote for a recapture clause if an amendment containing a suitable provision in this particular is presented. I may present an amendment of that character myself.

The development of hydroelectric energy is essentially a natural monopoly. This makes it necessary always for the Government to retain control of its development, distribution, and ultimate cost to the consumer. The bill we are now considering preserves these features. I understand that the power companies at Niagara are willing to operate under the bill we are considering. If they are, the long fight we have been making for a proper conservation of water power is won so far as Niagara is concerned, and this bill, if it passes both Houses in its present form, will constitute the model upon which all future legislation of this character must be based. We have not been holding back the development of the power possibilities of our rivers. The rapidly forming power groups have been doing that by insisting that the Government must give away without reservation all power possibilities wherever there are declivities in our rivers, and that there must be no adequate regulation of cost to consumers and no possible hope for revenues to the Government at any time in the future. When the power groups in the country—sometimes appropriately denominated "The Water-Power Trust"—realize this situation legislation will be possible for the development of the power which they say is at present going to waste in our rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, while I shall offer some amendments to this bill, they are slight in character, and I feet it only just to this committee to say that I believe they have taken an abundance of time and have given fair and honest consideration to this bill and have reached, on the whole, a just and comprehensive plan for the development of the power situation. Now, let us see locally what the situation is and how it affects the country at large. Locally the situation is this: Before the power development came at Niagara there were two small villages there, containing 3,000 people. They have grown to 50,000 people. Besides that, all of western New York has grown rapidly as the result of that power development.

Now let us take the general situation. As the result of that power development Niagara has become not the electrochemical center of the State of New York or of the United States, but it holds the proud position of being the electrochemical center of the whole world, and this development should be undertaken with that in view. Nothing should be done to harm nor is there any cause to complain of those who have brought about such beneficial and such magnificent results.

I want to answer very briefly what was said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. He said generally that he approved of the situation in Canada. What is that situation? The situation in Canada is that that power is under the control not of the Canadian Government but of the local government of the Province of Ontario. So it is proposed in this bill that this power shall be under the control primarily of the public-service corporation of the State of New York, and in that we are following exactly the lines advocated by the gentleman from Alabama. Also, in the only other point he made we follow the Canadian practice. The Hydroelectric Commission in Canada does not generate power. It continues the companies that generated it and takes the power from those companies. So on this side the companies are to continue to develop power and the public-service corporation is to regulate their charges, and that, as an additional safeguard, is to be under the review of the Secretary of War.

Now, let us see whether there is anything to complain of in the matter of charges. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, in all the abundant and prolonged hearings before this committee, not one manufacturer who appeared before the committee complained that the charges imposed upon him were excessive. The charges averaged $16 per year per horsepower. What were the charges quoted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as being exemplary charges? In Germany the very lowest charge to the greatest user was $60 per horsepower. Translated from kilowatt hours into horsepower it was about four times the average charge at Niagara, and the gentleman from Wisconsin says the German charge is admirable.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] also said that the decision in the Long Sault case shows that the State of New York can not deal with this power situation, and with the regulation of charges. The Long Sault decision is simply this, that as a State holds the beds of rivers in trust for its people, no State can give to a private company the regulation of navigation in that stream. That was what was attempted. It was attempted to give to that company exclusive control of navigation, and that is all that was decided in that case.

In this matter I am not going to repeat what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] said, but it does seem to me that there has been an abundance of time for investigation. Six years have elapsed. During all that time the best technical advice which was obtainable has been secured by this committee. It has developed that 19 or 20 horsepower per cubic foot per second is an effective use of the water at Niagara. This bill provides that that power must be developed. It means the investment of several million dollars by one of these companies to produce it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] says there can be no harm from delay. As was well pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], who first presented this bill, there can be harm from delay, because to-day only 10 horsepower per cubic foot are being produced, whereas 19 horsepower can be produced, and during all the time that we wait capital will not invest. There has been something said about the scenic beauty of Niagara, and I want to say a word on that question. I want to quote what Secretary Baker said about it in a very brief way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, for six years I have been intensely interested in the development and control of water power in the public interest. I am not going to apologize for repeating what others have said in connection with this bill. It has been obvious all through the long struggle that if we are to permit private individuals and corporations to receive the privilege and to assume the responsibility of utilizing and purveying water power, we must have a definite termination of time and a full control of charges; otherwise the grantees will not be working in the public interest and will not be entitled to privileges that we may grant.

This bill covers all the requirements that we who have been working for proper conservation have asked. It goes a step further than our prior bills in requiring another feature that has never appeared in any bill in this House, except in the Hetch Hetchy grant, when, for the first time, we established a requirement for the utmost beneficial use of the water and water power, and in confirming that precedent this bill has gone ahead of every other water-power bill heretofore proposed.

This bill provides for State regulation where the State is prepared to exercise competent authority, and further provides that the Secretary of War may always stand on guard to see to it that the privileges granted by the Federal Government through us shall be exercised in any State for the general welfare. I believe that such double regulation is right and proper. This bill specifically provides that there shall not be created under the bill anything in the nature of vested rights. Such a limitation prevents the necessity of our putting in the bill specifications of what the Government shall have to pay for its resumption of rights at the expiration of the grant. Under the terms of the bill the revocable grant runs a maximum term expiration of 50 years, and then all rights and property are forfeited, unless out of the kindness of the then existing Congress the grantees receive payment for tangible assets. The grantees are specifically cut off from claiming any vested rights or franchise values at the expiration of their term or at any other time.

We have in this bill a provision for compensation. None of us who have stood for conservation have believed that the Federal Government should look to large revenues from compensation for such privileges, but, as a matter of fact, the compensation we require is in its nature like the sovereign power of taxation, it is regulative and a necessary condition upon which we must insist and which is inherent if we are to maintain consecutive control. It may at times be the only means whereby we can adequately regulate such privileges. As far as I am concerned, I would rather see all water power operated directly by the States, by the municipalities, or by the Federal Government [applause], but if we are going to grant the privilege to individuals and corporations to utilize and operate these water powers, I believe that this bill is the best framed measure in the public interest that has come before this Congress. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield that to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to deal critically with the bill under consideration. I shall make no effort to deal with any international phase of the question that may present itself. I shall not deal at all with the esthetic or scenic questions that may or may not be here involved. I shall not deal with any personal equation that may present itself, with reference to the granting of the rights dealt with in this bill. What I shall say will have to do with the salient provisions that every well-considered adequate water-power bill should contain. Briefly, I shall attempt to enumerate them as follows:

First. No legislation, Executive order, or department ruling should permit the patenting or the title in fee to pass out of the Federal Government under any conditions. The fee title should be reserved in perpetuity to the United States. The bill under consideration is a revocable permit proposition, which, of course, does not deal with the patenting of any specific thing. Hence, this particular requirement is not in all things essential to this particular bill. It is, however, intensely important in dealing with the general water-power policy.

Second. The dam sites should be leased for a period of time not longer than 50 years, without any entangling alliances or phrases difficult to understand, on which the courts might quibble or debate as to the relative rights of the Federal Government and the lessee after the term has expired.

Third. The recapture provision should provide that all nonperishable property, such as land, water rights, dam sites, good will, and so forth, should go back to the Federal Government at actual cost, and that all perishable property in connection with the plant should come back to the Federal Government at the end of the lease at its fair value. In both cases the interest of the public is conserved and made certain. The bill under consideration does not contain a recapture clause, and if the revocable permit phase of the question is preserved I assume none is necessary. It will be observed that the grant or permit is subject to revocation at any time.

Fourth. Strong, clear, well-understood provisions should be inserted in the lease contract for the revocation of the permit for a violation of the conditions thereof.

Fifth. Provisions should be inserted in the lease requiring diligence and prompt construction of the plant so that the property may not be held for speculative purposes.

Sixth. A royalty or rental for the use of dam sites and the property of the Federal Government should be required in all cases except for municipalities which furnish current to consumers without profit. This is provided for in section 6 of the pending measure.

Seventh. The Federal Government should at all times maintain its paramountcy and full control.

Eighth. Annual reports should be exacted from the power companies, so that the public might at all times know of their acts and doings. This provision is highly essential, and I do not think the pending bill contains any provision for such reports. If it does not, either in this body or in the Senate such a provision should be incorporated.

Ninth. The Federal Government should reserve to itself full power to fix rates for service, capitalization, bond issues, and so forth, in interstate projects and, where there is no public-utilities commission for this purpose, in intrastate projects. I should like to see the pending bill strengthened on this requirement, although the supreme right of revocation rests with the Secretary under the pending bill, which may obviate the necessity of this requirement.

Tenth. Each lease, permit, or consent of Congress should contain a provision that upon proof that any such permittees, lessees, or grantees have conspired to prevent the development of water power or to limit the output of already constructed plants the lease should be revocable in a court of competent jurisdiction. Water power is a natural monopoly, and the greatest sort of care and caution should at all times be exercised in issuing permits that authorize its creation by strong, virile, vigorous laws and regulations. Something of this sort is due the teeming millions of America, who have the right to expect that this great national blessing will be carefully preserved for them and carefully preserved in their interest.

I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has prepared and brought into the House this bill, but a hasty examination of it shows that it embodies largely the salient provisions just enumerated. Doubtless there will be controversies over the various sections contained in this bill, which deals with such an intricate subject, but I prophesy that in the end the Committee on Foreign Affairs will largely be sustained by the House.

The dangers that will beset this bill are at the other end of the Capitol, where the position has been taken that no compensation whatever shall be received by the Federal Government as a royalty for the water-power rights granted by the Federal Government. To me this doctrine has always been fallacious, has always been unwarranted, and, I believe, will never be approved by the Congress or tolerated by the generous constituencies maintaining the Congress.

Section 6 of the pending bill deals with the question of a royalty, a charge or tax, in an open, frank way. There is no effort to evade; no effort but an effort to honestly, solemnly, and openly do the thing the courts have always held they have the right to do, to wit, lay down conditions and prescribe charges that shall go with any property the Federal Government has under its control.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have but five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is not the gentleman in error in stating the position of the body at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not yield to the gentleman; I can not go into that; but that has been the line of controversy that has held up two water-power bills for four or five years, and they are now being held up.

Twice in the last few months, as chairman of the Public Lands Committee, aided by 20 efficient members of the committee, have I piloted through this House a bill dealing with 72.6 per cent of the water powers of the United States. I am fully aware of the honest differences of opinion that prevail among the Members of the Congress as to what shall constitute an adequate, proper water-power policy. I also know what trials and tribulations the Committee on Foreign Affairs has been subjected to in bringing into this House this bill. They are entitled to the greatest sort of credit. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in trying to find out what is expected to be done under the language of a revocable permit, which the bill provides may be granted for a period not longer than 50 years, because I notice that there is no provision in the bill for what we have designated as recapture, and it is important also in view of what has been suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as to whether it is desirable to permit grants to be issued before determining whether the power should be developed above or below the Falls.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am a little fearful that I shall not have time to go into that other than to say that on page 7 the proviso beginning on line 6 deals with the right of revocation, and the second proviso on line 14 provides an alternative method of revocation. This bill is not founded on precisely the lines that I would like to see it founded upon. It deals with a revocable permit. The bill that I have had most to do with was not a revocable-permit law at all. It proposes to execute a lease for a given term of years, and when the term is expired it is through. This provides a revocable permit, which the Secretary of War can at any time revoke.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason I asked that is this: The complaint that is now being made by men who want to develop water power is that they can not get capital to invest unless they have known, fixed, stable terms for long periods of time. Hence the need of a 50-year lease, and hence their objection to a revision of prices at the end of 20 years and every 10 years thereafter. If it is proposed here to grant an actual 50-year lease, we ought to understand it. If it is proposed to grant a lease which may be terminated at any time, which I think under the law would be possible, then I want to ask what assurance have we that that sort of arrangement will result in the proper development of water power, and also whether we will not be confronted with the pleadings of special equities whenever we undertake to exercise the right to revoke?

Mr. FERRIS. I so much regret my inability to deal with the question submitted. Perhaps under the five-minute rule I can reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to offer a substitute for the bill, and would ask whether it may be done at the end of the reading of the first section?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the bill will be read by sections, and amendments will be in order at the conclusion of each section.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to offer an entirely different bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it would be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no diversion of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls shall be permitted except for the purposes and to the extent hereinafter authorized, and any diversion not authorized and permitted as by this act provided shall be unlawful: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to the diversion of water for sanitary or domestic purposes, or for the service of canals for the purposes of navigation, when such diversion is authorized in accordance with the provisions of law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and in connection with it I desire to give notice that if it be adopted I shall move to strike out the other sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first section of the bill and insert:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be 'The Niagara Power Commission Act.'

"SEC. 2. That the Niagara Power Commission be, and the same is hereby, chartered as a public corporation with the powers hereinafter granted.

"SEC. 3. That said Niagara Power Commission shall be governed, controlled, and operated by a board of three commissioners subject to the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom they shall make reports, and who shall make and prescribe suitable rules and regulations for the performance of their duties under this act. Said commissioners, not more than two of whom shall be members of the same political party, shall be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of said commissioners shall be designated by the President to serve for two years, one for four years, and one for six years, and thereafter each commissioner so appointed shall serve for six years unless sooner removed for cause by the President. The President shall at will designate one of said commissioners as chairman, who shall receive an annual salary of $6,500, and the two other commissioners shall receive annual salaries of $6,000 each, all salaries being payable monthly. Each commissioner shall with 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe the oath of office. No commissioner during his continuance in office shall be an officer or director of any other institution.

"SEC. 4. That the business of said Niagara Power Commission shall be the production of electric energy from the waters of Niagara River and the distribution of same as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 5. That said Niagara Power Commission shall have, hold, and enjoy for the production of electric energy the exclusive right to use and divert water in the United States in and from the Niagara River above, at, and below the Falls thereof, to the limit fixed by and under the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain proclaimed May 13, 1910, and to that end said Niagara Power Commission shall have succession until it is dissolved by act of Congress, and shall have the powers under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, to adopt a seal; to sue and be sued; to make contracts and incur liabilities; to buy, sell, and acquire property; to condemn lands, generation plants, works, and other property and easements therein; to construct works, dams, stations, and transmission lines; to lease, contract for, produce, and distribute electric energy; and generally to have all such powers of similar corporations as may be within the reasonable intendment hereof, and as may be reasonably necessary to carry on its said business; and for said purposes and upon approval by the Secretary of the Interior, may issue bonds and obligations bearing interest at not more than 5 per cent per annum, secured by mortgages on its property.

"SEC. 6. That the said Niagara Power Commission shall transmit and distribute, in the United States only, electric energy to municipalities and consumers convenient to its works and lines, justly and without unreasonable discrimination and as nearly as may be at the cost of delivery plus reasonable charges to cover the expenses of its operations, including the salaries of the commissioners, and plus such further annual charges as will be reasonably sufficient to discharge all of the obligations of said Niagara Power Commission so as to leave same free from debt at the end of a period of 50 years: Provided, That no distribution or sale of such energy shall be made for consumption within the corporate limits of any municipality which may be able, willing, and ready to assume the distribution of same therein.

"SEC. 7. That all municipalities receiving electric energy from said Niagara Power Commission shall in turn distribute so much of same as may not be required for municipal purposes to consumers within their corporate limits for a fair, just, and reasonable charge and without unreasonable discrimination therein, failing which such municipality shall not be entitled to receive such electric energy.

"SEC. 8. That said Niagara Power Commission shall use said waters at an efficient head and with reasonable economy, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States for all electric energy which may be generated from said waters at the rate of $1 per annual horsepower, and no franchise or property taxes, license, or charge shall be levied upon or collected from it by any State on account of the rights and franchises granted hereby, but the power of any State to levy valuation taxes on its other property is preserved.

"SEC. 9. That said Niagara Power Commission may license and authorize the use and diversion of said waters for the production of electric energy for not more than five years after the passage of this act, in which event said Niagara Power Commission shall have the prior right to take so much of the electric energy produced therefrom as it may require, paying a reasonable charge therefor, not exceeding at the rate of $15 per annual horsepower, such electric energy to be distributed by said Niagara Power Commission as provided by section 6 of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the use or diversion in the United States of water from said Niagara River above, at, or below the Falls for the production of hydroelectric energy except as provided by this act shall be unlawful, and each act thereof shall constitute a separate offense and be punishable by fine of not more than $5,000.

"SEC. 11. That this act shall take effect January 1, 1918, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, is this an amendment to a single paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it proper to offer an amendment to a single paragraph, which amendment is in the form of half a dozen paragraphs, and a whole bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order. The gentleman from Alabama offered this as a substitute for the first section and gave notice that if adopted he would move to strike out the remaining sections of the bill.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section or germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do desire to be heard on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the title of the bill under consideration is "A bill for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes." That title with reasonable accuracy states the real purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the taking of water from the Niagara River for the generation of hydroelectric power, and the bill goes further to state the terms on which the water may be taken and regulates the distribution of the power and the sale of it. The bill authorizes the diversion of power by a public corporation. I call the attention of the Chair to the first paragraph of section 2:

First. No permit shall be granted hereunder except to a State or municipal corporation or political subdivision thereof, or to a public-service corporation or to a public-service agent of a State.

And so forth.

It also authorizes the grant of permits to private corporations. Of course, we all know it is not expected that any public corporation will get this benefit, but it is in the bill just the same. Now, the difference between the bill under consideration and the substitute that I have offered is in two things. I provide that this diversion of water and creation of power must be by a public corporation. I exclude private corporations and private persons. Furthermore, I create that public agency. The bill we have under consideration contemplates the creation of a public agency by the State of New York, whether it be a private corporation or a public corporation. The substitute that I have offered creates in itself, by virtue of the power of Congress, this corporation which will take this water from the stream. I can not see why it is not germane.

If one class of corporations may take it under the bill under consideration, why may not a substitute be offered that would authorize another class of corporations to take it? Would not that be germane? Undoubtedly so.

If we may pass a bill which contemplates the creation of a corporation by a State, is it not germane, instead of delegating that power to the State or allowing it to exercise it, that we shall exercise the power and create the corporation ourselves? How can it be said that this is not germane to the question?

The real subject is the thing that should be looked at. What is it? It is the diversion of the water from the Niagara River for the creation of hydroelectric energy and to provide for the distribution thereof. Is not that exactly what the substitute provides for? Undoubtedly so. I do not see how it can be said that the substitute is not germane to the subject matter.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to issue permits to corporations or individuals to take water from the Niagara River above the Falls. That is the real purpose of the bill. In 1906 the Federal Government assumed control of the waters of Niagara River. Congress passed an act authorizing certain parties to divert from above the Falls 15,600 cubic feet of water. That law has expired. After that law was enacted, and before it expired, our Government entered into a treaty with Great Britain by which the Government was authorized to grant permits to the extent of 20,000 cubic feet of water per second, and the Canadian Government was authorized to grant permits for 36,000 cubic feet of water per second. Under the treaty, therefore, this Government has the right to grant permits to divert this water up to 20,000 cubic feet per second. There is no law authorizing the Secretary of War to carry out that right. The law we had has expired by limitation, and this bill is for the purpose of giving the Secretary of War the right to exercise the right we have under the treaty. That is the main purpose of the bill, and it further provides for regulation of the price of the power generated from this water by the public-service corporation of the State in which the power is used. The substitute is an entirely different proposition. It creates a public agency to generate hydroelectric power. It creates a department of Government for the purpose of handling that hydroelectric power when it is generated. There is nothing in this bill that would justify an amendment being offered providing a department of Government for the purpose of controlling water power here or anywhere else in this country. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly not germane to this section or to the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the question of germaneness is always one that presents something of difficulty to the chairman of a committee, because no two cases are quite alike. I have been unable in a hurried examination to find a case on all fours with this presented, though the principle involved seems to be very plain. The bill which is before the House is a bill authorizing the issuing of permits or grants. The amendment which is proposed in the nature of a substitute is a bill for Government operation of the water power at Niagara. Now, it has been held in reference to a bill relating to the issuing of a right of way to a railroad company that it was not in order to propose an amendment for the purchase and operation of the railroad. It seems to me that the reasoning that applied there, holding that amendment not germane, applies equally here. The fact that matters are somewhat akin, that they deal with the same subject matter in a general way, is not what determines the question of whether an amendment is germane and therefore in order.

If that were the rule, then it would be in order here to make any sort of provision that related to water power, because the bill relates to water power. The point I desire to call the Chair's attention to is that this is a leasing bill. It deals with that subject only. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] does not deal with the subject of leasing, but undertakes to create a commission of the Government that shall itself develop and sell water power, and I hold that it is therefore not germane within the rule of the House touching germaneness of amendments.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If the Chairman will permit, I wish to call the attention of the Chairman to the treaty that has been referred to. The portion of the treaty relating to the subject under discussion is article 5, which is as follows:

ARTICLE V.

The high contracting parties agree that it is expedient to limit the diversion of waters from the Niagara River so that the level of Lake Erie and the flow of the stream shall not be appreciably affected. It is the desire of both parties to accomplish this object with the least possible injury to investments which have already been made in the construction of power plants on the United States side of the river under grants of authority from the State of New York, and on the Canadian side of the river under licenses authorized by the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario.

So long as this treaty shall remain in force no diversion of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls from the natural course and stream thereof shall be permitted except for the purposes and to the extent hereinafter provided.

The United States may authorize and permit the diversion within the State of New York of the waters of said river above the Falls of Niagara for power purposes, not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 20,000 cubic feet of water per second.

The United Kingdom, by the Dominion of Canada, or the Province of Ontario, may authorize and permit the diversion within the Province of Ontario of the waters of said river above the Falls of Niagara for power purposes, not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 36,000 cubic feet of water per second.

The prohibitions of this article shall not apply to the diversion of water for sanitary or domestic purposes, or for the service of canals for the purposes of navigation.

I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that, so far as the treaty is concerned, it is wholly immaterial whether the diversion be by a private individual, by private corporations, by public corporation, or by some agency or official authorized by the Government to make the diversion. Therefore the question of lugging the treaty into this issue is wholly foreign to the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, the treaty has anything to do with this question. I simply mention that under the treaty we could authorize the diversion of a greater quantity of water than has heretofore been diverted.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman used the expression that the treaty provided that we should issue a permit, and I wish to call his attention, as well as the Chair's, to the fact that no such provision is in the treaty. It simply provides that we may authorize it; and it makes absolutely no difference, Mr. Chairman, whether that authority be given to a public corporation, a private corporation, to an official, or to private citizens. They have the same right to grant to one of these instrumentalities as to another.

Mr. SHERLEY. The treaty has nothing to do with the point of order, so far as that is concerned. Congress could legislate an enactment that would be an annulment of the treaty.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think I understand the point of order. I am stating that the treaty has nothing whatever to do with it. That is what I am speaking about.

Mr. SHERLEY. I wondered why you were speaking about something that you said had nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am merely replying to gentlemen on the gentleman's side of the question who were under the impression that it did. Let us not be diverted from the main thing that we are here to do. What are we here to do? We are here to authorize the diversion of water from Niagara River for the purpose of producing hydroelectric energy. Now, that is what we are legislating about; and a bill which takes the place of another bill and yet has for its object that same purpose is certainly germane to what we have before us.

I submit that this is not creating a department of government. It is not going afield, as the gentleman intimates, but it is authorizing an agency which the Government creates and names and which the bill itself provides for, for it says:

Or a municipal corporation or political subdivision thereof.

Evidently the only difference between that principle in the substitute I have offered and the bill that we have under consideration is that in the bill it is contemplated that the corporation shall be created by the State of New York. Under my amendment, which is the same as H. R. 20081, which I introduced some time ago, we are to create the corporation ourselves and not leave it to some one else.

The CHAIRMAN. Rule XVI, paragraph 7, says:

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

As the Chair understands the rule, two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related or belong to the same general class, and the question that the Chair is called on to decide is whether or not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama as a substitute for the pending bill embodies a proposition different from the bill under consideration, and after due consideration the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant revocable permits for the diversion of water for power purposes from said Niagara River above the Falls to an amount stated in the permits not exceeding in the aggregate a diversion of 20,000 cubic feet per second at any one time All permits granted by authority of this act shall be granted upon the following conditions:

First. No permit shall be granted hereunder except to a State or municipal corporation or political subdivision thereof, or to a public-service corporation or to a public-service agent of a State, duly constituted and authorized to engage in the business of furnishing to the public light, heat, power, or electric current, and whose services, charges, and practices shall be regulated by the State in which such business is conducted: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent any State in which such works are located or in which such business is conducted from levying taxes upon the property, and excises and charges upon the business, of said permittee or from making and enforcing any lawful regulation with respect to the said property and business; but in any valuation made of the property of the permittee for any purpose no value whatever shall be claimed or allowed for the rights and privileges acquired under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That all charges, rates, and services of any permittee hereunder shall be subject to regulation in accordance with the laws of the State within which the service is rendered and subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and in case of the failure of any State to provide the necessary laws for the regulation of such charges, rates, or services, then such regulation, upon complaint made and hearing thereon, shall be made and ordered by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the right of the Congress to exercise its power of regulation of interstate commerce as applied to the business of any such permittee. Every permit shall require the permittee, at all times during its operation under such permit, actually to engage in the business of furnishing light, heat, power, and electric current.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I have some amendments which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading the section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire whether it is not in order to offer amendments to the various paragraphs of the bill without regard to the section? Otherwise we are going to be required to go through three or four pages dealing with different matters without being able to amend, and I suggest that it will make a rather inconvenient consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule for the consideration of a bill like this is to consider it by sections. We consider appropriation bills by paragraphs.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be offered by paragraphs.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if it may not be understood that in that we have the right reserved to offer an amendment to the first paragraph. We are on the second.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that appropriation bills are read by paragraphs and the others by sections. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. STAFFORD. With a supplemental provision that amendments may be in order to the first paragraph, which has already been read.

The CHAIRMAN. With the understanding that amendments may be in order to the first paragraph, which has already been read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "revocable" before the word "permits," and after the word "permits" insert the words "revocable for cause as hereinafter provided."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there is no claim here on the part of the committee that these permits are to be revocable at will. The only way they are to be revocable is for cause. Now, there might very easily be a dispute as to the meaning of the language as it is in the bill, and all that the amendment offered does is to make that absolutely clear and beyond dispute, which the committee itself had in mind in drafting the bill, and that is all that is sought to be accomplished.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman makes a statement that I have been trying to obtain since I came in on the floor, by inquiry addressed to those who were addressing the Committee of the Whole. He says it was the intention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to grant 50-year leases or permits which would be only revocable for cause?

Mr. DEMPSEY. As stated in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Whereas the colloquy that took place here indicated that the permits were to be revocable at any time without regard to cause, and I then raised the inquiry as to whether if that was so you would get anyone to make any investment under a permit that might last only a day.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not believe that it would be possible, and I will say in reply to the gentleman that I understand the Niagara Falls Power Co., which develops now only 9 or 10 horsepower per cubic foot per second, will have to expend a great many million dollars—I think ten or fifteen million dollars—in order to make the development absolutely essential to bring it up to 19 horsepower, which is practically as high as they can go with the local situation as it is. Now, it would be absolutely impossible to finance any project and expend any such amount of money with a term revocable absolutely at will and without cause, and that is not my understanding of what the committee has intended at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I would like to ask the gentleman this further question: Assuming that his amendment should be adopted, is it his idea to carry in the bill a recapture clause?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, that has not been in my mind at all, and I thought that situation would take care of itself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, it never has done so in the past.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Here is what I had in mind; it has not been suggested by those who are interested in the plants, and I thought this: The physical assets will be there at the end of the time—the power houses, the tunnels, the various means by which this development is brought about. Now, the Government does not own that. The Government can not acquire that except by paying for it. And here are these people, with this development already made. It belongs to them. It can not be taken away from them. Of course, it is not of use to them—it becomes largely of no use—the instant the Government says you can not use the water for the purpose of generating power.

Mr. SHERLEY. In every power bill that has been before Congress in recent years and passed by this House provision has been made—not a very satisfactory one—but provision has been made looking to giving to the Government the right to take over the property at the termination of the lease, and I am particular about seeing to it that the inertia of the Government shall be in favor of the Government and not in favor of the grantee, so that the inaction of the Government shall not continue indefinitely a grant that we mean to end at the close of a given period.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why would the failure to insert a recapture clause have that effect? It seems to me the failure to insert a recapture clause would have just the opposite effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. What you have really here is a lease for 50 years.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, at the end of that time, if we have not some machinery by which the Government can get it again the grantee continues in possession until the Government takes affirmative action, which I and others here know can be prevented for years and years at a time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Simply by reason of the failure to act?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes. We want to see to it that the inertia of the Government shall be exercised in favor of the Government and not in favor of the grantee. I do not want to see that cushionlike opposition used to extend for many years the life of the grant.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not believe that anybody at Niagara would object to a proper recapture clause. In fact, I think they would regard it as a local benefit and not as a disadvantage. I do not believe any one of them would oppose such an amendment. I would support it. I would be glad to see the gentleman offer such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in opposition to the amendment.

This bill provides for the issuance of certain permits, revocable for certain causes. We do not pretend to set out all the reasons in this bill why the Secretary of War or when the Secretary of War may revoke the permits. This abrogating clause was inserted for the benefit of the Government in including in this section a revocable provision. My understanding of the rule is that where you undertake to set out in a bill the grounds for objection to continuing a permit you will be confined to those grounds named in the revocation. This was put in here for the purpose of meeting a condition that might arise during the term of the 50-year permit, when some condition might arise which is not included in the exception here. Suppose a condition would arise whereby the Government would want to take over these power plants for use in an emergency. Under this power here of authorizing the Secretary of War to take them over under a revocable permit the Government could do it. It should not have to resort to the causes set out in this bill in order to find ground on which to revoke the permit. Suppose it was taken over or reconstructed into a nitrate plant in the case of an emergency that might exist and we should want authority to do this.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where do you find in this bill any authority to take over anything? You have the authority to quit giving them the right to use the water.

Mr. CLINE. We have the authority to quit giving them the right to use the water at the end of 50 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the right to take over—what I mean by the recapture clause is not in this bill.

Mr. CLINE. The recapture clause will not be included in the bill in the light in which you view it; but there is a proceeding here that can be instituted in the district courts of the United States to wind up this institution, and that would permit the Government to do the winding up, if it wants to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where is that?

Mr. CLINE. That is on the sixth or seventh page, I think.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be fairer to put in a proper recapture clause and then make your permit revocable only for cause?

Mr. CLINE. I will tell you what I think about it. I think the Government ought not to be compelled to assign a cause in this bill if it wants to revoke the permit. I want to see more liberty given to the Secretary of War in reference to this project than we would include in the exceptions you might name in the bill. It is idle to assume that a Secretary of War is going to revoke permits without a good cause——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why not say that he must have good cause?

Mr. CLINE. Especially considering the interests involved in this bill in the development of electricity.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why not say so? Why not provide that the Secretary of War shall not act except for good cause? Why not say it in express terms? That would prevent all ambiguity and would be a trap for nobody.

Mr. CLINE. That would make it an ambiguous statement, because what might be a good cause on the part of the Secretary of War, might not be a good cause on the part of the power owners.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This is simply a power to be exercised by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLINE. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And he has the right to act for any cause enumerated in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. And he is the judge of it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And he is the judge of it. We submit it, not to some tribunal, but to the Secretary of War, who really represents and is a great officer of one of the parties, and who will be supposed to give that party the benefit of any possible doubt.

Mr. CLINE. The Secretary of War ought to be the judge——

Mr. DEMPSEY. This makes him the judge.

Mr. CLINE. He ought to be the referee to whom to refer this proposition.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with you perfectly, but to say that it shall be for cause, and let him judge whether there is cause or not, is simply leaving it to him——

Mr. CLINE. Then you might as well strike out the word "revocable" without that limitation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; it is revocable for cause.

Mr. FLOOD. Does not the gentleman realize that if we should adopt the language he suggests it would throw this question into court whenever, on account of any national exigency, the Secretary of War should want to revoke these permits, and that it would give the power companies the opportunity to put off the Government by going into court?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think so.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] ought to be adopted. This morning I criticized this bill as being a bill for the benefit of the power companies now operating at the Falls. If the rights granted are revocable at will, no one can afford to ask for a permit except somebody who is right there now, who has made the investment and will not be put to any additional expense. Upon a permit revocable at will no outsider will come in and ask the Secretary of War for permission to construct works and make a big investment. The work may be taken over by the Government, or in the absence of a recapture clause the right to take water will be cut off and the permittee left with a big, expensive plant on his hands without having had any opportunity to recoup himself. But if this amendment is adopted, it fixes it so that anybody not connected with the two companies that are there now can go in and can ask for a permit and get a permit with the assurance that he can hold it for 50 years if he lives up to his contract in good faith. Now, do we want to give the opportunity to outsiders to come in? Do we want to give an opportunity to people on the outside to make investments at Niagara, or do we want to do as I said this morning, hold Niagara for the benefit of the Hydraulic Power Co. and the Niagara Falls Power Co.? If the latter is what we desire, then leave it in the power of the Secretary of War to cut off this permit at will, and we shall have accomplished our purpose.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, if it is suggested that this amendment is to be desired in the interest of the Government, then that suggestion is certainly not well taken. This is an amendment most decidedly favorable to the individual lessee, or permittee. Certainly if adopted, it will give the permittee the means with which to obstruct the action of the Government when the authorities desire to terminate his permit, for good and sufficient reasons. A situation might well arise at some particular time when it was desirable that the activities of the permittees should immediately cease, and the power to effect this termination should be afforded. It may be said that this will put the permittees at the whim, or caprice of the Government. That may be so theoretically, but it is not likely, on the contrary it is highly improbable that this power of revocation will be exercised either whimsically, or capriciously. The present companies have operated for a long time under revocable permits, without interruption. The plain purpose of the language of the bill is that the permits shall be revocable at will, that is to say that the Government shall have full authority, at any time that it sees fit, for cause seeming good to itself, to put an end to the operations that are in progress by virtue of these permits. The moment you insert the words "for cause," you limit the authority of the Government, and afford material that may be used by the permittees for the purposes of obstruction, and delay. It would be most unfortunate to surround the Government with these limitations, and invest the parties using this power with the means of vexatious delay when the immediate cessation of their activities, might be in the highest degree desirable.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I understand the gentleman, his argument is that the Government should be permitted, in case of national necessity, to intervene and take over this water to answer the national use.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Whenever in the judgment of the Government the time arrives that the activities of the permittees should cease, the Government should have the authority to compel an immediate discontinuance of these activities.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman believe that can be covered by proper language, so as to answer that purpose, instead of leaving it indefinite, hazy, uncertain, as this will leave it?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The language used is proper. This language is definite. It leaves nothing hazy or indeterminate, so far as the power of the Government is concerned. That is what troubles the people who are using, or contemplating the use of this water. It is on account of the very definite, and distinct power of revocation that is given to the Government, that the potential power users are dissatisfied with this language. They see only too plainly that no opportunity will be afforded to interpose tedious legal delays to the revocation of their permits. That is the very reason they object to the language employed. The language of the bill is very definite and clear in its meaning.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman believe a clause can be added substantially to this effect: Said permit shall be subject to the right of the Secretary of War, in his absolute, unguided, and unaided discretion, to take over the use of the power at any time whenever he may deem that the national exigencies, for the protection of the Government or otherwise, demand?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Suppose that language should be adopted. It would merely serve to bring us to the same situation that confronts us. If the Government should be disposed to be whimsical, or capricious, it could assert that an exigency had arisen, and under that pretense, expel the permittees. The present language, I agree, admits of a whimsical, and capricious exercise of power. So would the language suggested.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the bill as drawn makes it revocable, not for such cause as was indicated in the statement just made, but makes it revocable, as the gentleman stated a moment ago, at the whim or caprice of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If you choose to put it that way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Or at the absolute, unguided will and not the discretion of the Secretary or the need of the Government. That is the difficulty.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I used that language merely to illustrate the large powers committed to the Federal Government by the language of the bill, not to intimate that these powers would be used capriciously, or in bad faith. It is a very common thing in State legislation to provide that charters given may be revoked at the will of the legislature. It is done in my own State. What happens if it is desired to terminate activities that may be considered obnoxious? Why the general assembly repeals the act affording the charter, and the operations of the company then and there cease. The parties interested can not go into court, to raise any controversy, or interpose any delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I make this suggestion: In addition to the language of the amendment, suppose we add "revocable for cause, as hereinafter provided, and for any national exigency"?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Still you do not in any wise create a situation in any wise different from that presented by the language used in the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state what provision there is in the bill that would enable the Secretary of War to take over the plant at any time the Government needed it? I have been unable to find it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is only the recapture provision on page 7.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have read page 7 and I find no such authorization.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have not said the bill would give any such authority to the Secretary of War.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And there is no provision by which the Government could take the plant.

Mr. FLOOD. At the botton of page 9 we not only authorize the Government to take them but to remove them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Under certain conditions; but it does not authorize the Government to take them over.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; under certain conditions; but not to be able to use them.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentlemen are confusing two situations. I have not said that the bill provided any machinery for taking over and using these plants.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the author of the bill made that specific statement to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is no complete provision for taking over the plants. What I may have said in that connection was merely by way of illustration.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Would not the language proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] embrace not only a national exigency, but causes brought about by the permittee?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, but it simply multiplies words, and it does not materially change the situation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add to my amendment, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I want to add, after the word "provided," the words "or any national need or exigency."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by adding, after the word "provided," "for any national need or exigency," so that the amendment as modified will read:

"After the word 'permit,' insert the words 'for cause as hereinafter provided, or for any national need or exigency.'"

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is dealing with the situation of the importance of the National Government being able in a case of national exigency—we will say, for the national defense—by being able to avail itself of this water power without delay. If the bill provided only for the termination of the permit and does not take over the equipment by which the water can be utilized, how, then, can the Government make any use of it without delay in such exigency?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer all of these questions as satisfactorily as I can. Several gentlemen have taken language that I used by way of illustration—and so understood by the committee—and put me in the attitude of saying that the bill provided the machinery for taking over and using the plants of the permittees. It is not contended that the bill contains such a provision. In fact it has been admitted that it does not, and the chairman has stated that he was considering offering an amendment to that end. That amendment will appropriately come later.

I have sought to point out that the Government ought to have the powers given by the bill, namely the power to bring to an instant conclusion all of the activities of the permittees in this connection. The time might well come when it would be highly desirable for the Government to have and to exercise such a power. It may be very well to provide later in the bill for a complete taking over of and operation by the Government of the plants of the permittees, but that would call for a carefully drawn amendment. For the present we are concerned with determining whether it is desirable for the Government to be clothed with the power to get rid of the permittees without delay, whenever in the judgment of the Government the time has arrived for such action. The action of the Secretary in such a case, will be the action of the Government, and this action will not be lightly, or capriciously taken. The terms of the permit, will afford the working terms for capital seeking to use this power, and while the absolute power of revocation is afforded, it is not a power that would be capriciously exercised, so long as the public interests did not require it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman does not contend that we have any power under this bill to take over and use the plants.

Mr. SAUNDERS. For the time being I waive all of that, and confine myself to the power given to the Government to get rid of the permittees.

Mr. TILSON. What is the use of this at all; why not rely on the national-defense act by which you can take over and use these plants?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let us dispose of the matter in hand. The objection to the amendment of the gentleman from New York is that it will put in the hands of the permittees, the power to interpose delay and obstruction to the attempted exercise of the Government's power of revocation. This means of obstruction should not be afforded. The Government ought to be untrammeled in this respect. With respect to the permits, it may be taken for granted that the Government will issue permits that will be reasonable in their terms. Capital will not be deterred from operating and investing under these permits, merely because the Government is clothed with the power of untrammeled revocation. In many instances capitalists have invested large sums, and conducted elaborate operations under State charters, altogether undeterred by the fact the general assembly of the State could repeal that charter, and terminate their activities, at any time. This Damocles sword that the States have held over many such charters has not in anywise deterred capital from investment. Indeed it has secured very beneficial results of public advantage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think that capital will want to invest in the development of large plants which are to be subject to the whim, the will, or the wisp of some Secretary of War?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, that is an old old bugaboo.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is an old bugaboo. The Niagara companies are operating now or have been operating under revocable permits, as I understand the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand such is the case, and shall leave it to other gentlemen to put the evidence in the RECORD. In my own State when it was proposed to put into our acts of incorporation, the legislative authority to repeal same at will, the spokesmen for capital came before us, and insisted that the proposed action, would stop development and investment in Virginia. We replied, all right, that we would take the risk and from that time forward Virginia has developed in an industrial and commercial way to a most remarkable extent. I have no apprehension that the language of the pending bill will deter capital from arranging for the use of the power at Niagara.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the State of Virginia has passed a law whereby permits are revocable upon the edict, the ipse dixit, of some administrative officer?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, on the part of the legislative body.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is an entirely different thing.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not a bit of it in principle. Of course one is legislative, and the other is executive, but that makes no difference in the principle. The same possibility or capricious or wanton exercise of power, exists in either case. We were told in Virginia that to give this power of arbitrary repeal to the general assembly, would paralyze our industrial progress. It has not done so. The retention of the power by the general assembly has served to hold down corporate operations to a most wholesome extent, and cause them to serve the public welfare. I am satisfied that the power granted by the language of the pending bill, will be exercised in wise and wholesome fashion, that reasonable terms of operation will be afforded by the permits, and that capitalists will be eager to come to terms with the Government for the privilege of using this great power at Niagara. They will not be alarmed, or deterred by this bugaboo of revocation. While the Government will be clothed under the language used with the power of revocation, the permittees will not be disturbed in the useful operation of their plants, or in the enjoyment of the privileges afforded, at the whim or caprice of the Government. They will be fully assured on that point, and will feel as you feel, and as I feel, that they may rely upon the justice and integrity of the parent Government. But when the time arrives that in the public interests, the activities of the permittees should be speedily terminated, the Government should have the untrammeled power to bring this to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a new amendment and to debate it. I offer to amend the amendment by striking out all of the amendment except that part which strikes out in line 2, page 2, the word "revocable."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say in passing that I do not desire to delay the committee in the consideration of this bill, but the bill is not going to be passed in four or five minutes, and it ought not to be. We have now reached, right at the beginning of the discussion, one of the most important features in the bill, and if gentlemen propose to get impatient over discussion they wil find it difficult to pass the bill at all. The word "revocable," if stricken out, would have the effect of then leaving paragraph 1 providing that the Secretary of War is authorized to grant permits subject to the conditions following, and afterwards we could provide in the other sections the conditions as we see fit. No one can claim that I am in favor of giving particular privileges to grantees of water power. I have not incurred the enmity of most of those gentlemen for some years past because of my liberality toward them. But while I do not want to give them something to which they are not entitled, I think we ought to try to pass laws that will give a fixed status, as far as it practically can be done. I do not believe in a permit that may be revoked at any time. Now, it may be at Niagara that those who are already there with money invested and must have power in order to go forward will take anything you give them, and it may be that to that extent you can pass such a law as proposed that will be workable, but to the extent that you expect to have large additional capital put into the development of this power you will be disappointed if you have a revocable permit at the will of the War Department.

In my judgment, what ought to be done is to provide for a lease of a fixed time—personally, I have never believed in a 50-year lease, but most people differ with me in that regard—provide for a lease for a definite period, state the terms upon which it may be revoked, and then provide for the taking over, at the option of the Government, the property at the end of the 50-year period. Now, the provisions of this bill do not provide for recapture at all. The reference that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs has made to page 7 of the bill is simply a reference to language that applies in the case of a permittee who has violated some of the requirements of the act whereby two courses are given to the Government. Either it can proceed to cancel the permit or cause the Department of Justice to institute proceedings of a penal nature for the violation of some obligation and in certain instances permit the sale of the property and the purchase by some one at that court foreclosure sale who shall take it subject to the rights and with the privileges granted to the original permittee; but there is not a line that relates to the Government taking over the property. Now, so far as has been suggested by the gentleman——

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. The author of the bill and myself have discussed the matter, and we have reached the conclusion that it would be very well to offer an amendment later to put in a provision for a recapture clause.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I am glad the gentleman has that view.

Mr. FLOOD. That is the point the gentleman is discussing?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but I desire also to further discuss the question of revocable permits. I do not think Congress ought to pass an act which makes a permit revocable at will, with or without cause. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. FLOOD. These people were never provided for under any other kind of a permit. They have operated for 11 years under a revocable permit and never complained.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not justify it. The fact that we have certain people in a vice and can compel them to take what we give them ought not to be the determining factor in what we do. For this reason: It has been suggested, and to my mind with some force, that a great deal of the power that is now being used there is being used uneconomically. For instance, the report states that one power company is losing 42 per cent of the power that it ought to get from the amount of water it takes. Does the gentleman suppose that he is going to get that company to make any very great investment in order to use to its maximum efficiency that power under a revocable grant?

Mr. FLOOD. Not the slightest doubt in the world of it. It is the cheapest water power in this country, and there will be no trouble to get permittees.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the gentleman has more confidence than I have.

Mr. FLOOD. They have been before the Committee on Foreign Affairs for three or four years and have never complained of this provision.

Mr. CLINE. And they are in harmony with that provision and have already got a sinking fund to take care of it. The gentleman is worse scared than they are.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not worse scared, but the gentleman is not willing to be swept off his feet in a hurry to put the bill through.

Mr. FLOOD. Nobody wishes to hurry the gentleman; no member of the committee has tried to hurry him. The gentleman asked me a question and I want to answer it. We have considered this provision for several years. These water-power companies have been here. They have never raised any objection, but they are perfectly willing to trust to the good faith of the Secretary of War that he will not revoke permits without a good reason, without cause, unless some great national exigency demands it. This is not one of the objections they have raised to this bill. This is a great asset, a cheap water, and customers without limit at their door. There will be no trouble to get investors to take this water who will trust the Secretary of War.

This bill has been framed in the interest of the public, as we thought.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion several times to put into water-power bills a proviso giving to the Secretary of War the right to fix a charge and at the end of 20 years to change it, and every 10 years thereafter. As a result of that provision I have had a great many men interested in water-power matters who seemed to think that I was standing in the way of a proper bill, come to see me, one of them a few minutes ago. They have contended without exception that they would not be able to get capital to invest if at the end of 20 years they were liable to be subject to new charges. Now, I have not agreed with them about that, because I think the 20-year period is long enough. But if their contention be partially true, and that has been the unanimous testimony of these men, how much more true is it, in spite of what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] says, that a revocable permit, which does not guarantee to capital that is invested an hour's existence, will not be such as to induce capital to invest?

Now, I grant you that you have a peculiar situation at Niagara. You have a lot of people there who are there by sufferance. Those people who have their money in there have got to take what they can get, but I hope to see the development of Niagara by some other companies aside from those which are there. I hope to see a development larger and more economical than has been going on, and in order to get that I believe we ought to give them fixed terms, and I see no reason to have a permit revocable without cause.

As the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] suggested, we have now power under a law that we passed at the last session to take over not only water-power companies, but any other companies in America and operate them when necessary in time of war. So that need has been taken care of. It seems to me what we ought to do is to provide for such term as we think is fair and the conditions upon which it may be ended and then proper provision for taking over the property in the event we should want to do so at the end of that period. And I say that, not with the desire to make captious criticism of this bill or interfere with its consideration. I want to be, if I can, of service, but I do not think the language as it exists now is wise.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and to speak in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought at least to be fair in this matter, and while, as has been so well said by the gentleman from Kentucky, we may have the Niagara power companies by the throat, and can ram down them anything we want to, and on account of the investments already made we may force them to take it, is it right to do so? Suppose we do it; suppose next week the Secretary of War should decide to revoke their permits, then will any other company take it? If this amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] goes in—possibly they will, but if it is left to the whim and caprice, perhaps a whim or caprice that is tinctured with politics of some Secretary of War—it will be hard to find other men that are ready to invest their money. It costs an immense sum to establish one of these plants, Mr. Chairman, and if they are revocable on any whim of a Secretary of War, I imagine it would be a long time before timid capital would want to invest with this kind of a law staring them in the face.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the insertion of the words "for cause" add anything to the security of the investor? Would not the Secretary of War have the right to determine cause according to his whim?

Mr. BURNETT. Possibly that might be true in the first instance, but if that was an arbitrary and unjust decision, certainly the rights of those people could be tried and adjudicated in the courts of the country. Gentlemen say that is the trouble. They do not want it possible for the courts to decide it.

Mr. Chairman, the courts of this country are both for the protection of people and for the protection of property, and it is not unreasonable to say that if the Secretary of War has unjustly decided that there is cause, or decided without any cause, that those people ought to have the right to adjudicate their rights in the courts of the land. Let us not be oppressive. This great Government, with all its instrumentalities for enforcing its rights is the last one that ought to want to impose on any individual, whether he be in the hamlets and in the cottages of the peasants or whether he be the man who is investing his money for the development of our great country. [Applause.]

There can not be any harm come of this amendment; but there might be immense harm hereafter, if the amendment is not adopted, if some Secretary of War did not like the political affiliations of these gentlemen, or if he did not like them for any other reason, and should arbitrarily revoke their permits. While he would try to look into all these matters as carefully as possible himself, yet he would necessarily have to leave them to a great extent to others. If the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] is adopted, he would be very apt to give some good cause if he revoked the permit, and I imagine he then would be very careful not to be oppressive to men who have invested their capital. I was glad to hear my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] say that we ought to be just, at least, to these people. They have invested their money. They have some right to protection. And certainly we should not leave it where to-morrow the permittees may invest millions of dollars more and some Secretary of War would revoke their rights for what he considered cause and they be left without remedy or protection. I am not saying that any Secretary of War would do that; but, Mr. Chairman, the very fact that he has the power to do it will make people very timid about investing money in such a precarious enterprise. They will want to know that, after spending their millions of dollars for the purpose of building up an industry, it can not be whimsically taken away from them by the caprice of some man with official power; and as I understand the admissions of the able chairman of this committee, as the bill now stands that very thing would be possible. It is no answer to the proposition to say that no Secretary of War will be unjust. The very fact that he has the power to do it will keep capital from taking any chances on such an investment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All debate on this amendment is closed.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, two propositions are laid down here, and they both ought to be replied to. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] seeks to widen, in the very broadest way, this bill. In other words, he proposes to provide that for cause, and for cause only, can these rights be cut off.

Now, that gets you into court immediately. It becomes a question of whether it is a sufficient cause, which is a question for the courts to adjudicate, and which makes it impossible for the Government to wrench its property away from them except only after trial and litigation. This is usually a long-drawn-out affair, and is not sufficiently summary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FERRIS. For a question; yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to ask the gentleman if it is to be deprecated that a citizen, or a deputation of citizens, are asking too much when they are asking for a fair hearing before the courts of the country? [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman from Missouri, who long sat on the bench, knows that I deprecate no such thing. When it comes to a proposition of granting rights, we have the right to say what the grant or right shall be, whether little or much; and we have the right to say further whether or not the grantee shall be permitted to wind us around the courts for 15 or 20 years before we finally get our property back.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I regret I can not yield. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. I believe it is wide enough to drive a coach and six through it.

Now, I want to get to a question that I think is even more important, and that is the question raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and apparently acquiesced in by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], as to whether or not there ought to be a recapture clause inserted in this bill. In all the preceding bills, including my own bill, No. 407, which went through here by unanimous consent, there was such a provision, a recapture clause, and I think it laid down the correct procedure. But this bill is founded on an entirely different hypothesis. It is on an entirely different plan. It does not deal with the Government's estate in that way at all. It first grants a revocable permit; in the former bills they were specific permits fixed and certain for a specified term of years. I share what the gentleman from Kentucky says, that a revocable permit for these little projects of the West that require new construction would not in most cases be workable. This, however, presents no such case. We have a law now that does not work. I may add it is a revocable-permit law, and we are trying to get away from it. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that this is an entirely different proposition. At Niagara Falls the water-power interests are pretty well intrenched already. Their plants are already built. They are going concerns now. They need more water. Little or no additional expenditures will be required to use this additional water. I visited them last summer myself. They are all in motion. The plaintive tones of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] would scarcely appeal to him if he would go up there and see those plants. They would not appeal to him or to anybody else who knew the facts. They are pretty well intrenched, and they are getting along pretty well, and the chance to get additional water diverted is very alluring and the prospect of making their plants stronger and generating more electricity is very promising. It is not only promising but certain. Their ability to generate is present, also their market conditions are certain.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not prepared to say that they ought to have the same inducements that other people might need, but whatever terms we may make, we should make them clear and not subject to arbitrary action at any time of an executive officer.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield in a moment to the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to what the gentleman says.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman let me go a little further? Then I will yield to all of the gentlemen.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Very well.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Kentucky, acquiesced in by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], seems to say that there is no recapture clause in this bill. That is true, but there is a much higher authority here than that.

Let me read it. It occurs on page 9, beginning with line 17:

And provided further, That in any case where the Secretary of War shall revoke any permit granted under authority of this act, he may remove, or cause the removal of, any structures or parts of structures, or any construction incidental to or used for the diversion of water or the transmission of power as herein provided, and such removal may be enforced by mandamus, injunction, or other summary process by application to the district court of the United States in the district in which such structure may in whole or in part exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But that does not provide for taking over the property.

Mr. FERRIS. This assumes that the taking over will be a simple process. If we are able to stop them, and even make them remove their property, the retaking would be perfectly simple.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think I will use all the five minutes. I want to try to hurry on. I want to yield to one or two other gentlemen. What can the Secretary of War do? He can revoke the permit. What next can he do? He can make them clear out the property and get out of the way for the institution of a more modern plant, for the institution of a new plant, for the installation of a new institution, either operated by the Government or by any succeeding grantee, permittee, or lessee. This seems to me amply sufficient to preserve what the gentleman is clamoring for.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We passed through Congress last year an appropriation of $20,000,000 to build a nitrate plant or plants. Under this bill, as it stands to-day, would it be possible, or after this bill is passed will it be possible, for the Government in any way to acquire any of this property for the use of the Government in the manufacture of nitrates?

Mr. FERRIS. Why, yes; they could revoke the permit to-morrow or any succeeding day, and use the power for a nitrate plant any time they wanted to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They can destroy the buildings, but they can not put up new buildings for use in the manufacture of nitrates.

Mr. FERRIS. The property would, in all things, be unfettered, and Congress could do anything it desired. The real property is the falling water. That is the thing that does not rust out nor wear out, and that will be with us for all time. It is not a lot of old claptrap machinery that may be worn out or rotted out with passing years. Our main solicitude should be for the dam site—the falling water, and so forth—not the machinery and purchasable paraphernalia.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman contend that the language he has read would authorize the erection by this Government in time of necessity, or the acquisition by this Government of an existing plant there for the manufacture of nitrates?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. I do not contend that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman just said he did contend that.

Mr. FERRIS. No; I said we could clear out their plant and institute a new one, of course getting appropriate authority from Congress, or from the department, or whatever department of the Government has the power. We can do that without any complication from any permittee or lessee or grantee. This committee, intending to be in absolute harmony with the spirit of the House, has brought in a bill that is drastic and very powerful and very strong. It is fashioned in the public interest. They have done well. They are entitled to be supported. Under the circumstances I think the committee were justified in doing what they did do. Of course, if an independent proposition was desired on the purchase of the property, that could be incorporated, but in a revocable-permit bill I do not think it necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The question was asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and several other gentlemen have suggested that the language here used about revocable permits is very vague, and they have expressed a little apprehension lest there would not be development under any bill that used language of that sort. I merely want to put into the RECORD in this connection, for the gentleman's purposes, and as a part of his argument, this language taken from the act relating to the diversion of the waters of the Niagara River, passed some years ago, under which this great plant has been built up there. Here is the language contained in that act:

SEC. 5. The Secretary of War is authorized to revoke any or all permits granted by him by authority of this act, and nothing herein contained shall be held to confirm, establish, or alter any powers heretofore claimed or exercised connected with the diversion of water or the transmission of power.

Then in addition to that I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that this language is used in the act—

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So both those things are found in that act.

Mr. SHERLEY. The last language read by the gentleman is not necessary, as the Supreme Court decided a week ago.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I deny that. It means a great deal.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Supreme Court held, in substance, that the insertion of those words did not add to the power of Congress.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want to yield for a legal argument.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I do not want to make one. The point is that that act that was passed did not give the kind of a revocable grant that this does, and that act was so unsatisfactory that we are now making a new one.

Mr. FLOOD. Let me suggest that that act was perfectly satisfactory as long as it lasted, but it expired by limitation. And it was renewed two different times afterwards.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not a fact that the act which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has read was passed after the development was made, and was not that development made on a grant from the State of New York, and the riparian rights, and not under that act at all?

Another thing. As I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], he bases his argument against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York upon the fact that while, where the undertaking is a new one and has not been financed, revocable permits are objectionable because they are not workable, yet we have got these fellows caught. They are already in the meshes; we can make them do this, and, although it is not fair or right or just, we can make them do it, and therefore let us make them do it.

Mr. FERRIS. I am told by the chairman of the committee that they do not object to that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But I am here offering an amendment for that very purpose.

Mr. FLOOD. Let me say that this is the cheapest water power in the United States, if not in the world, and if they do not want to stay there other gentlemen may come in.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am not speaking for them; I am speaking for all the people, and these people do distribute power cheaper than anyone else in the United States.

Mr. FLOOD. They do not; they get the cheapest power, and then charge the largest price for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. LONGWORTH asked unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. A few minutes ago I directed an inquiry to the gentleman from Virginia whether a revocable permit would induce capital to invest its money for the development of the surplus water power. He instanced the former law as applicable to the amount of power in existence at that time. I direct the inquiry as to whether any additional capital has been invested since that time for the development of water power?

Mr. FLOOD. The law itself limited the quantity of water taken to the two existing companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. And therefore the citation made by the gentleman from Virginia is not applicable.

Mr. FLOOD. The development of power has been greater since then, for they have developed by new machinery an increased power.

Mr. FERRIS. Water power at Niagara can be developed at the lowest cost of any place in the country. I do not believe that laying down a fairly drastic rule for Niagara will be counted as a precedent for the building up and generation of hydroelectric energy at other points.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. This discussion has proceeded on the theory that this authority permitting the use of this energy is revocable at the pleasure of the Secretary of War. It is true that it states that it is revocable. On page 7, beginning on line 6, the conditions are stated, as I understand the bill, under which revocation takes place.

Mr. FERRIS. They have a general right to revoke as provided in section 2, page 2. The first proviso on page 2 is the one that provides for the revocation by the War Department and the second authorizes an alternative one, and the esthetic fellows who do not think any water ought to be used at all, and then another one on account of the treaty provision; and still others which contain other specific provisions.

Mr. SUMNERS. I am afraid the gentleman did not get my question. There is a general statement on page 2 that confers revocable authority, but the gentleman understands that the rule is that where a general term is used and then there is a limitation put upon the right, that the limitation controls. I have not found anything in the bill which would at all broaden the conditions that appear on page 7, which provides that if any permittee at any time shall fail or refuse after receiving reasonable notice to comply with any provisions of the act or any of the conditions of the permit, and so forth, the Secretary of War may revoke the permit. Second, there is a provision that if the permittee fails to comply with any lawful order or regulation made by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers the Secretary of War may revoke the permit. Whether it was a lawful order or regulation would be governed by the language of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will not ask me in the short time allotted me to construe the bill. I am not in charge of this bill, and of course am not the best authority to draw fine distinctions or to place construction on the same. I will yield to the chairman for that purpose. I am sure he will be able to deal with the construction of the later sections in the bill. Anyway, if the gentleman from Texas is right, we can amend the sections he has just read when we reach them.

Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I believe the Chair recognized me a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SABATH. I do not desire to deprive the gentleman from Ohio of the floor, but I am a member of the committee and for the last 30 minutes I have been endeavoring to attract the eye of the chairman, but I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Possibly the gentleman from Illinois can answer the question which I would like to have answered by some member of the committee. I think it is extremely important, in view of the action taken by this Congress with regard to the expenditure of $20,000,000 for the manufacture of nitrogen that we should determine whether, if this bill is passed, Niagara Falls could be used for the location. Let me state what the situation is to-day, as I understand it.

We gave a very broad authorization to the President to determine by what means nitrogen can be made in this country, whether by the use of water power or by some other means, and whether it ought to be consolidated in one plant or made in several plants. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] I think is wrong, and also the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], in stating that Niagara is the best and cheapest water power in the world. My information is that the Norway water power is much cheaper. That was where Germany used to make her nitrogen out of the air.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is right about that, but that is the only water power in the world that is as cheap as Niagara.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact is, and I pointed it out in my discussion in opposition to this nitrate plant, that the German interests gave up their control of the Norway water power because they had discovered methods of making nitrogen more cheaply than even by the cheapest water power in the world; but suppose this commission which the President has appointed, which I understand consists of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, should decide that water power was the best way of making it, and that there should be one plant to make it, would it be possible, if this bill were passed, to have that plant situated at Niagara Falls?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would call the gentleman's attention to the language of this amendment, and then call his attention to the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. There is a question on page 7 whether these permits are revocable except for the cases specified.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is for violation of the provisions of the act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. Now, under the amendment as offered by me, they are revocable for any national need or exigency, so the gentleman's question is solved at once if the amendment be accepted.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely; and I shall vote for the gentleman's amendment for that reason; but I want to know whether if that amendment be not adopted, and if the bill goes through as it stands, Niagara is eliminated as a site for this nitrate plant and only Muscle Shoals left?

Mr. FLOOD. I stated to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and I supposed the gentleman from Ohio heard it, that there would be an amendment offered to the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I want to get at. I want to understand what the situation is.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I desire to state to the gentleman from Ohio that the War Department has already decided that the nitrate plant can not be located within 200 miles of the border; so Niagara has been eliminated without any provision.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Both the Navy Department and the War Department have fixed upon that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, of course, this nitrate plant seems to be driven farther south.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the gentleman from New York, as well as the gentleman from Alabama, is unduly alarmed about the power given the Secretary of War in this bill. The Secretary had the power under the present act to revoke the permits of these companies, but instead of revoking the permits he has granted them, as well as did the former Secretary, additional permits under which they now operate. I think it has been explained by the gentleman from Texas that the Secretary is limited in his power to revoke this permit, inasmuch as the provision in section 4, on page 7, clearly defines when and how he can revoke permits granted under this bill. The bill clearly sets forth that if any permittee shall at any time fail or refuse, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions of the act, or with any of the conditions of the permit or any lawful order or regulation made by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the provisions of the act, the Secretary of War may revoke the penalty—not at will, but he must first serve the companies with a notice, and if they should fail to comply with the notice given by the Secretary or Board of Engineers, or with the order of the department, then the Secretary would have the power to act, and not before. But even if the permittees should fail to comply, I am certain no Secretary would revoke a permit issued by him, because we know from past experience that very seldom a grant or franchise given to private corporations, as these two are, are revoked, because there are usually many additional provisions to be found in any act, the same as in this one, which give the grantees or permittees the right to contest.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. So long as the gentleman from Illinois contends that the Secretary can only revoke for the causes "hereinafter stated," can there be any objection to putting that into the bill; and, secondly, would not the additional clause suggested that it might be revoked also if a national need or exigency which may exist, entirely aside from and in any addition to the nitrate plant; would not that be an addition to the bill as something for the Government's benefit and not against it?

Mr. SABATH. No; that would be merely a repetition. The mere fact that it is provided for, how the permit could be revoked, is clearly set forth and it is not necessary to set it forth again. As to the other question that the gentleman propounded to me, I wish to say that I fully agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and I believe that a proper and carefully drafted provision of recapturing the plant could be inserted in the bill which would cure the so-called defect that the gentleman from New York believes the bill may contain.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I will.

Mr. TILSON. I was just going to ask the gentleman what benefit, after all, accrues if we can simply revoke the permit, shut off the water, and compel the owners to clear out their buildings? Then we have nothing left. We simply destroy the property and then should have to proceed under the right of eminent domain, or some other process, to get the real estate and proceed to erect a plant of our own. In my judgment, a proper recapture provision should go into the bill in the interest of all concerned.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is right; I agree with the gentleman, and that is the reason I have answered the gentleman from New York that I heartily favor the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky that a carefully prepared amendment should be adopted that would give us the right of recapture. To my mind it will be a grave mistake if we do not in every possible way protect the interest of the people from these as all other similar corporations, combinations, and trusts.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to put in the RECORD some of the testimony given by Chief of Engineers, Gen. Black, and by Col. Keller before the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL (H. REPT. NO. 1350).

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, and I desire to say that I shall endeavor to call the bill up immediately following the consideration of the rivers and harbors bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order on the bill. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky says that he intends to call this bill up immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of the rivers and harbors bill. My understanding is, acquired from the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, that it is his intention to call up the revenue bill on Monday and endeavor to secure its passage on Tuesday. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if his plans are running counter to those of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I hope to get this bill over to the Senate before Monday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman thinks he will be able to pass it before Monday?

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope so.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. RUCKER of Missouri, for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. GARNER, for two days, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 7748. SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 25, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast said of old where there is no vision the people perish. Every question presented to us is impressive with its relation to the questions yet to arise in our national life, and every problem bears within itself its ever-widening circle of influence and power affecting the issues which are before us. We thank Thee that there is light upon the future, as well as a voice out of the past. We pray for that vision which will enable us to see clearly the path of duty and righteousness and justice, and led on by the God of our fathers may we establish that which is right in the sight of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are but eight Senators in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Stone
Beckham	Hardwick	Oliver	Sutherland
Brady	Husting	Overman	Thomas
Brandegee	James	Reed	Tillman
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Robinson	Townsend
Chamberlain	Jones	Saulsbury	Underwood
Clapp	Kenyon	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clark	La Follette	Sheppard	Walsh
Colt	Lane	Sherman	Watson
Culberson	McCumber	Shields	Weeks
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.	Works
Dillingham	Myers	Smith, S. C.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] because of sickness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. OVERMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to state that the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations is at work on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and we are very anxious to push it forward as fast as possible. I ask that the members of the subcommittee be excused from attendance on the session of the Senate to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator state the names of the Senators composing the subcommittee, so that it may appear of record.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The subcommittee is composed of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that the subcommittee, which has in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill, shall be excused from attendance in the Senate to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 7359. An act authorizing the Delaware Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Nanticoke River at Seaford, Sussex County, Del.; and

S. 7748. An act to authorize the United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Co., and such other corporation or individuals as may be associated with it, to construct a bridge across the portion of the Delaware River between the mainland of the county of Camden and State of New Jersey, and Petty Island, in said county and State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the development of water power, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution 2, introduced by Mr. Scott.

To the honorable PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby respectfully submit the following resolution:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill for an act providing for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto; and

"Whereas the State of Montana is desirous of the reasonable development of its resources under such laws and regulations as will effectively conserve the public interest, is vitally interested in the consideration of such water-power bill; and

"Whereas there exists in our State an urgent need for the opportunity of developing its water power as an aid to its industrial growth and progress; and

"Whereas there are situated within the State of Montana many large streams and natural power sites of magnitude and great potential possibilities, the early development of which, for the production of hydroelectric energy and other kindred uses, depends entirely, in large measure, in the attitude and action of the National Congress in connection therewith: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the House of Representatives of the State of Montana, respectfully ask, in connection with the water-power bill now under consideration in the Senate of the United States, for immediate legislation such as will permit, fully and freely, the development of water power in the streams and power sites on the public lands and on the Indian reservations in Montana, under such rules and regulations as the Congress of the United States may prescribe.

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Hon. HENRY L. MYERS and Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH, United States Senators at Washington, D. C."

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution transmitted to you this day originated in the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and was duly passed this 16th day of January, 1917.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

JAS. F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

C. H. TREACY,
Chief Clerk.

Approved January 16, 1917.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed on January 16, 1917, at 1.45 p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of house resolution No. 2, memorializing the Congress of the United States for the early consideration of water-power legislation, enacted by the fifteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, on the 16th day of January, 1917.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 16th day of January, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona unanimously adopted, and I ask that the same be read.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

Senate memorial 1.

THIRD STATE LEGISLATURE,
SENATE CHAMBER.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America and the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.:

Your memorialist, the Third Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

That there is embraced within the Colorado River Indian Reservation in Yuma County, Ariz., approximately 150,000 acres of highly fertile river-bottom lands, splendidly adapted to the growing of general agricultural products, and of rich mesa or high table lands especially adapted, by reason of unusually favorable conditions of soil and climate, to the culture of citrus and other valuable fruits.

That exhaustive engineering investigations conducted by the State land department of Arizona, under and by authority of certain acts of the second legislature, and with the permission of the Secretary of the Interior, establish beyond reasonable doubt the existence of underground water resources, adequate in quantity and quality for the successful reclamation of the said lands and the feasibility of such reclamation by means of pumping plants by individual settlers or cooperative communities of settlers.

That the reclamation and development of this splendid body of land and its utilization by progressive agriculturists and horticulturists would greatly enhance the wealth and prosperity of the State of Arizona, provide homes for thousands of patriotic citizens, and increase the production of those food supplies so sorely needed for the sustenance of the peoples of the world.

That the allotment of such of the lands embraced within the said Indian Reservation as may be needed by the Indians attached thereto, and the opening of the remainder to settlement or sale, would not only effect these most highly desired objects but would also be an act of simple justice to the town of Parker, which, though established by virtue of Federal action and encouragement, finds itself after years of waiting still surrounded by Indian lands and effectually cut off from the development to which its natural resources entitle it.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Third State Legislature of Arizona, respectfully but urgently prays that such action be had by Congress and by the Secretary of the Interior as may be necessary to effect the proper, just, and expeditious allotment to the Indians attached to the said Colorado Indian Reservation, of the lands needed by them or for their use, and the restoration of the remainder of said reservation or some considerable portion thereof to entry under the United States land laws, or its subjection to sale under such terms and conditions, rules, and regulations as will prove just to the Indians at present owning the said land and to the settlers who will be attracted to it, thus achieving in the fullest measure the beneficent purposes described herein.

And your memorialist will every pray.

Passed the senate January 17, 1917, by the following vote: 19 ayes.

D. H. CLARIDGE,
President of the Senate.

C. P. HICKS,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house January 18, 1917, by the following vote: 34 ayes, no nays, one absent, none excused.

A. A. JOHNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

SAM W. PROCTOR,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the City Council of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, praying for national prohibition, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas it is proposed that the Congress of the United States submit to the various States of the Union a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation within the United States and their dependencies, of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes; and

Whereas it is known that the traffic in intoxicating liquors results in great industrial, economic, and moral loss, and greatly increases human suffering without compensatory benefits; and

Whereas the abolition of such traffic has, wherever fairly tried, brought about great improvement in the moral and economic condition of mankind; and

Whereas 23 States of the Union have by constitutional amendment or legislative enactment abolished such traffic: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memoralized to submit to the States, as soon as practicable, the said proposed amendment of the National Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That after concurrence of the house of representatives herein the chief clerk of the senate shall transmit copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 11, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 16, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF OREGON,
SENATE CHAMBER.

I, John W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 4, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 11, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 16, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 18th day of January, 1917.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, favoring the enactment of legislation to exclude liquor advertisements from the mails. I ask that the memorial may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 3.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas 23 States of the Union have, by constitutional amendment or statutory enactment, prohibited the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and the enforcement of the laws of said States in that behalf is hampered and impeded by the circulation through the United States mails within said State of advertisements inducing and encouraging the purchase and importation of intoxicating liquors, and such importation of liquors is often made for the purpose of evading the laws of States prohibiting the liquor traffic, to the great detriment and injury of the citizens of such States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact such legislation as will prohibit transmission through the mails of the United States of written or printed matter advertising intoxicating liquors for sale or other distribution for circulation within States whose laws prohibit the same; be it further

Resolved, That after concurrence of the house of representatives herein the chief clerk of the senate shall transmit copies of this memorial to the Senators from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 11, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 16, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF OREGON,
SENATE CHAMBER.

I, John W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 3, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 11, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 16, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 18th day of January, 1917.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have also a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, praying for the passage of the so-called volunteer officers' retirement bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5.

To the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States Senate bill 392, introduced by Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, known as the Civil War volunteer retired list bill, to authorize placing thereon, with retired pay, certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War; and

Whereas the Committee on Military Affairs have reported the same to the Senate with amendments and as thus amended the committee recommended that the bill do pass; and

Whereas the provisions of said bill are as pledged by Congress and President Lincoln at the opening of the Civil War to the several States and to the volunteers furnished by them; and

Whereas the present policy of the Government is to retire all surviving officers of the Regular Army and Navy at half pay for life at ages less than any of those who will receive the recognition accorded by this act; and

Whereas full retired pay for life to all survivors of the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and Indian wars in accordance with rank have been granted and furnishes a commanding precedent; and

Whereas public sentiment of the Nation is shown by the unanimous action of the legislatures of 13 States, speaking for approximately 50,000,000 of our people, recommending the enactment of such a measure: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress and the entire Congress of the United States of America be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested that said bill, known as the volunteer retired bill, be speedily taken up and put upon its final passage, and which will give the same aid according to rank as that given to the retired officers of the Regular Army, deducting any pensions that they now receive.

Resolved further, That the chief clerk of the senate is hereby directed to transmit certified copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the National Congress and to each of the Oregon Representatives and Senators in Congress.

Adopted by the Senate January 12, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 16, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF OREGON,
SENATE CHAMBER.

I, John W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 5, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 12, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 16, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 18th day of January, 1917.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Milford, New Haven, Hartford, and Wallingford, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the New Departure Manufacturing Co., of Bristol, Conn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on net incomes of corporations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have received a number of telegrams relative to conditions at the Papago Indian Reservation in my State, and in order to preserve them I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TUCSON, ARIZ., January 25, 1917.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Am advised the Government contemplates water developments on Santa Cruz River above Tucson that would seriously affect water supply of Tucson and of various irrigation projects. We protest against any developments that would in any way interfere with the supply for projects already completed. Over $3,000,000 have been used to complete our development, and we now have over 100 farmers established who would suffer.

Hon. M. A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution 478.

"Whereas at a call meeting of the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson, held in said city on the 24th day of January, 1917, the attention of the council was directed to the fact that the proposed Indian appropriation bill now before the Congress of the United States contains provisions for appropriations for development of water in the San Xavier Indian Reservation in Pima County, Ariz., and which said development if carried out would in the opinion of the city engineer of the city of Tucson greatly imperil the supply of water obtained by this city and supplied to the people of the city of Tucson: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson, That the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson on behalf of the residents of the said city do hereby most strongly protest against the passage of such appropriations; and be it further

"Resolved, That copy of this resolution be mailed at once to the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, with a request that he personally present the foregoing resolution to the proper committees or to Congress, and he use every effort to forestall the appropriation aforementioned."

Passed and adopted by the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson this 24th day of January, 1917. Approved this 24th day of January, 1917.

O. C. PARKER, Mayor.

TUCSON, ARIZ., January 25, 1917.

Hon. M. A. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, owners of about 20,000 acres out of a possible 30,000, Indians owning about 5,000, in the Santa Cruz Valley, Pima County, Ariz., adjacent San Xavier Indian Reservation, on information that the United States Indian Service are seeking to develop and use the water of the Santa Cruz River above our lands, protest against any such arbitrary procedure. We are dependent for irrigation of our lands on the underflow of the Santa Cruz River below the reservation. This project menaces our water supply on which we are entirely dependent, and we urge you as our representative to do all possible to prevent it.

Tucson Farms Co., H. C. Kinison, I. F. Nichols, F. S. Leeberger, Mary T. Hampshire, Joaquin Carrillo, Quintus Monier, Catherine Hesse, Kenney Bros., Henry Petersen, S. B. AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that village delivery service shall be established in all towns and villages having a population of 1,000 or more in which the postal receipts shall have been in excess of $3,000 for the past fiscal year, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment providing for compensation to printers in the Post Office Department, 10 at $1,500 each, 6 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,300 each, 2 at $1,200 each, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing during the fiscal year 1918 for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees receiving salaries at a rate per annum less than $1,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that in addition to compensation now allowed by law the further sum of $15 per month be allowed each rural-delivery carrier serving a route 18 miles or more for maintenance of such equipment as is necessary in the discharge of his duties as a letter carrier, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted an amendment authorizing a report upon the feasibility of constructing the Colorado River Indian irrigation project, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain horticultural experimental stations in the Mississippi Valley, to be located in the principal grape-growing States of Missouri, Ohio, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUGHES submitted an amendment providing that postmasters having public money belonging to the Government at any office within a city or town where there is no Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer of the United States or designated depositary may deposit the same temporarily at his own risk in any National or State bank or trust company, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment providing that the office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a non-political office and shall be within the classified civil service, and appointments thereto shall be made in accordance with the civil-service rules, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the regents of the University of California that portion of the military reservation of the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., on which the Palace of Fine Arts is located, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill (H. R. 18994), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

THIRTEENTH FEDERAL FARM-LAND BANK DISTRICT.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 7583) to amend the Federal farm-loan act by providing for the establishment of the thirteenth Federal farm-land bank district, to be composed of the States of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico, and to establish a Federal land bank therein at Denver, Colo. I am opposed to that measure, and I should like to offer this amendment when it is taken up. I ask that the amendment may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17350) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there concurrent or other resolutions? If there be none, the morning business is closed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of House bill 18542, which is known as the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by Mr. BRYAN, on page 119, after line 3, to insert the following words:

In order to effect economy in the matter of auditing and accounting, the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, stations, or non-accounting offices in any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who raised a point of order on the amendment, is engaged in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and will be in the Chamber in a moment. Meantime I desire to say that the Postmaster General has written a letter, in which he states that it is not his purpose to withdraw anybody from the classified service. I quote from a letter which he wrote to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who has sent me a copy of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not have the entire letter read, so that it will be in the RECORD?

Mr. BRYAN. I think this is the vital part of the letter:

The sole purpose of this amendment is to enable the department to establish a more effective, practical, and scientific system of accounting and auditing.

Mr. WEEKS entered the Chamber.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is now in the Chamber, and I ask him if, in view of this statement by the Post Office Department, he will not withdraw his point of order?

Mr. WEEKS. I am anxious to cooperate in any proposition to bring about real economy in the Postal Service without interfering with the existing order more than is necessary. I am fearful that the proposition introduced by the Senator from Florida may mean the abolishment of postmasters at the option of the postmaster at a central post office or the changing of employees or in some other way interfering with that part of the service, which, I think, should be strictly under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department at Washington.

I have prepared a substitute for the proposition which the Senator from Florida has introduced. I will send it to the desk, and should like to have it read. If the Senator from Florida will accept the substitute, I shall withdraw the point of order which I have made against his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. BRYAN, it is proposed to insert:

In order to promote economy in the distribution of supplies and in auditing and accounting, the Postmaster General may designate districts and central offices in such districts through which supplies shall be distributed and accounts audited, but in no case shall the postmaster at the central station be given authority to abolish offices, to change officers or employees in offices included in such district.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I shall accept the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts offers, and shall agree that it shall stand in the place of the amendment which I have offered, if I may properly do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair understands that the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn?

Mr. WEEKS. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, which has been accepted by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I think perhaps it would be well, with the permission of the Senator from Utah, to have the letter written by the First Assistant Postmaster General on this subject inserted in the RECORD, if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD, without reading.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 25, 1917.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: I notice from the RECORD of yesterday that in discussing the legislative bill in connection with the establishment of nonaccounting offices, you ask whether in the event these offices are made nonaccounting offices, "Will not those offices be suboffices, and therefore not under civil service?"

I wish to state for your information that if the proposed amendment is enacted into law it will not result in the withdrawal of a single position from the classified civil service, neither will the name of the office be changed or its status affected in any particular, nor would the service to the public be affected in any way. The sole purpose of this amendment is to enable the department to establish a more effective, practical, and scientific system of accounting and auditing.

Sincerely, yours,

_____,

First Assistant Postmaster General."

Mr. BRYAN. In view of the adoption of the last amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 18, it is proposed to change the total from "$284,730" to "$254,730."

Mr. SMOOT. That is a reduction of $30,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, during the discussion of this bill we have had a good many references to what are stated as facts, that in various departments there are employees working side by side, doing the same kind of work, but who are paid entirely different salaries. Many suggestions have been made that such conditions as those should be investigated by the Efficiency Bureau and should be remedied.

I think it has also been stated by the Senator having charge of the bill that the amendments already adopted cover that phase of the matter. I do not think so; I have some doubt about it. It has been stated that the amendments on pages 31 and 32 cover that matter. I do not think so. The first paragraph of the amendment, on page 31, as I think, simply covers the methods of examining and auditing claims against the United States. The second paragraph simply relates to the investigation of work performed by the Subtreasuries and a report to Congress. The third paragraph simply provides for the investigation of methods of transacting public business in the Civil Service Commission. That paragraph certainly does not cover the situation referred to. The fourth paragraph provides for ascertaining the rates of pay by the various State and municipal governments. That does not cover this phase of the situation. The last paragraph simply provides that officers and employees in the executive departments shall furnish representatives of the Efficiency Bureau information with reference to the matters that they are authorized to investigate. Therefore none of these paragraphs, I take it, cover definitely that phase of the situation.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that is true; but if the Senator from Washington will notice the text of the House bill, on page 31, he will see that it reads:

To investigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service.

However, I see no objection to doing anything else that will confer the general authority that is desired.

Mr. JONES. I was going to submit an amendment that might be considered in connection with all these other amendments in conference. So, to come in after the amendment adopted, on page 32, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 32, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the classification, salary, and efficiency of the employees of the departments in the District of Columbia and report fully or partially to Congress by January 1, 1918, as to needed equalization or reclassification; and if a partial report be submitted, then a full report shall be submitted as soon thereafter as possible, with such recommendations as the bureau may deem proper.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see no objection to that amendment, and I accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "appropriated," on page 1, line 8, of the substitute adopted on motion of Mr. SMOOT, it is proposed to add the words "this appropriation to be immediately available."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I shall want a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition, if it is not accepted by the committee. I do not want to be cut out from that privilege; but I shall not call for a quorum unless it is necessary.

My purpose in offering that amendment is to provide for the immediate needs of the employees who are affected by the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which was adopted last Tuesday.

I should have offered it at that time, if the Senate had not immediately adjourned. Undoubtedly, it is the purpose of the Senate—and, I think, properly so—to provide that employees now paid $480 or less shall receive 15 per cent additional compensation, and employees now drawing $1,000 or less shall receive 10 per cent additional compensation; but that additional compensation under the amendment of the Senator from Utah as it now stands will not be available to these employees until next July. The high cost of living is here; if there is any reason for this increase—and I think there is—then the increase should be made immediately available.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator's amendment, but it occurs to me that, if inserted at the place indicated, it would not be applicable. I wish the Senator would have the entire amendment read as it would be if the amendment were agreed to, and see whether he has proposed to insert it at the proper place.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think it is offered at the proper place. I have no objection to its being read, so that the Senate will understand what I am getting at; but I assume that, if the purpose of the Senate is demonstrated on the vote which shall be taken on this motion, the conferees can adjust it so that it will carry out the object which I have in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator explain a little further to us just what the amendment does contemplate?

Mr. WEEKS. It contemplates that employees receiving $480 a year or less shall immediately, commencing with the approval of the bill, receive 15 per cent additional compensation to that which they are now receiving?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Per month?

Mr. WEEKS. Per month. And those receiving $1,000 or less shall receive an additional compensation of 10 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would add five additional months. The Smoot amendment carries the additional compensation for 12 months, does it not?

Mr. WEEKS. It would add 5 more months, the Smoot amendment now carrying an increase for 12 months beginning next July.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would add to this year's expenditures, running through the entire system of Government appropriations, five-twelfths as much more as will be carried by the so-called Smoot amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Quite likely it would add $400,000 or $500,000 to the expenditures.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Four or five million dollars.

Mr. WEEKS. No; I mean hundreds of thousands of dollars to the expenditures for this year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is, on this particular bill; but if we apply the same principle straight through the other appropriation bills, as no doubt will be done, it will add $6,000,000 more of appropriations for the present fiscal year.

Mr. WEEKS. I think that is probable; I have not the figures. The Senator from Utah can inform us about that.

Mr. SMOOT. The amount that would be required under the amendment, applied only to this bill, would be $561,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But applied to all other appropriation bills, it would be much more; and if the proposal is finally agreed to, it will probably apply to more than this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Applied to all employees of the Government in the classification indicated it would involve $13,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And this amendment would involve five-twelfths of $13,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, then whatever amount to be appropriated becomes immediately available.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no; that is not what the Senator from Massachusetts said.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What the Senator from Massachusetts said, if I understood him, was that the same principle which the amendment of the Senator from Utah will apply for the next fiscal year, beginning the 1st of July, shall also apply during the next five months, and that the employees covered by the amendment shall monthly for the next five months receive the same increase which they will receive under the amendment of the Senator from Utah for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Georgia is right, except that it shall apply on the approval of the bill, of course, whenever that may be.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I doubt whether the amendment will reach the object intended.

Mr. WEEKS. I am not quite confident that the amendment will do that, but I take it for granted that the matter can be adjusted in conference, so that the purpose of the amendment will be carried out; but what I want to say, Mr. President, is that we do not know what conditions are going to be a year from now or six months from now. By that time we may get back to normal conditions, and the prices of articles that these people have to buy may have returned to the prices which obtained a year or two years ago. We do know, however, that now they are compelled to pay excessive prices for everything they buy, and therefore, if there is any reason for adopting the Smoot substitute—and I think there is—it should be made immediately applicable, so that it may now afford relief to these employees.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I understand the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, it does not apply to the provisions of the Smoot amendment at the present time, but simply provides that money shall be available to meet the obligation of that amendment. However, that obligation does not arise until the 1st of July, and therefore it is proposed to make available now money to pay an obligation which will not arise until the 1st of July, instead of increasing the pay at the present time.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think that it has that effect, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to have the additional money available now for these employees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator wants this additional money immediately available?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not the money appropriated by the amendment of the Senator from Utah, but, in addition to that, the Senator desires to appropriate an amount for similar extra compensation for the next five months?

Mr. WEEKS. That is it exactly. Mr. President, I might not have voted for the Smoot amendment if I thought Congress would be in session on the 1st of July and things would become normal by that time. I would have approached that matter in an entirely different way. I would have been glad, then, to have taken up the individual merits of employees and determined whether they were entitled to more compensation, but now we know that these people are probably suffering, and I do not want to wait six months to determine that they shall have relief, which it was evidently the intention of the Senate in the vote taken the other day that they should have.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will read the section now as it will be if the Senator's amendment shall be adopted, and I think, after reading it, he will agree with the construction which I put upon it. Section 7, with the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, will read as follows:

That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at the rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated—

Then comes the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts that—

This appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me very plain that if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted another amendment will be necessary. I think it would be a simple matter to provide such an amendment which could be inserted at the beginning of the so-called Smoot substitute. Will the Senator read a line there, and I will suggest what ought to be stricken out in order to make it work properly.

Mr. SMOOT. I will read it over again.

That to provide, during the fiscal year——

Mr. NORRIS. At that point, strike out the words "during the fiscal year 1918." If we strike those words out, we will be making appropriations that will run during the entire fiscal year plus the time from the enactment of the law to the beginning of the present year.

Mr. SMOOT. No; if we strike those words out, there will be no appropriation for the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the appropriation comes later in the amendment. We do not have to state "during the fiscal year"; but that limits it. If it is not so limited, it would be for the life of the bill and become immediately available as soon as the bill became a law and expire, of course, with the end of the fiscal year for which the law is made.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that, because it would only take effect the 1st of July. The whole bill applies to that year.

Mr. NORRIS. But if it is made immediately available, it will become applicable.

Mr. WORKS. But if we insert a provision there respecting this particular item that this shall commence, not the 1st of July but from the time of the taking effect of this act, it will meet the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. Besides, the act provides in the title that it is "an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes."

Mr. WORKS. But you may fix a particular time when this particular provision or section of it shall take effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts does not do that.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly not.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have a recourse which I am quite willing to adopt. I think the Senate knows exactly what I am driving at. I will offer an amendment to the bill in the Senate which will provide for an expenditure of $561,000, to be made immediately available, under the terms of this whole substitute.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator insists on this amendment now?

Mr. WEEKS. I will withdraw this amendment and offer an amendment in the Senate which will provide a definite amount of money. I do not know how much would be required.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 145, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$8,500." The amendment has reference to the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts of appeals.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts of appeals is fixed by general statute, and is a general law. I make the point of order that this amendment is out of order for that reason, and for the further reason that it has not been reported by a committee or estimated for by a department of the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I suppose the amendment is subject to a point of order; but I had hoped that the point of order would not be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I certainly shall make it and insist upon it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt the Senator will make it, because he has made it; but that does not alter the fact that I had hoped he would not make it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he meant he still hoped it would not be made, and that was my reason for saying that I must insist upon it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; my hopes have gone glimmering, Mr. President. I indulged them up to a certain point, and then I abandoned them. I repeat, however, that I had hoped that the Senator from Georgia would be moved to let the amendment be voted upon by the Senate.

If I may be indulged just a moment before the point of order is ruled upon—and I shall take but a moment—I want to call attention to the fact that for the ability which is necessary, and the character of the service which is rendered by these judges, in my judgment they are the poorest paid servants of the Government of the United States.

The members of the Federal Reserve Board receive $12,000 per annum, or $5,000 more than a circuit judge of the United States, and $6,000 more or twice as much as a district judge of the United States.

The members of the Federal Farm Loan Board receive $10,000 per annum, and although a plea has been made here for economy, a determined fight was made on the side of the Chamber from which this point of order is now made to retain those salaries at $10,000 per annum, and they have been retained.

The members of the Federal Trade Commission receive $10,000 per annum. For the life of me I can not understand why a member of that board should be paid $10,000 per annum and a circuit judge should be paid only $7,000 per annum, or $3,000 less.

The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission receive $10,000 per annum, and yet these judges, who are paid $3,000 less compensation, are obliged from time to time to review and pass upon the decisions of this commission. Again, I am unable to understand why a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission should receive $10,000 per annum, and a circuit judge of the United States—of whom certainly greater ability is required, and greater learning is required—should be paid only $7,000 per annum.

The members of the Tariff Commission, I think, receive $7,500 per annum, while these judges receive the sums I have stated.

Mr. President, the increased cost of living affects the judges as it affects everybody else. They are obliged to educate their children; they are obliged to send their boys to college; they are obliged to keep up some sort of a decent appearance before the world; and I venture to say that many of them, if not most of them, upon this meager salary are to-day living a hand-to-mouth existence. It is not in keeping with the dignity of a great Government like this that we should permit officers of this character to receive such small salaries and thereby compel them to live meanly.

A judge of a United States court, of course, can do nothing except attend to his judicial duties. He can not go into business and make something in addition to his salary. He can not speculate. He can not do anything except attend to the duties of his office. True, it is a life position; but he can add nothing to his compensation in order that his family may be taken care of if he passes over in advance of them.

It seems to me, in view of these facts, that I was justified in indulging the hope that the Senator from Georgia—himself a great lawyer, who has practiced before these judges, and who understands quite as well as I do that what I say about it is the fact—would not insist upon this point of order.

These judges are receiving smaller salaries than we pay ourselves, and certainly it requires as much ability to be a judge of the circuit court of appeals as it requires to be a Senator or a Representative in the Congress of the United States. We are not precluded from adding to our compensation, when Congress is not in session, by practicing law, and a good many lawyers do that. There are business men in both Houses of Congress who engage in various kinds of business, which the judge is forbidden to do.

Mr. President, I regret very much that this act of common justice can not be performed because the rule of the Senate forbids it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not agree with the view of the Senator from Utah that the circuit judges are not paid as much as United States Senators. They are really paid more. While their salaries are nominally only $7,000 and ours are $7,500, when judges of the circuit court of appeals attend the sessions of court their expenses are paid—not only their traveling expenses but their hotel bills. They are allowed, I think, $10 a day for subsistence. This part of their work lasts through at least half of the year. The high cost of living, so far as they are concerned, is largely provided for in this way, and their actual compensation is thus made more than that of a Senator. The cost of a Senator's living in Washington is in no way provided for.

Mr. President, in point of fact, we know that the Senators and Congressmen for the past five years have been called upon to give practically their entire time to the service of the Government. I do not suppose 1 lawyer in 20, in either body, has undertaken to do any law practice; but, on the contrary, all have given practically their entire service to the Government.

The Senator suggests that the compensation of the members of the Farm Loan Board and the Federal Trade Commission is too high. I shall vote whenever I have an opportunity on a general bill to put their compensation at $7,500 each. I am not in favor of increasing the pay of this class of Government officials. The United States circuit court judge has an office for life. He has no more elections. He has no more contests. He has not the burdens that a Senator has upon him growing out of his office. Each Senator is called upon to contribute substantially from his salary for the incidental responsibilities that grow out of his office. His personal mail growing out of his office which can not be classed properly as frankable matter puts a substantial tax upon him. There are calls incident to his office from home that put a substantial tax upon him, and he must make his race every six years. When the time comes that he is worn out, if he lasts in office that long, he retires practically with nothing to do, eliminated from his professional work, eliminated from any activities to provide either for himself or for his family, while, on the contrary, the circuit court judge takes his office for the balance of his life. If sickness comes upon him, he continues to draw his salary. If feeble health comes, he continues to draw his salary; and when the advanced age of 70 is reached, he can retire and for the balance of his life draw his pay just as though he were in active service. All of these things should be considered; and the life-time salary allowed the circuit court judge is equal to a higher salary paid temporarily to an officer in Washington.

At this time I am unwilling to see any increase in the higher-paid service rendered to the Government. A little later, when normal conditions exist, when the present heavy tax upon the National Treasury incident to preparedness ceases—I hope it will cease at no distant day—I shall be willing then to consider any increase of pay to circuit court judges. Now, I am against it; and I insist upon the point of order which I made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained upon the grounds that the amendment was not estimated for nor reported by any standing committee of the Senate. It is not sustained upon the ground that the salary is fixed by law. The Chair is of the clear opinion that the Congress of the United States can increase or diminish the salaries of public officials, and that that is not general legislation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not wish the fact that I raised the point of general legislation to imply that I still consider that objection sound.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair remembers to have ruled with the Senator from Georgia on this very bill as the Chair has ruled just now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not like to let the statement of the Senator from Georgia go without saying that my recollection is that such a ruling was not made by the Senate. I do not think we have ever held that an amendment to increase the amount of salary paid to an officer already in office constituted general legislation. We did hold, and I think correctly, that an amendment which proposed to create a new office, and fix the salary, was general legislation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a few days ago I offered several amendments to this bill. I ask that the Secretary read them.

The SECRETARY. The following amendments were offered by the Senator from Montana on January 18 last:

On page 95, line 7, strike out "fifty-three" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty-seven"; on page 95, line 8, strike out "seventy-seven" and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-three"; also, in line 8, strike out "eighty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-nine"; on page 95, line 9, strike out "sixty-nine" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-seven"; and on page 95, line 19, in the total, strike out "$647,450" and insert in lieu thereof "$679,850."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this is a series of amendments offered by me at the request of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on account of the enormously increased amount of work of the General Land Office and the local land offices in the public-land States, growing out of the 640-acre homestead bill, which is now a law. It has been a law for about a month, I think, or something like that; and it has already resulted in enormously increased work in all of the public-land States of the country for the local land offices. There have been thousands of filings made, and many thousands of dollars tendered as fees in the various local land offices of the public-land States. Now, this work is all in addition to the work that those local land offices had been performing theretofore. It is fresh work, new work, springing up in the last month, and it is going to continue for several years until all the land that is available to be taken up under the 640-acre homestead law is taken up and disposed of.

Speaking for Montana, from experience and observation, I know that prior to the taking effect of this law the local land offices in Montana had all the work they could perform and keep up with, with the limited amount of clerical help they had. I know that the local land officers at points like Glasgow, Lewistown, Great Falls, Havre, Miles City, and Billings, which are in the public-land sections of the State where the public-land business is active and where there are many entries, have had in the past all they could do; they were hard pressed to keep up with their work, before the enactment of this law, and since then there has been a veritable avalanche of application to enter land under the law. I will read some figures and a statement in regard to the matter.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office advises me that last week he telegraphed to 61 out of the 98 local land offices, and up to yesterday had received replies from 51. A compilation of the replies indicated that 23,063 applications had been filed under the 640-acre homestead law, covering an area of 8,272,000 acres. The money deposited, including fees and commissions for the above, amounted to $546,212.94. When the remaining 10 offices are heard from, undoubtedly the total number of entries will amount to at least 25,000 or more, which indicates an enormous amount of new business.

This new business is going to far more than pay for the little increase in this bill I have asked for. The increase in the appropriations of this bill which I have asked for this purpose amounts to about $35,000 for the coming year, and already, in less than a month's time in which this law has been in operation, the fees paid into the local land offices amount to more than half a million dollars, they amount to $546,212.

I ask Senators to think of that. In less than one month there has been more than half a million dollars paid into the Treasury of the United States by virtue of the operation of this law, and for the coming year I only ask by my amendment for an increase of about $35,000, which is trivial.

The provisions of the law are such as to permit applications to enter land immediately after the law became effective. Anyone who knows of a tract of 640 acres of public land which he thinks would properly come under a classification of such land as is described in this law may go to the local land office in which the land is situated and apply to enter it under the 640-acre homestead law. He may tender the fees for his filing. It is true, then, that he has no right to go on the land and perfect his homestead entry by residence. He must wait until the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office sends out inspectors and has the land classified, and if the land is classified as land coming under this law, the applicant may then enter upon his homestead and proceed to comply with the law and perfect his homestead entry. If it is not classified as land properly coming under the law it is true he can not go ahead. But I feel safe in saying that I believe in the large majority of cases where land is applied for it will eventually be classified as land proper to come under the provisions of the law, because the terms of the law are plain, and it is the duty of an applicant to go on the land and to see it, and if it is not such as is described by the law he does so at his peril, and he knows that he will lose time and money by his application.

I have read in the newspapers which have come from Montana that there has been a veritable race to the land offices to file on land under this law, and from the figures I have quoted here and from all the reports which the Senators from the West must have received through the newspapers or otherwise from their home States, it is plain that there is a great increase in the amount of work devolving upon the local land offices in the Western States and, of course, upon the General Land Office, for what makes work for the local land offices makes work for the General Land Office. Most of this work, in fact all of it, will affect the General Land Office and increase its work.

Now, what are we going to do about this work? We have started the machinery which makes this work. It has already brought in more than a half million dollars in fees. We have required this extra work of those land-office officials and their clerks out there, and of the General Land Office, and what are we going to do about it? Are we going to require them to make bricks without straw? Are we going to require them to perform this work without sufficient clerical help?

It is the duty of Congress to provide this extra allowance for help. Common sense and business and justice require it. It is not only going to make a great deal of extra work in the local land offices of the public-land States, but it is going to make an enormous amount of extra work in the General Land Office here in Washington. There will be appeals from the rulings of the local land offices which must be heard here in the General Land Office. Inspectors must be sent out to classify these lands, and unless we intended to provide the instrumentality for carrying on this work we should not have enacted the law. That is patent.

Commissioner Tallman appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, or a subcommittee, I do not know which.

Mr. OVERMAN. He appeared before the subcommittee.

Mr. MYERS. And he stated the needs growing out of this law. It is true, I understand, that the Appropriations Committee granted a part of his request, but he insists very strongly that he needs all he asked for, and when you come to think of it the increase which I have asked for is less than $35,000 in a year. In view of this enormous increase of work which has already brought in, in less than one month, more than a half million dollars in fees, I think we would be justified in relying upon the representations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He is supposed to know the details of this matter. He is supposed to know the requirements of his own office and the amount of clerical help which it will take to conduct his own office and the local land offices in the Western States. I do not believe there is any ground for believing that there is any misrepresentation in the matter.

I wish to read a communication the Commissioner of the General Land Office has written to me on the subject, and to read from the hearings briefly. I shall not detain the Senate long, but it is such an urgent matter that I want to lay it clearly before the Senate. The letter I have is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, January 18, 1917.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to my conversation with your office over the phone yesterday afternoon I beg to state that a few days ago I appeared before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and asked for additional clerical assistance to meet the necessities of this office that will inevitably be imposed as a result of the enactment of the grazing homestead law of December 29, 1916. You will find my testimony commencing on page 123 of the hearings before the subcommittee. You will also find a statement I handed the committee printed on page 127 of the results of the enactment of other more or less similar laws.

The additional clerical assistance for which I asked (p. 128) was 4 clerks at $1,600 a year, 6 clerks at $1,400 a year, 8 clerks at $1,200 a year, and 8 clerks at $1,000 a year, making a total of 26 clerks, whose salaries will aggregate $32,400.

I said $35,000, roughly speaking, but the commissioner says only $32,400.

This may be provided for by amendments on page 95 as follows—

Then follow the amendments which the Secretary read.

The additional clerks above described should not be confused with the 13 additional clerks already allowed by the Senate committee on the statutory roll, for these clerks are simply substituted in the place of 16 clerks now employed on another and different appropriation, which will become exhausted on June 30 next.

It appears that the increase which I have asked in my amendment is the only provision contemplated for this extra work on account of the 640-acre homestead law. These other increases are for other necessary work.

I can only say at this time that, in addition to the statement submitted by me as printed on page 127 of the hearings, all preliminary reports from local land offices are to the effect that there is very great activity in the filing of applications to enter lands under the grazing-homestead act. Estimates for additional assistance for clerical services in local United States land offices will be submitted in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Very truly, yours, CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

Mr. President, I am not in favor in these times of stress and revenue deficit of increasing the salaries of the employees of the Government who are at present on the pay rolls. I think there is grave objection to that, if carried to any great extent, for the time being; but here is another and different proposition entirely. This is not to increase the salary of anybody now on the pay roll, but it is simply to provide instrumentalities for carrying on new and additional work which Congress has imposed upon the General Land Office and the local land offices of the Western States.

I know from visiting the offices in Montana, from personal inspection and talking with registers and receivers and from my correspondence with them, I know it to be a fact that prior to the enactment of the 640-acre homestead law there was not a land office in Montana in which it was not a struggle for the register and receiver and the clerks to keep up with the work that was already coming in at that time. I know they had to work full hours, and in many cases they had to work at night, and to work extra hours, and even had to work on Sundays sometimes. I know there was not an office in Montana that did not have all that it could do and all that ought to be required of the people working in it, and some of them even then were stating their needs to me for extra help under the old order of affairs.

Now, Congress has gone to work and deliberately put this large amount of extra work on them and what are we going to do about it? Are we going to require them to do this work without any more help when they already had all the work that their office forces could perform?

Congress in its wisdom enacted the 640-acre homestead law. It evidently thought it was in the interest of the people; it evidently thought it was in the interest of justice; it evidently thought it was right to do so; and it evidently thought that some good was going to flow therefrom, that it was going to result in benefit to the people.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will notice that in this office they wanted extra clerks and we gave them 13 extra clerks, and the Senate has already adopted the amendment. He does not desire to have that action reconsidered?

Mr. MYERS. No; I am moving to perfect the bill as it now stands in Committee of the Whole. I think I have that privilege. I waited until the committee amendments were disposed of and individual amendments could be offered. The Commissioner of the General Land Office says that the 16 extra clerks allowed were not for the purpose of attending to this extra work created by the 640-acre homestead law. He says it is for another purpose entirely. I have read his letter here. It appears that there has been nothing granted for the extra work required by the 640-acre homestead law. It is true that where the House allowed 51 clerks of a certain class the committee increased it to 53, but this amendment calls for 57, 4 more. Of another class the Senate committee and the Senate raised the number from 74 to 77, an increase of 3, but my amendment calls for 83. In another instance of another class the committee and the Senate increased it from 77 to 81, but my amendment calls for 89, and in another instance the committee increased it from 65 to 69, an increase of 4, and my amendment calls for an increase to 77.

Is there a western Senator here who wants to see any land office in his State so swamped with work and so handicapped with inadequate and insufficient office help that the office will not be able to keep up its work, that the public work will suffer, and that applicants who enter land under the law will not be able to have their applications promptly attended to? Is there any Senator here from a western State who wants to see any land office in his State kept behind in its work? I can not believe that such is the case. I believe we all want to see the public business in the offices in our States kept up to date in an adequate and efficient manner and that we all want to see the public business conducted with prompt dispatch and efficiency.

It does seem to me that the emergency of this situation is so great and so urgent and so apparent that there should be no hesitation about unanimously granting my request and adopting my amendments.

Before I take my seat I will read the statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, January 4, 1916.

The following table shows the number of original homestead entries and the aggregate areas from 1909 to 1916, inclusive:

Year ending June 30—	Number.	Acreage.
1909	75,445	12,302,146.20
1910	98,598	18,329,115.62
1911	70,720	15,189,087.02
1912	52,991	11,246,293.89
1913	57,300	11,222,053.59
1914	61,229	12,117,087.59
1915	62,360	12,439,774.62
1916	65,232	13,628 107.03

It will be noted that the number of entries for 1909 was 75,445, whereas for the fiscal year 1910, following the enactment of the enlarged homestead law of 1909, original entries increased to 98,598, with an increase of over six million in acreage. It will further be noted that for every year since the three-year act of June 6, 1912, there has been an increase of original entries from 52,991 in 1912 to 65,262 in 1916, an increase of about 2,400,000 in acreage. This has been due in part to the more liberal conditions of the three-year law and doubtless, to a considerable extent, as a result of very extensive designations of lands to be entered under the enlarged homestead act during recent years.

The act of March 4, 1915, permitting the filing of petitions for designation along with applications to enter has very largely increased the work, because it requires just as much work to act on these petitions as it would to take action on an equal additional number of original homestead entries under the ordinary practice. There were over 14,000 such petitions filed during the fiscal year 1916.

The Kinkaid Act, allowing homestead entries for 640 acres each in Nebraska, became operative June 28, 1904. For the year ending June 30, 1904, there were 4,726 original homestead entries made in that State, covering an area of 1,310,712.56 acres; of this number, however, approximately 1,260 were made during the last three days of that year under the Kinkaid Act, leaving 3,466 entries as made under the old homestead law limiting each entry to 160 acres. The following year, during all of which the Kinkaid law was operative, the number of entries jumped to 10,736 and the area to 4,778,352.42 acres, the increase being a little more than 300 per cent in the number of entries made.

By reason of the three-year homestead law of June 6, 1912, the sundry civil appropriation act of August 24, 1912, made provision for additional clerks as follows: Eight at $1,200 per annum, 8 at $1,000 per annum, and 8 at $900 per annum, but this additional appropriation was not continued for the following year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will not the Senator from Montana put that in the RECORD? I want to get along with this bill. The Senator also has a bill coming up, and we never can pass this bill unless we are more expeditious. We have 13 general appropriation bills to pass, and if we occupy three days in the consideration of each one, it will take all the time remaining.

Mr. MYERS. It will only take me about two minutes to finish this, and I am not subject to any reproach for having occupied too much of the time of this body. I speak but seldom, and when I do speak I have something to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not complaining of the Senator as to that, but I merely desired to know if he would not put that matter into the RECORD without reading.

Mr. MYERS. I want Senators to hear it. It will take only about two minutes longer to read it. It continues:

This new grazing act—

It is the new grazing act about which I am reading just now, and I want Senators to hear this, for it is the most important part of it—

This new grazing act will undoubtedly result in a tremendous increase of business because of its sweeping provisions and large territory to which it applies. Moreover, it must undoubtedly result in an increase in work far in excess of the proportionate increase in number of entries as compared with the ordinary homestead law. In the first place, it should be noted that it doubles the area, necessitating double the amount of work in making notations on and examining the tract records. In the next place, the law provides for the filing of petitions for designation along with the applications, which means that practically all the work of noting and examining tract books has to be done twice, once on the petition and then when the entry is allowed. It should be further noted that section 6 of the act provides for an exchange of lands, the entryman to relinquish his former entry entirely and take a new one. This means not only a cross-reference and cross-posting and examination, but also an examination of the record of the original entry proposed to be relinquished and of the reconveyance and abstract of title. It should be further noted that this act has a universal mineral reservation; therefore the surface of lands heretofore open to entry only under the mineral laws will be subject to the provisions of this act. The provisions of the act providing for various forms of additional entries and second entries all require examination of the records as to the original entry in order to determine what the entryman is entitled to. On the whole this act is not only bound to result in a very large increase in number of original entries under it during the next few years but the terms and conditions of the act are such that each entry will require more time and attention than under other similar laws heretofore enacted.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I merely wish to say that I do not believe the Commissioner of the General Land Office is trying to deceive Congress or to get something out of it on false pretenses. I know he is not. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, I believe, knows his business; he knows the amount of help it will take to carry on this work, and he has stated it under his oath of office. It is his duty to lay these matters properly before Congress, and I believe he ought to have the help for which he asks.

As to the 16 clerks referred to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the acting chairman of the committee, Commissioner Tallman in a letter states that they are for another purpose, and that there is no appropriation really made, so far as the extra work under the 640-acre homestead law is concerned. I think that my amendments certainly ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a word, Mr. President. In the first place, I wish to say that in the case of the increase of clerks which are allowed to the General Land Office the number is double the number of increases in all the other departments of the Government.

In relation to the last statement made by the Senator from Montana, that the increased number of clerks which were allowed by the committee are not for the enforcement of the 640-acre homestead grazing law, but for another purpose, I wish to say the Senator is mistaken; but there was an estimate for 13 additional clerks made for the General Land Office. The House of Representatives, after hearings, refused to grant the 13 clerks estimated for, as did the Senate. When the bill was being considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the Commissioner of the General Land Office appeared before the committee and asked for 26 additional clerks on account of the passage of the 640-acre homestead grazing law. The committee allowed one-half the number of clerks asked for. The Commissioner of the General Land Office asked for 4 clerks at $1,600, 6 clerks at $1,400, 8 clerks at $1,200, and 8 clerks at $1,000.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment. The committee granted 2 clerks at $1,600, 3 clerks at $1,400, 4 clerks at $1,200, and 4 clerks at $1,000. I pleaded with the committee to grant at least half of the number of clerks asked for, because I felt that there was an absolute necessity for those clerks in order that the law might be carried into effect.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Utah whether or not, in considering the granting of these clerks, the understanding was that any of them were to be used in this work? As I understand, when a department calls for an appropriation for a certain number of clerks they are all placed before the appropriation is made; they are placed where the department wants them. In the case of a general appropriation for clerks, unless it was for this particular purpose and understood by the department and agreed on with the committee, they probably would not be used for that work.

Mr. SMOOT. They should be used for that work, because if it had not been for that work there would not have been an increase of one clerk in the department, I will say to the Senator.

The estimate for additional clerks asked for was denied by the other House, and all would have been denied by the Senate had not the Commissioner of the General Land Office appeared before the subcommittee and called their attention to the passage of the 640-acre homestead grazing law and stated to the subcommittee the number of entries which had already been made under it. By the way, I might say that all the expense attached to the passage of the law so far must be paid out of this year's appropriation and not out of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1918, and if there is a deficiency it must be provided for before the end of June 30, 1917. The committee thought that by giving the 13 clerks—one-half the number asked for—with the work done between now and June 30, the department perhaps could get along.

I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that there is not a question in my mind that if there should be a deficiency at the end of the next year—and this appropriation is for next year—there would be appropriated, without a question, the amount of money needed to take care of the extra help which would be made necessary on account of the passage of the law. The Senator knows, however, that there is no Senator who wants to appropriate less money than sufficient to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to execute the additional work required by the passage of any public-land law.

Mr. MYERS. I understood the Senator to say awhile ago that the 13 clerks allowed were not for the work under the 640-acre homestead law.

Mr. SMOOT. They are for that work, and for no other work.

Mr. MYERS. Then I will ask the Senator another question. The Senator said that he pleaded with the committee to give half the number of clerks the commissioner asked for. Does the Senator believe, or does he not believe, that the entire number the commissioner asked for will be necessary to perform the work under the new law?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I am unable to answer that question definitely, because I do not know what work will be done between now and June 30 of this year.

Mr. MYERS. Then I will ask the Senator this question——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. In other words, most of the entries under that law may be made by the end of June 30 of this year. A great deal of the expense involved may be entailed on account of the passage of the law by June 30, 1917, and whatever expense there may be, whether little or great, must be paid out of the appropriations for the General Land Office for this fiscal year. There may be a deficiency, and if there shall be, of course that will be considered under the deficiency appropriation bill; but I think the Commissioner of the General Land Office understands that Congress wants to appropriate enough money to see that the 640-acre homestead grazing act is put into full operation.

Mr. MYERS. I believe the Commissioner of the General Land Office is in a better position than is anybody else to calculate the amount of work that will be required under that act. I want to ask the Senator this question——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States granted every request made by the heads of the various departments of the Government for additional clerks and expenses this bill alone would carry three or four million dollars more than it does carry.

Mr. MYERS. I want to ask the Senator a question right there. If the 640-acre homestead law in less than one month has already brought in fees to the amount of more than half a million dollars, does not the Senator think it is reasonable to grant an increase of $32,000 for additional help?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that we ought to grant all that is necessary, but I think that the committee, under the situation existing to-day, has done fairly well in considering the requests of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MYERS. I think we ought to do more than "fairly well"; we ought to do full justice, I think. Giving half of what is needed, I do not think is just.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, in respect to the new 640-acre homestead law, before anything can be done under it, the General Land Office must send men out into the field to examine and classify the lands and ascertain what land is subject to 640-acre homestead entry. It will, therefore, take a long time before the department will have those lands segregated and classified, so that any homestead entries can be made under that law. Consequently, there is not involved any immediate increase at all in the work in the office here; but the increase, as I conceive, will be in respect to the men who are sent out to examine the lands and ascertain whether they come within the classification of the 640-acre homestead law.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement made by the Senator is correct, with one exception. The 640-acre homestead law provides that a citizen may make an application for certain lands and that application shall be filed in the local land office; but, as the Senator has said, nothing will be done in the office here at Washington until after the examination is made and the lands designated, so as to determine whether they can be entered under the act. Then, many of the applications, Mr. President, which have been made, are likely to be found to cover land which the department will not designate. In that case there will be no work whatever, so far as the clerks in the Land Office here are concerned. So, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I merely want to say in regard to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has said, that the extra work is now going on in the local land offices in attending to the thousands upon thousands of applications to enter land under this law. The expenses in that connection and the work involved have already begun.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator understands that the clerks asked for are not for the local land offices, but are for the office here in Washington.

Mr. MYERS. I want to ask the Senator, in case of a rush or an emergency or extra work in any local land office, if clerks can not be detailed from the General Land Office here and sent to the local land office temporarily, for the time being? I know of no law or rule to prevent that being done; and I think it is often done.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it is done; in fact, I do not believe that it can be done under the law, unless there is a specific provision in the appropriation bill granting that power. As the Senator has noticed, to this bill I offered an amendment, which was adopted by the Senate, authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to bring certain employees from the field to Washington for the purpose of doing certain work here in the office, but neither the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Secretary of the Interior, nor any other head of a department or bureau of the Government has any right to do that until authorization is given by law.

Mr. MYERS. It may be that the clerks already allowed are for the work here in the General Land Office; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his statement, from which I read awhile ago, dwells very largely upon the increased work which will result in the local offices, and from his communication to me he evidently had that largely in mind. What makes work there, of course, makes work, too, in the General Land Office.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in this very bill we appropriate for every local land office; we provide for the number of clerks that shall be employed at each; we provide for the surveyor; and we name the amount that shall be paid. The amendment of the Senator, however, has nothing to do with the local land offices, but provides for 26 additional clerks for the General Land Office here in Washington.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he thinks it will be necessary for the Government to examine each of the separate tracts of land in order to determine their classification?

Mr. SMOOT. I know from past experience that there will not be an entry perfected until the lands are examined by officials of the Interior Department.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think that is necessary?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe, of course, that to carry out the intent of the law examination will have to be made, more particularly under this law than under any other law we have ever passed.

Mr. WORKS. I should suppose that the Geological Survey or the Interior Department could determine most of these matters without a personal and specific examination upon each separate tract of land.

Mr. SMOOT. I think examination will have to be made, just the same as examination to-day is made as to every entry made under the 320-acre enlarged homestead act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it the Senator's idea that the 640-acre homestead law requires an examination of each specific 640-acre tract before an entry is allowed?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question that examination will be made of each tract.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that is necessary under the law?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the law I think it is necessary.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that my impression was that the law gave the Secretary authority to designate certain areas within which 640-acre homestead entries could be made, but that it did not require examination of each particular tract. If I had supposed that was what it meant, I do not think I would have consented to its passage, as I did.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know in relation to that matter is that applications will not be made in any one particular section of a State. The law provides—which I tried to prevent—for the right of application before the land is designated. I know that a great deal of trouble will come from it.

Mr. JONES. My idea was this——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I know that under the enlarged-homestead law an entryman has the right to make an entry, and before he can secure patent the land is examined many times before designation. Every case so far that has been entered under the enlarged-homestead law has been examined, and I believe that every application and every entry that will be made under the 640-acre homestead grazing law will also be examined, not only by the General Land Office but it will be referred to the Geological Survey, and a representative from the Geological Survey will make an examination also to see whether it is mineral lands.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I simply want to say that it is absolutely necessary under the law to make an examination for the purpose of determining whether it is grazing land or not.

Mr. JONES. It ought not to have been necessary under the law to examine each particular tract. It will be very easy to determine in a particular locality whether this township or that township is of this or that character, and then designate it. If the Secretary finds that the land in that territory is grazing land, he ought to have had authority to designate this and that township within which these entries could be made. Why, it will cost pretty nearly as much as the land is worth to make these investigations.

Mr. SMOOT. It will cost the Government a great deal more than the Government will ever get out of it to make the examinations.

Mr. JONES. Why, certainly.

Mr. BRADY. If the Senator does not think these applications will be made unless they are examined, I do not believe that can be done.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I simply want to say that if all of this work is to be done in the General Land Office, as the Senator from Utah says—and upon an examination of the amendment I see that that is the case—it is all the more reason to presume that the Commissioner of the General Land Office knows what is necessary to carry on the work in his own office. It is my understanding that under the law each tract of land applied for must be separately inspected, and it is going to require an army of inspectors and an immense amount of expense.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope we will not get into any discussion of the land laws here on this appropriation bill. I ask Senators not to start up that debate again. I want to say about this amendment that the House committee went into this matter fully with Mr. Tallman, and thought he had clerks enough. The Senate committee increased his clerks 13 over those allowed by the House. It will be a hard matter to hold even what we have done, and it would be impossible if we adopted this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected on a division.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 127, line 7, after the words "commercial interests," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That not exceeding $15,000 of this sum may be expended for personal services in Washington, D. C.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, this amendment is offered at the suggestion of the Secretary of Commerce in order to systematize and make more efficient the objects and purposes for which this appropriation is to be made. It is not a request for an increased appropriation, but to make more effective the appropriation already provided for in the bill. It is made necessary, as I understand, by a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury that similar lump-sum appropriations, or any part of them, can not be used in the District of Columbia without express permission of Congress in making the appropriation.

The sum appropriated in this case is to be used, under the direction of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, to maintain agents abroad in looking after markets for American products and also commercial agencies in the United States, eight in number, I think. The purpose or desire of the Secretary of Commerce after four years' experience is to use part of the appropriation in having a chief of divisions here in Washington to manage, control, and make more efficient these traveling agents. There is no officer now who can discharge those duties, and it is necessary to detail men from time to time to look after them. There is no system, no coordination, and cooperation in these various agencies and agents; and the Secretary is of the opinion that if he is allowed to use a portion of the sum here and have some system and organization the money could be used with a great deal more advantage and the purposes of the appropriation accomplished. The Secretary is perhaps more competent to speak upon this matter, after his experience, than anybody else. I take it that he is right about it. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I just want to say that I personally was in favor of this amendment in the committee; but there were 17 Senators there, and everybody but myself was opposed to it. They did not think it was necessary to do this. It is out of line with the previous action of the Senate, and the committee is opposed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in this paragraph it is proposed to make an appropriation of $125,000 for a certain purpose, and that purpose is to promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States. There has been of late a tendency where an appropriation is made in a lump sum to be expended outside of the District of Columbia to secure a part of the appropriation for the payment of clerks located and living in the District of Columbia.

The House has taken the position—rightfully, I believe—that that should not be. The Senate so far has taken the position that it is unwise to do it, and that when money is appropriated for the development and promotion of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States it means that the money shall be spent outside of the District of Columbia.

If there are not enough clerks, provide for them in the regular way; but do not take a part of a lump-sum appropriation for a specific purpose and pay it to clerks in the District of Columbia.

I think if the Senators understood the tendency of late to adopt this course they would agree with the Committee on Appropriations, not only of the House but of the Senate.

This same proposition was presented to the Appropriations Committee of the House, but the committee would not adopt it. The Committee on Appropriations of the House has objected to it not only this year but for years past, and this is not the first time it has been proposed to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. It is wrong in principle. If the Secretary of Commerce wants assistants here in Washington in his department, let them be provided for in the usual way and not take a part of the appropriation that is made for specific work outside the confines of the United States.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I can see no soundness whatever in the proposition the Senator has advanced. The Secretary of Commerce, as he says, asks for these clerks and thinks an appropriation ought to have been made for them.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator did not say that.

Mr. SHIELDS. And yet the committee did not do it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. SHIELDS. If he was sound about the necessity for these clerks, about the policy of allowing an appropriation for them, it ought to have been made in the bill.

The Secretary of Commerce, after four years of experience in managing this Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, finds that it is without a head, without system, and without organization, and that a clerk in Washington is necessary. He wants a division here in order to make the work of the bureau more efficient. He is of the opinion, after administering this office for four years, with similar appropriations, that he can decrease the force in the field and provide a head for it here in Washington and get better results and have more efficient work done for both foreign and domestic commerce.

I take it that the Secretary knows more about this matter than any Senator does. It has been his duty to attend to this bureau. He has devoted himself to it, and he makes this recommendation, and it seems to me that Senators can act upon that more advisedly than they could upon the representations of the House, or any Senator, in regard to it. It is not an increase of an appropriation. It is a wise and proper disposition of part of the fund that is already appropriated in order to make it efficient; in other words, to prevent it from being used without efficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee misunderstood what I said if he thought I said that the Secretary of Commerce had asked for the appropriation for these clerks. I was very unhappy in what I stated if the Senator drew any such conclusion. I stated that the Secretary of Commerce had asked that the amendment offered by the Senator be adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, and it in turn refused to adopt it. I did say that if there is work that is to be necessarily done in the Department of Commerce, and it has not the clerks necessary to do it, the proper way to do would be to ask for an appropriation for clerks for that purpose. Of course, if the Secretary of Commerce says that he has too many employees in the foreign field, then we ought to reduce the appropriation.

I want to say to the Senator, however, that the Secretary of Commerce has not only asked that this amount be appropriated, but he has asked for an increased amount. I have been rather in sympathy with him, because I have believed that our foreign trade, not only in all the European countries but our commerce in South and Central America, should be promoted, and I would not haggle over the amount of money that was appropriated for that purpose.

But that is not the object of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. The object is to take the men that are in the foreign service and bring them into the Washington office, pay them the same salary that they are paid for foreign work, and not have them specifically appropriated for as all of the other clerks are. I think it would establish a precedent that would work harm if it is adopted by the Senate, and I sincerely hope that it will not be.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken in his premises. It is not to bring men out of the field, only so far as is necessary for the purpose of organization.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we can stop this debate, I will accept the amendment and let it go into conference.

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to say a word or two.

This matter was not brought up in the full committee, because this amendment was not suggested there, or anything of the kind; and the situation was not called to my attention until after the bill was reported. Now, it has been represented to me that we have not the force here in Washington to handle the business that results from the reports of these commercial attachés who are abroad. Of course, they are abroad for the purpose of gathering information and sending it here; and in order to make that information available it must be classified. Furthermore, the fact that we have them abroad brings many inquiries to the department here from our people, who want the information gathered by these special agents.

It has been represented to me that the department has not the force here in Washington that is necessary to take care of those inquiries and furnish the information that is asked for. As I understood the Senator from Utah, he suggested that whatever force is necessary to take care of that situation ought to be provided, and the salaries of the employees fixed as clerks here. As I understand, however, we have not done it. Now, if we will not do it in one way, we ought to do it in another way. If we will not give them the necessary help here to furnish this information and use the information which is gathered by these people abroad, then we ought to provide that some of this money shall be used for that purpose.

Of course, I would not be in favor of bringing these special agents from the field and putting them to work here, but I do not understand that that is really what they want to do. I do not know whether that would be done under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee or not; but we ought to have some assistance by which this information can be used and made available. If we can not get it by having the clerks and employees specifically appropriated for, then we ought to use some of this money for that purpose. I would rather see it done in the other way.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that there is no intention of bringing all of these clerks in from the field.

Mr. JONES. We ought not to bring any of them here, for that matter.

Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps it is not the intention to bring in any of them. It is simply desired to use part of the money that otherwise would be expended in keeping them in the field.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I take it he would be entirely satisfied, no matter how we provided the force, so that we get the force here to make this information available.

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is not the first year that this appropriation has been made. I think it began three years ago; and I think the appropriation to-day is in exactly the same words, but perhaps not the same amount, as it was when it was first included in the legislative appropriation bill. The work has been done; the reports have been made; the clerks that are already in the department have done the work. The information has been sent broadcast to the country; and there is no necessity now of putting in here a provision that a certain part of the money appropriated for a certain specific purpose shall be devoted to the payment of clerks in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question, because he is thoroughly familiar with this matter—more familiar with it than I am. I want to ask him if, in his judgment, the force here is ample to furnish the information that comes in from these various attachés to the business men who ask for it?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that the Committee on Appropriations have been most liberal with the Department of Commerce. I have been in sympathy with the work of that department, as I stated before, and I wanted it to expand. I wanted secured for this country all the foreign trade that is possible. I am quite sure, if there is not a single clerk put into the Department of Commerce this year over and above what we have already given, the department will do the necessary work. It has been done for the past two or three years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understood that the amendment was accepted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accepted the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not accept it. The question has to be put to the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senate understood that it was accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question has to be put to a vote.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask for a division.

The amendment was rejected on a division.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on the 18th of the month I offered an amendment which I had printed and which I intend to propose to the bill. I send the amendment to the desk. It is the same as the printed amendment, except that I have stricken out the Committee on Enrolled Bills and also the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the amendment as printed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment will affect every Senator probably in the Chamber. It is a matter personal to the Senate, and I think Senators ought to be here, therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate before that is done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 408.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I make the point of order that no business can be laid before the Senate after the absence of a quorum has been suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call had not proceeded. No name had been called.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My point is not that, Mr. President. It is not a question of calling the roll under the rule, it is the question of an absence of a quorum being suggested by a Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock arrived, and before the Secretary had begun to call the roll the unfinished business came before the Senate, and the Chair laid it before the Senate. The question now is, Is there any objection to laying it aside temporarily?

Mr. JONES. I suggest that that can not be done until a quorum is present when the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the further point of order that the Senate can not transact any business, there being less than a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been disclosed that there is no quorum present. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object on the ground that the absence of a quorum has been suggested and that the rules of the Senate require a call of the roll to ascertain whether a quorum is present.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true. The absence of a quorum has been suggested and the roll should be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw my request that the unfinished business——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to the Senator withdrawing his request.

Mr. MYERS. I have a right to withdraw it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to the transaction of any business until we have a quorum of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hughes	McLean	Robinson
Borah	Husting	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth
Brady	James	Myers	Sheppard
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Nelson	Sherman
Chamberlain	Jones	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Clark	Kenyon	Oliver	Smoot
Colt	Kern	Overman	Sterling
Culberson	La Follette	Page	Sutherland
Fall	Lane	Penrose	Tillman
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Pittman	Underwood
Gronna	Lewis	Poindexter	Vardaman
Harding	Lippitt	Pomerene	Watson
Hardwick	Lodge	Ransdell	Weeks
Hollis	McCumber	Reed

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is detained on account of sickness and that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is detained at his home on account of sickness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

RETIREMENT OF FEDERAL JUDGES (S. DOC. NO. 688).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the consideration of the appropriation bill is resumed I ask permission, out of order, to make a formal motion. I ask that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the consideration of a certain document which I submitted the other day so that it may be returned to the desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I can not hear a word that he is saying.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of a document which I submitted for printing as a public document relating to Senate bill 706. I do this because I desire to have the document returned to the Senate so that I may make use of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be made.

FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill yield to me to have a resolution read and lie on the table?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read and that it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 329), as follows:

Whereas in September, 1796, George Washington, then President of the United States, declared, "The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible * * *." And that "Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities"; and

Whereas in response to a letter addressed to him by James Monroe, then President of the United States, concerning the policy afterwards declared by President Monroe and since known as the Monroe doctrine, Thomas Jefferson said in reply: "The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cisatlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe and particularly her own. She should therefore have a system of her own, separate and apart from that of Europe"; and

Whereas James Monroe, President of the United States, afterwards amplified this policy incorporating it in a message to the Congress of the United States declaring in effect that any attempt on the part of foreign Governments to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, and setting forth in full the policy which was afterwards and ever since has been known as the Monroe doctrine; and

Whereas the policies thus early announced by Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe, and ever since adhered to by this country regardless of political parties, have contributed greatly to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States; and

Whereas we believe any material departure from these policies would be fraught with danger to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States involving us in all probability in the controversies of other nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States reaffirms its faith and confidence in the permanent worth and wisdom of these policies and shall seek in all matters coming before it, touching the interests or affairs of foreign countries to conform its acts to these time-honored principles so long and so happily a part of our own policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "clerks and messengers to the following committees," on page 3, in line 8, strike out the remainder on that page, all of page 4, all of page 5, all of page 6, all of page 7, and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 8, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 10, and insert the following:

Agriculture and Forestry: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Appropriations: Clerk, $4,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $2,500 each; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; messenger, $1,440; laborer, $720. To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Banking and Currency: Clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Claims: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Commerce: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Conference Minority of the Senate: Clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,800; 2 messengers, at $1,200 each. District of Columbia: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Finance: Clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,600; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440; 2 experts (1 for the majority and 1 for the minority), at $2,000 each. Foreign Relations: Clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; messenger, $1,440. Indian Affairs: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Interstate Commerce: Clerk, $2,500; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; messenger, $1,440. Judiciary: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; messenger, $1,440. Joint Committee on the Library: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Military Affairs: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Naval Affairs: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Pensions: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; 3 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; messenger, $1,440. Post Offices and Post Roads: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,400 each; messenger, $1,440. Public Buildings and Grounds: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Public Lands: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Rules: Clerk, $2,720, to include full compensation for the preparation biennially of the Senate Manual, under the direction of the Committee on Rules; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. In all, $159,740.

For assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of committees specifically provided for herein, as follows: Seventy-five clerks, at $2,220 each; 75 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; 75 messengers, at $1,200 each. In all, $364,500: Provided, That the employees of those committees whose chairmen retire from the Senate at the end of the present session of Congress shall be paid the salaries they are now receiving until the next meeting of Congress.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this is quite an important amendment. We have by an amendment already adopted by the Senate to this bill provided for the correction of an abuse or a condition of things in another body that at least ought to be corrected. I voted for that proposition; I thought the correction ought to be made. That opinion was based to a certain extent upon what I had observed when a Member of that body. I think it is very opportune now for the Senate to remove some cause of complaint on its own part. Some of us have been trying for quite a while to get some of the inequalities corrected and to provide a straight-out way by which the employees of the Senate shall receive their pay. The amendment that I have proposed endeavors to do that.

I will state now for the benefit of Senators who may have come in after I made my statement a few moments ago that the amendment as I have proposed it is printed and copies can be obtained at the desk. It is the amendment under date of January 18, except that I have modified it by striking out, on page 2, the Committee on Enrolled Bills and the employees of that committee and the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I struck out the Committee on Enrolled Bills because the other provision in the amendment takes care of that situation exactly as it would do if the Committee on Enrolled Bills was left in. As to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the only change here is that the messenger now provided for that committee is reduced from $1,440 to $1,200, making all the messengers of the various committees receive the same pay.

Mr. President, I have not proposed to abolish any of the committees of the Senate. Those committees are provided by the rules of the Senate. So that, as far as the amendment goes, all the committees are left in existence and legislation proper to be referred to this or that committee can still be referred to those committees.

What my amendment does is simply this: It leaves the employees of those committees that everyone recognizes as really working committees just as they are now and with the salaries which we have been providing in the various appropriation bills from time to time. Whether those salaries are too high or not I do not say. Whether those committees have too many employees I do not say. I leave that matter for such consideration as the Senate may desire to give it, but I have taken the provisions with reference to the employees of those committees which everybody knows seldom, if ever, make a report to the Senate, and from that we have a right to conclude that they have no very considerable business at any rate and cut them out of the appropriation bill, and I provide that each Senator not the chairman of a committee specifically provided for herein shall have a secretary at $2,220 a year, an assistant clerk at $1,1440. and a messenger at $1,200. It leaves the chairmen of most of the committees that are not mentioned in the amendment provided for just as they are now. It does reduce the compensation of three or four assistant clerks and one or two clerks, but it places every Senator who has not a real active committee upon exactly the same basis as any other Senator so far as his help is concerned and the compensation which goes to that help.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether this increases or decreases the appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Under the amendment I offer, as I have worked it out with the clerk of our committee, there is a reduction of, I think, a little over $9,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the figures in the amendment are wrong.

Mr. JONES. The figures in the amendment as printed have been changed. I forgot to call attention to that. The aggregate amount under the first paragraph is $159,740. Under the second paragraph it is $364,500.

Mr. SMOOT. That makes an increase of 95,000.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator is wrong about that. The Senator is leaving out the $105,000 provided for the 20 Senators in another page of the bill. That is cut out on page 10.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment when I call attention to this item. On page 10 in the bill we provide $105,600. That is stricken out so that it makes a saving.

Mr. LODGE. The saving is immaterial.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think the saving is immaterial.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did you strike that out?

Mr. JONES. Because that is covered in the last paragraph of my amendment. Instead of 20 Senators as provided for there, I provide for 55 Senators.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think then that he should move to strike out the specific appropriation for 20 Senators?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I cover it here in my amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. How is it covered?

Mr. JONES. Every Senator who is not specifically provided for as chairman is taken care of in the last paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. He rose before the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has named 26 committees and he proposes to provide for 73 Senators. There are more than 73 Senators who are left without any committees at all.

Mr. JONES. Seventy-five Senators. I have provided for them. The print has been changed there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator why he left out of the list of live committees the Committee on Privileges and Elections? Do you regard that as a dead committee?

Mr. JONES. No; I will tell the Senator why I left it out. As we have been providing all the time, the clerk of that committee gets $2,220 and the assistant clerk gets $1,440 just as we provide for Senators. The only change is in the messenger. I do not think the messenger of the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to get any more than the messenger of any other Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We ought to change the name of messenger and call him a clerk. They are all clerks.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator is right; but, of course, the Committee on Privileges and Elections has nothing special to do except when there is a contest or something of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why does the Senator leave out from the list of committees the Committee on Education and Labor and leave in the Committee on the Library? Is it not true that the Committee on Education and Labor has vastly more work and many more bills than the Committee on the Library? Does not the Senator know that the Committee on Education and Labor now has the vocational-education bill before it, and a number of others?

Mr. JONES. I will tell the Senator why I did that. As now provided, the clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor gets $2,220. According to what we have been providing, the clerk of the Committee on the Library gets $2,500. I do not know whether that is the way it ought to be or not, but, nevertheless, that is the way it has been for a long time, and I assumed that the increase was made because the Senate considered that there was increased work for that committee. I know that the Committee on Education and Labor during the last year or two has been doing considerable work, and that several bills have been brought out—the vocational-education bill and others.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The assistant secretary is charged by that committee with the duty of keeping up the correspondence, which is constantly coming in from different parts of the United States about matters pending before the committee, and the salary was fixed at $1,800 on account of his additional work other than the ordinary work that he does for a Senator. Those salaries were based on the fact that the secretary really was the Senator's secretary and the work was done by the two assistants. It was largely correspondence, and the salaries were fixed with a view to giving them additional compensation on account of the fact that by reason of the existence of the committee there was a large amount of correspondence that they did. There really are now and have been during the past 12 months many letters to the committee from educational institutions all over the United States and various labor organizations about measures the committee has considered, and I object to a reduction of their salaries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator of course knows more about the work of that committee than I do. I have taken it for granted that the secretary of one committee of more importance than another would be the man who would get the increased pay; and it was largely upon that basis that I framed the amendment as I did. I know that a few years ago the Committee on Education and Labor apparently had nothing to do, that it reported no bills. However, I do not think the fact ought to be overlooked that there are many committees that do not ordinarily have much work to do, but there may come up a special matter of legislation or special conditions may bring to a committee additional work. As soon as that is taken care of and completed, we know that there will not be very much additional work for that committee; and should there be, it could be taken care of very well by the chairman of the committee showing the necessity for additional help before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, just as we often do here in order to provide the help that is necessary to meet what might be termed an emergency.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. I only want to say to the Senator from Georgia that, so far as I am concerned, I would not oppose the proposition, if he thought that the business of his committee required more assistance, and that the assistant clerk, instead of the secretary, was the man upon whom he imposed that additional work, and that it was necessary for the efficient service of that committee that he should have more pay. Now, I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Washington made a statement which I could not hear. How much does his amendment save?

Mr. JONES. As I figure it, it makes the expenditures of the Senate about $9,500 less than now. Of course, I have not framed this amendment with the special object in view of saving anything; I would be glad to save, if I could; but what I really have done is to put the employment and pay of our assistants upon such a basis that we could not be charged with trying to give pay under a sort of subterfuge.

Mr. REED. In order to possibly save $9,500 it is proposed to tear up all these committees, all of the present arrangements, to change the salaries of a lot of clerks, to introduce chaos into the public business, and probably not save a cent in the end.

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President, I do not tear up anything. Every committee continues just exactly as it now is. There is not any change in the composition of the committees; there is not any change in the jurisdiction of the committees; there is not any change in the committees in any respect whatever. Every committee is provided for by the rules. We ought to abolish a lot of the committees, so far as that is concerned, but I am not now proposing to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Washington has made a suggestion since I first interrupted him that I want to call to his attention. Would not the effect of the adoption of this amendment be the abolition of a number of these committees?

Mr. JONES. I think not. Every committee is provided for in our rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but appropriations to keep them going would be kept from them. I am not objecting on that account; I am in favor of it. I am going to vote for the Senator's amendment, I think, and I think we ought to abolish a whole lot of our committees. It seems to me that ought to be done. When we take the appropriations away from them we ought to abolish the useless committees, as well as take away the appropriations.

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President; as a matter of fact, these appropriations are not made for committees, but they are made for the Senators who are chairmen of the committees. We simply use the fact that a Senator is the chairman of a certain committee to make the compensation of his help a little bit different from that of some other Senator, although his work is no greater.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's amendment increases the salary of the clerks of all those Senators who have not chairmanships——

Mr. JONES. No; those Senators who are not specifically provided for.

Mr. OVERMAN. And it puts them on an equality with about 50 committees whose clerks now receive a salary of $2,200 a year, making all Senators equal in that respect?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And in order to make that increase the Senator proposes to decrease the salaries of the clerks of some other committees, and make their salaries equal also with the clerks of Senators who have no committees?

Mr. JONES. Not in order to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, I mean that is the effect of it.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. And by doing that the Senator saves about $10,000, but he does not interfere with any Senator, so far as the chairmanship of any committee is concerned. I think myself many of these committees ought to be abolished. I think the Committee on Rules has had that matter under consideration, and probably will recommend at the next session some change in respect to it. I want Senators to understand that I am asking these questions so as to bring out exactly what the Senator from Washington proposes. I think it is to equalize the salaries of clerks of those Senators who are not chairmen, increasing their salaries from $2,000 to $2,200; and then he proposes to reduce the salaries of clerks to some committees who are getting $1,800, $1,600, $1,500, down to $1,440, so as to put them all on an equality; and he lets the larger committees stand as they are.

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington to withdraw the Committee on Enrolled Bills from his amendment. He includes that committee merely because its clerks do not get more compensation than do the clerks of the inactive committees. The clerks on that committee are very active, practically every day. They are charged with the custody and the safe transmission of all the Senate bills, and they have often to take them to the White House.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire why I cut that committee out. I cut it out because the provision I make for it is just the same as it now is.

Mr. HOLLIS. I know it is as to the compensation.

Mr. JONES. That is what I mean.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have not asked to have them given larger compensation; but they are a very active and a very busy set of employees. They have to be accomplished enough to proof read and to compare bills, and I think a committee so active as that should not be put into the dead list.

Mr. JONES. That is the reason why I framed the committee amendment in the form I introduced it. I had not noticed that the compensation of these employees was just the same. I was providing by the amendment for inactive committees; but when I noticed that the compensation was just the same, I thought it would not interfere with the work of the committee or in any way with the personnel of the employees of the committee, and, therefore, just cut it out so as not to have any more than were necessary.

I have always recognized, or at any rate I have understood, that that committee was really an active committee; that it had to look after bills, had to get them to the President, and all that sort of thing, and I was really surprised to see that the compensation of its clerks was just the same as the compensation of the clerks of the inactive committees.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] speaks of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I notice that the assistant clerk to that committee receives $1,440. The Senator from New Hampshire says that that is somewhat a live committee—half-way alive, anyhow. The assistant clerk of the Committee on Engrossed Bills is paid $1,800. Is that a more active committee than is the Committee on Enrolled Bills? Why is it that an assistant clerk of one dead committee receives more than the assistant clerk of another dead committee?

Mr. HOLLIS. I have no information about the Committee on Engrossed Bills, and I am speaking entirely from hearsay. I think that is a committee chairmanship which is held by the minority; it is probably more or less a complimentary appointment, and carries with it the same emoluments as do some others; but I do not know who is the chairman of the committee. The Committee on Enrolled Bills, however, is one of the active committees; and because of that fact I can not vote for the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I will say that it would not make any difference in the pay of the help of the Senator; it would not make any difference in the expenses; and I would have no objection myself——

Mr. HOLLIS. That is the trouble about it. They are not my help; they are not my assistants; they are really doing committee work, and they are doing it very satisfactorily. It is technical work, and I think it should be recognized as such.

Mr. JONES. As I was about to say, I would have no objection to that. In the first instance, I left it in because I thought that that committee did have considerable work to do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely want to make an inquiry. I have had no time to study the amendment and I just came into the Chamber. What effect would this amendment have on the Immigration Committee and its assistants?

Mr. JONES. I can tell the Senator in just a moment. I think the amendment cuts something down in that committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator leave out the Immigration Committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have left the Immigration Committee out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The committee in which I am especially interested is the Committee on Education and Labor.

I shall protest against that committee being left out. I not only regard it as an active committee, but I think it ought to become a more active committee. I think there is a broadening field for the work of that committee; and whether I remain connected with it after the 4th of March or not, I wish to see its work enlarged. I am sure there is a field for service in that committee, and that it ranks really in importance with a number of other committees.

Mr. JONES. I will tell the Senator from South Carolina what this proposition does to the Immigration Committee. The clerk of the Immigration Committee now gets a salary of $2,220. That is just the same as all the secretaries of all these unimportant committees get, and is exactly the amount that I provide. The assistant secretary gets $1,800; so I cut that down to $1,440 under my amendment. I desire to say that the Immigration Committee has had one bill of very great importance before it in the last two or three Congresses. When that bill shall have been disposed of, as we hope it will be at this session, so far as reports or anything of that kind are concerned, that committee, it seems to me, will not have any more business than other committees to which I have referred.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator is not well advised as to that, for the reason that, even though the immigration bill becomes a law, under its operation questions will arise from time to time to which it will be absolutely essential for the Immigration Committee to consider, and it is absolutely necessary for the secretary of that committee to keep in touch with the different suggested amendments and other matters that will come to our attention as the result of the administration of the law. I take it that it is one of the most important committees of this body, and its work is continuous and will not end with the passage of the immigration bill. We have matters pending before us now touching the administration of the immigration laws, and we will have before us from time to time other questions that will have to be looked into and considered if we are to keep pace with the development of this important question. I do not know of a committee whose activities should be more carefully guarded than those of the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I recognize the force of what the Senator suggests; and when he as chairman of that committee urges upon the Senate and points out the importance of having an assistant clerk at $1,800 instead of at $1,440 I myself would not be constrained to oppose a proposition of that sort. I want to say that some of us have been urging a reform of this kind for quite a while. Senator after Senator has stood on this floor and said that there ought to be a change; that conditions ought to be corrected; but we have not been able to get anything done; and so I have proposed this amendment. It is subject, of course, to amendment, and I am glad to hear made upon the floor of the Senate these statements from chairmen of various committees. I recognized when I included certain committees in the amendment which, apparently, have been doing something lately and have been having business before the Senate that very likely the Senate would wonder why they were stricken out; but I have been of the majority and I have been of the minority, as I am of the minority now.

When I was of the majority and had a committee or two they had some business for a little while. I was chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions when there came up the contest between New Orleans and San Francisco as to the holding of the Panama Exposition. I had a great deal of correspondence while that bill was pending; but when it was disposed of the correspondence dropped off, and there was not anything more than the ordinary business of a Senator to attend to, although that was plenty. I was also chairman of another committee which, from its name, was a pretty important committee—the Committee on Irrigation. There were one or two matters of legislation pending while I was chairman of that committee which brought a little extra business; but as soon as those matters were disposed of, by reason of the fact that I was chairman of the committee, I did not have much more work than I had ordinarily been in the habit of doing.

Many of the other committees are in the same situation; but when a Senator, like the Senator from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Immigration, points out the work of his committee and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, points out the work of his committee, and when they indicate that they think the work is going to develop still further in the future, I have no objection myself to giving—in fact, I want to give—whatever compensation is adequate and ought to be given. I think that every Senator as a Senator ought to have certain employees to do his work; and then, if he is chairman of a committee and has extra work to do, that committee as a committee ought to be allowed sufficient compensation and help to do the work required of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the trouble is that the Senator has not adjusted his reductions in that way. Take the Committee on Education and Labor. The clerks of that committee get $700 more than the clerks of a Senator who has no committee; but I want to say that I could not for $700 employ an outside secretary to conduct the correspondence and do the amount of extra work that falls upon the men who assist me. I feel sure that the work of the committee will continue to develop. So that those young men fully earn the $700 additional by the additional work they do on account of committee service.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want the Senator to yield, for I would rather wait until he finishes; but he is letting other Senators in to make speeches, and I thought it was my only chance.

Mr. JONES. I will let the Senator in in a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait till the Senator gets through, if he will not let anybody else in.

Mr. JONES. I can not shut off anybody.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I want to be let in.

Mr. JONES. I will let the Senator in in just a moment. I do not claim that this is a perfect proposition. I had to draft it the best way I could to get the matter before the Senate. I was told by one of the Senators who has been working with me on these matters that I had cut out so many committees that I would probably have nearly every Senator against the amendment. Well, I do not think so. There may be some of the committees that ought to have more help than I have provided, such as the Committee on Education and Labor and possibly the Committee on Immigration; but if the Senate, after having the matter presented, think that these committees ought to have more help they can very easily amend my amendment, and I would not object to an amendment by the Senator from Georgia, nor would I object to an amendment by the Senator from South Carolina, along the lines they have suggested, and the same thing is true as to other Senators. If they make a good showing, we can get this matter adjusted and we can put it on a fair basis. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. On that very point I do not think we can adjust this matter by an amendment on the floor of the Senate in any way to do justice as it ought to be done. I agree that dead committees ought to be abolished, but the question ought to be taken up by a committee and properly considered, and not disposed of by an amendment offered on the floor by an individual Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. And the rules of the Senate changed.

Mr. LODGE. What I rose to do was to call attention to the case which came up in the colloquy between the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], with reference to the Committee on Engrossed Bills. That committee has nothing to do, but it is a very old committee, and has always been given, since I have been here, at any rate, to a member of the minority, and to one of the members of the minority having the longest service.

The clerk at $1,800 attached to the Committee on Engrossed Bills was allowed when the Republicans were in the majority to the Senator on the Democratic side who, by length of service, received the chairmanship of that committee.

I am going to take my own case. I was chairman of the Committee on Immigration when the control of the Senate changed, and let me say that the Committee on Immigration has a great deal of work to do year in and year out. I know the facts concerning that committee, and it ought to have an adequate force of assistants. When the control of the Senate changed I was given the chairmanship of the Committee on Private Land Claims. I took it as I found it and as it had been held by the late Senator Bacon and by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. My messenger by the change was cut down from $1,440 to $1,200. I did not wish him to be cut down, and I have paid the difference ever since. To the Committee on Private Land Claims, the chairmanship of which, as I have said, was previously held by Senator Bacon and by Senator SIMMONS, the Republican majority had always allowed an $1,800 clerk, and it has that $1,800 clerk now. I did not ask for it; I took it as I found it.

I do not think that Senators of long service, representing, as I do in part, more than three and a half million people, should have their clerks, who are constantly employed, cut down in the way proposed, and if they are cut down I shall pay the difference. I am not going to have my clerk, who I think is earning the money he has been receiving, cut in that way, and I shall pay the difference out of my own pocket.

I do not think the readjustment ought to be made in the way proposed. I think that length of service and the amount of business that Senators from great States have, which must vary in different cases, ought to be taken into consideration; all these things ought to be considered, and considered properly by some committee. It can not be done here in a moment on the floor simply by one Senator making a draft of what seems to him about right. I think that we need a little more consideration of such a question, because it affects the comfort of every Senator here and what he ought justly to have. I hope this amendment will not be attached to the bill. I should be glad to see the dead committees abolished and have nothing but real committees, and then have proper allowance made to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, and have all other inequalities adjusted; but I sincerely hope that such a proposal will not be tacked on this bill in any form.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not each Senator have three clerks now?

Mr. LODGE. Practically so—two clerks and a messenger.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ought we not change the designation "messenger" to "clerk"? Are the messengers not really all stenographers and secretaries?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the whole thing ought to be revised carefully by a committee which would give the whole subject consideration. This amendment raises some men arbitrarily and lowers others arbitrarily, and I do not think it ought to be done in that way.

Mr. JONES. It does not raise the salaries of any employees, except to put the secretaries to Senators upon the same basis.

Mr. LODGE. It raises some salaries in doing that.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it does.

Mr. JONES. But, Mr. President, I realize the force of some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I realize that length of service may involve additional work and that the fact that a Senator represents three and a half million people may require more work than if he represented a smaller State; and yet when we come to deal with this matter as between Senator and Senator, we can not take those things into account fairly and justly. The Senator from a Western State having a million and a half people may have far more official business than the Senator from an Eastern State with a million and a half people; at least, that is the way it looks to me, although I may be wrong about it; and yet Senators from Western States have all sorts of questions coming before the departments in relation to public lands and matters of that sort that an eastern Senator does not know anything about; and, in addition, they have commercial questions, manufacturing questions, and many other questions.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to cut the Senator down; I think he ought to have whatever force is required.

Mr. JONES. I am not here urging this amendment because of myself; I am here urging this amendment in order that Senators may put themselves in an open position, at any rate, with reference to this matter. So far as I am concerned, if a Senator goes before the proper committee and shows that he needs more help to do his official work, he ought to have it, and the people of this country want him to have it; and there would be no criticism of him.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that this ought to be done after consideration; that the question ought to be referred to a committee. Why, Mr. President, we have been trying to do it in that way time and time again. In the Sixty-third Congress I introduced and pressed a resolution of this character. The chairman of the Committee on Rules assured us that the matter would be taken up during the vacation and would be considered, and yet nothing was done. Senator after Senator on this floor admitted that the condition of things ought to be changed. Now, Mr. President, we have before the Senate a proposition to change it. I know it is harder to work out the problem on the floor of the Senate than it would be possibly in committee; but we can not get any committee to do it; we can not get any committee to try to do it; and it seems to me that now is the time to adopt some proposition here, let it go to conference, and then we will have a committee to consider it; the conferees can consider it, and if they recognize that there is an injustice done, that some committee should have some additional help or pay, it can bring it back here with the necessary change. But we have got to begin at some time; we have got to take the step at some time, or else we will go right on with conditions as they are now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am chairman of one of the inactive committees; in fact, I might say there is no necessity for that committee meeting once a year. Under this amendment my assistant clerk would receive $1,440. The Senator states that he is perfectly willing that each Senator should have all necessary help. Mr. President, my assistant clerk is paid $1,800, and I am compelled very often to hire additional assistance for my office work.

Mr. LODGE. So am I.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that two-thirds of all of my mail comes from States other than Utah. The Senator knows perhaps what work I have to do, and I can not ask my assistant clerk to work for less than $1,800. He is at the office the first thing in the morning, he comes to my home at night, and is frequently there after midnight. It is not additional help that I desire, but I do desire to pay him for the work he performs. Under this amendment all that he could get would be $1,440.

I do not want another assistant clerk, so long as I can get along with the three clerks I have. I have been perfectly willing when a tariff bill was under consideration to pay for the services of additional clerks, and I have done so ever since I have been in the Senate of the United States. I have never asked the Senate to do that for me. All I have asked the Senate to do was to pay my assistant clerk $1,800, and I venture to say that neither the Senator from Washington nor any other Senator on this floor will, in view of the work that he does, question that he ought to receive that amount.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has stated that exceptions could be made and every Senator could have what he needed. I think it is recognized that the Senator from Utah is perhaps the hardest working Senator in this body, and perhaps he ought to have more help; but that does not apply in very many cases, because very few Senators work as the Senator from Utah works.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want an additional clerk. All I want is that my clerk, who is compelled to work so hard, should be paid $1,800. I want to say now that even if this amendment is agreed to he will be paid $1,800, if I have to pay it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, no man can question the situation with reference to the Senator from Utah. I venture to say that there would not be a Senator here who would vote against an amendment to this amendment providing that the assistant clerk to the Senator from Utah should receive $1,800 a year; but let provision be made directly in that way and not through the medium of a dead committee. Let the country know that the Senator from Utah has shown the Senate that he ought to have this pay for his assistant clerk, and not have it go out that other Senators, who have insignificant and dead committees, can not get as much for their clerks because they belong to such committees. The Senator from Utah gets that amount for his assistant clerk now because of his connection with the committee, but let it be known that the Senator from Utah has shown to the Senate that his assistant is entitled to this pay, and then there can be no criticism and there will be no criticism. There can not be any criticism upon the Senate for a situation like that. That is what I should like to see the Senator from Utah do. Put an amendment to this amendment squarely up to the Senate, and I venture to say there will not be a single vote against it. We all know what the Senator from Utah does. Even with that, however, since Senators are referring to what their clerks and secretaries have to do, I want to say that I have to-day the secretary whom I had when I entered the House of Representatives; and in my judgment there is not a secretary of any Senator here who does more work than that secretary does. He works early and late, day in and day out, vacation and every other time, and yet I am not asking for any more pay for him. He ought to have more pay, so far as that is concerned. But when we come to arrange this pay upon the basis of Senators who are equal upon this floor, we must take some basis of that sort to reckon the computation; and then, when a Senator comes in and shows that he has more work than he can do, or that he has to work his help extra time and extra hours, let the Senate, after a showing, grant additional pay.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will call the attention of the Senator from Washington to two time-honored and old committees that are hard worked—the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs. I find that the Committee on Military Affairs has a clerk at $2,500, an assistant clerk at $2,220, an assistant clerk at $1,440, and a messenger at $1,200. The Naval Affairs Committee has a clerk at $2,500—which is the same as the Military Affairs Committee has—an assistant clerk at $1,800, an assistant clerk at $1,440, and a messenger at $1,440. The Senator can very readily see the differences. There is no reason for them, and I think he deserves credit for bringing this matter in here and calling the attention of the Senate to it. Everybody is agreed that the Committee on Rules ought to take up this matter and go about it in a judicial way and investigate it thoroughly and do whatever is right, and I agree with him.

Mr. JONES. I think the Committee on Rules probably ought to have done it, but the Committee on Rules has not done it, and this seems to be about the only way that we can get anything done. So I am going to have this amendment submitted to the Senate, at any rate, and let the Senate take such action as it sees fit to take.

I believe that in the next month the committee of conference—and of course the Senate part of that committee will probably be the only one that will really have anything to do with this amendment when it gets into conference—can act as a committee with reference to this matter, if the Senate thinks the committee should act in regard to it. I think they should, too; but, nevertheless, we have been unable to get them to do it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why not give them an order to do it?

Mr. JONES. If the Senator can have that done, I would have no objection myself. In regard to the matters to which the Senator has called attention, of course I have not changed those.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say they are time-honored and of long standing and unfair, because I think the Naval Committee does as much work as the Military Committee does, and since the preparedness program has come out I reckon it does more in some respects.

Mr. JONES. Well, that is possibly so.

Mr. President, to meet one very serious objection that some one has suggested I am going to strike out of my amendment the word "messengers" in line 15, page 3, and put in the word "stenographers."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that that matter has been before the Senate many times, and has been considered by the Senate; and I want to call the attention of the Senator now to what the objections have been in the past.

Senator after Senator has risen in his place and stated, "I have a young man working for me for $1,200 as messenger. He attends school at the George Washington University or the Georgetown University. He is not a stenographer; but I have so much running around to do, so much business to do with the different departments, that I brought him here for the purpose of enabling him to secure the education he desires and do the work of a messenger. He is not a stenographer, and I do not want to hire him really as a messenger and have him designated as a stenographer when he is not one."

Mr. JONES. And yet what about the great number of Senators that have stenographers that are called messengers? I have a stenographer that I call a messenger.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I would not have a messenger in my office unless he was a stenographer.

Mr. JONES. I would not, either.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only calling attention to the position that has been taken here by a number of Senators in the past, and I believe it will apply at the present time.

Mr. JONES. As the Senate does not seem to be unanimous about changing that word "messengers" to "stenographers," I will leave it as it is.

Mr. LODGE. My clerk is a stenographer.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and not only my clerk but my assistant clerk and my messenger are all stenographers. I could not get along in my office unless they were all stenographers, so far as that is concerned; but I can hardly conceive of a Senator having a secretary that is not a stenographer.

Mr. SMOOT. I know a number of them that do.

Mr. JONES. I have no doubt that that is so.

I think everybody understands this amendment now, and understands what is desired to be done, so I will leave it with the Senate for such discussion as it sees fit to have, and then have a vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am not particularly concerned about this amendment, because I belong to that class of Senators who very shortly will retire to a place where committees cease from troubling; but I do suggest that the amount which will be saved by this change is so inconsiderable that it is hardly worth making. We are expending unnecessarily, I think, in many appropriations, ten times the amount that is involved here. I think in some respects we are appropriating too much money, and in some respects we are appropriating altogether too little.

I proposed an amendment here a short time ago to raise the salaries of the judges of the various courts, to which a point of order was made and sustained. I think that was an amendment that should have been adopted. We refuse to pay these judges what they ought to have, and yet we are constantly passing legislation providing for unnecessary offices, like some of the commissions and bureaus, and paying them extravagant salaries.

We passed through the Senate not very long ago a bill which proposed to vest in the President of the United States power to appoint, when, in his discretion, he thought the public business justified it, additional judges wherever a judge had reached the age of 70 years and was eligible to retire. That bill is now pending in the House. I sincerely hope that it will not finally become law; but, if it should, it would involve us, I think, in an unnecessary expenditure of money, because it is quite likely that as rapidly as these judges reach 70 years of age additional judges will be appointed. So, by legislation of that character, we are constantly adding to the unnecessary expenditures of the Government.

We not only pass such legislation which is not subject to objection as to its legality, but we are passing legislation which is at least of questionable constitutionality. I think the piece of legislation to which I have called attention is of that character. The question was discussed while the matter was pending before the Senate; but I have nowhere seen a clearer and more convincing discussion of the constitutional phase of that proposed legislation than that contained in a memorandum written by Judge Evans, of Kentucky, which I submitted a few days ago, and which, under the order of the Senate, was sent to the Committee on Printing. For some reason that committee has concluded that it ought not to be printed, although, as I say, my own judgment about it is that it is exceedingly valuable and exceedingly timely, because of the fact that this legislation is still pending.

I sought to have the document printed as a Senate document, in order that it might be utilized with as little expense as possible. I am informed that it would have cost only $40 to have printed it. Now that the Senate may see how valuable it is, let me call attention to it. It is with reference to Senate bill No. 706.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply want to correct the statement of the Senator to the effect that the committee has refused to print the document. The document was referred to the committee only a day or two ago. Yesterday the estimate of cost was obtained upon it. There has been no opportunity to get a meeting of the committee. The chairman of the committee is absent from the city.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I have been misinformed. I was told that the majority of the committee had concluded not to allow the memorandum to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. There has been no opportunity for the committee to have a meeting. The chairman of the committee is absent, and there has been no chance to have a meeting. There is opposition to the printing of the document, however.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, Mr. President, I understand there is opposition to its being printed, and its remaining in the hands of the committee probably means simply that it will be held indefinitely. If there is no objection, I will not take the time to read it; I will have it printed as a part of my remarks. I will ask unanimous consent first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think and did not think the memorandum ought to be printed as a public document. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I will state why. This legislation——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I will not yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I will let the Senator read it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator objects, I will read it:

Memorandum——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection. The Senator can print it in the RECORD if he desires. To save the time of the Senate, I withdraw my objection to having it printed without reading it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me further suggest to the Senator that it will be far less expensive——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I was going to say that if the Senator will allow me to make a brief statement I am, so far as I am concerned, ready to consent that it be printed as a document.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me suggest, before the Senator begins, that all I care for is to have it printed as a public document; and I am making the request in good faith, because I believe it to be a valuable document, and valuable at this time. It will cost a great deal more to have it printed in the RECORD than it will to have it printed as a public document; and if I may have the consent of the Senate to its being printed as a public document, I shall have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With just a brief explanation, I am ready to withdraw my objections to its being printed as a public document.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to state to the Senator why I objected. This measure has passed out of the Senate. The Senate has acted favorably upon the constitutionality of the legislation. It is now pending in the House; and it seemed to me that if the House wanted this information the House should have it printed as a public document, rather than the Senate. For us to go back and print documents upon matters on which we had already legislated might be misconstrued to indicate a doubt as to the soundness of the action which we had taken. I have no doubt the legislation will be constitutional and wise. Instead of being an expense, it will prove an economy of judicial administration. But, in view of the fact that the Senator can put it into the RECORD by reading it, if he wishes to do so, I withdraw my objection to save the RECORD and time of the Senate. I presented an objection to its being printed as a public document. It will be, as the Senator said, less expensive to print it as a public document, and take less time. Therefore I withdraw my objection, and am willing for the Senator to have unanimous consent now to print it as a public document.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum may be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 688).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the manuscript of the memorandum in opposition to the passage of the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which relates to the compulsory retirement of Federal judges of the United States, by Walter Evans, judge for the western district, Kentucky, be printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Harding	Oliver	Smoot
Borah	Hardwick	Overman	Sterling
Brady	Hollis	Page	Sutherland
Broussard	Hughes	Penrose	Thomas
Bryan	Husting	Pittman	Tillman

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names on the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. JONES. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). Having a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and observing his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I will withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness, and I have agreed to pair with him for the day. Therefore I can not vote on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who has been called from the Chamber. If the Senator from Illinois were present, he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with that Senator. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am compelled to withdraw my vote, then, having a pair with that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has not voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—18.

So Mr. JONES's amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Recurring to page 8, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, desires a reconsideration of the vote by which the lines 4, 5, and 6 were stricken out by the Senate. After a discussion with the subcommittee we have agreed to interpose no objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and I ask the Senate to disagree to the Senate committee amendment. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to submit a statement, however, before that is done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we were unable to hear a word that was said by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. To explain more thoroughly, there was an amendment reported by the committee, and also adopted by the Senate, striking out lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 8, as follows:

For compiling the Navy Yearbook for the calendar year 1916, under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, $500.

The committee thought, as there was very little work involved in the compilation of the yearbook, this appropriation ought not to be allowed, and I do not think we will allow it in the future; but inasmuch as the clerk has already done the work and he has been getting heretofore this amount, and even more than this sum, the subcommittee, after consulting about the matter, have agreed to a reconsideration. The chairman of the Naval Committee said this man had done the work with the idea that he would get this increase, and he ought to have it; and as that was the understanding, and he had been getting it for years, the committee have agreed to say to the Senate that they are agreeable to have it stricken from the bill. I understand it has been reconsidered without objection, and the question comes again before the Senate as to whether the Senate will agree to the committee amendment. I think probably at this time it would be best to disagree to the Senate committee amendment, for the reason that this man did the work under a kind of implied contract that he was to get this money, and the Senate ought to bow to it. However, Mr. President, I do not think the Senate will ever make this allowance again.

Mr. OLIVER. Did I understand the Senator in charge of the bill to say that this matter had been recommitted to the subcommittee?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I did not say that. I said that I consulted some of the members of the subcommittee. I did not see the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I knew the Senator would agree to it.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not heard anything of it. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if the same understanding did not exist last year—that it would not be allowed this year?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know as to that. It is for the Senate to say whether they will allow it. The work has been done, and it was done, as the chairman claims, under an implied contract. In the past we have paid as much as $2,000 for this work. The Senate cut it down to $500 last year. I give notice that we will not agree to it again, and we ought to notify now the chairman of the committee that this amount will not be allowed again.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I have a distinct recollection that in the committee last year there was an understanding that it would not be allowed this year. I know I have a very distinct recollection of that kind.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not recollect about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the committee I insisted that this provision should be eliminated from the bill and the committee voted to strike out the provision from the bill. I will state that for the last three years at least I have objected to paying for the compilation of the Navy Yearbook. Three years ago it was $1,000, two years ago it was $1,000, and this year the House appropriated $500.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] is right when he says it was distinctly understood by the subcommittee that it would not be appropriated for this year, but I understand that the chairman of the committee received no notice to that effect, and it was the understanding and there was an implied contract to do the work, and he feels under obligation that this amount shall be paid this year for compiling the year book.

But, Mr. President, so that the Senate may know that the committee has not done an injustice in taking the position it did, I wish to call attention to what the compilation of the Navy Yearbook for 1914 consists of. From pages 1 to 805 there are nothing but naval appropriation acts beginning with the appropriation act of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress. In fact, I should like to see that part of the Navy Yearbook discontinued and do away with the expense, because all any one interested in it would have to do would be to send for a copy of the appropriation act of a particular year. But here are 805 pages with nothing but the naval appropriation acts, as I have said.

On page 872 is the first of the personnel of the Navy, and that runs to page 879.

There are 944 pages in the book. The annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, December 1, 1914, extends from page 893 to page 944. This constitutes the Navy Yearbook outside of the few pages showing the personnel of the Navy, the yearly naval pay, and the personnel legislation. That is all there is in the Navy Yearbook for that year, but as far as I am concerned, the chairman of the committee not having been notified last year that this appropriation would be discontinued, and as there was virtually an implied contract between the chairman of the Naval Committee and the clerk who did the work, I shall not object to the payment of $500 this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. From the date of the approval of this act and during the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the increase of pay provided for in section 7 of this act shall apply and be paid to the employees to whom the said section refers. The appropriation for this purpose shall be immediately available.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the purpose for which this amendment has been offered has been explained to the Senate two or three times. I should like to refer to it once more, because probably there are Senators present who have not heard it. It simply does for the balance of this fiscal year what the Senate has already voted to do for the fiscal year 1918. As the necessity exists to-day for the increased pay to these employees, I think there should be no objection to the payment as proposed in the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment will make a deficiency in the deficiency appropriation bill of over $500,000. It means an increase, with the Smoot amendment, of over $6,000,000. All our appropriations have been made for the current fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1916. Therefore I say this amendment will require a deficiency appropriation of over $500,000. If the increase is paid now instead of the 1st day of July, as the Smoot amendment provides, and if it is carried out, as it will be, on every appropriation bill, and as it should be if allowed in this bill, as I calculate, it will make an increase of $6,000,000 and something over. In round numbers, the Smoot amendment will increase $6,000,000 and there will be a total increase of $19,000,000. I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to inquire if this matter has been estimated for and has been recommended by a standing committee? If that has not been done, I raise the point of order that it is out of order.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not make a point of order, because if he does I shall offer it as an amendment to the Smoot substitute when the bill comes into the Senate. The Senator will not gain anything by doing it. We might as well have a vote on the proposition under the circumstances, for we will have a vote when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will make the point of order now, because if I do not, then when it comes up on the Smoot amendment it will be in order. Therefore I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from South Carolina to insist on his point of order?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I insist on it.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator will not gain anything, because it will be in order on the Smoot amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WEEKS. I reserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I move to strike out all in the bill from line 18, on page 62, down to the bottom of page 65. This relates to what are commonly called the Subtreasury provisions of the bill. I called attention to this matter the other day and to the fact that now under existing law it is utterly unnecessary to maintain these Subtreasuries. They had their origin way back in the early history of the country. The Government in its early days carried on its fiscal operations through the Banks of the United States, the First and Second. The Government deposits were made in those banks and the Government payments were made in checks on those banks.

Those who are familiar with the history of the country know how the Second Bank, the last Bank of the United States, came to give up the ghost. It resulted from the removal of the Government deposits. It lingered along for some time after it was deprived of those deposits, but finally died. That left the Government without any institution in which to deposit its collections of internal revenue and customs and money derived from other sources. In other words, it left the Government entirely without any fiscal agent. Resort was made, under those circumstances, to some of our State banks. We had in those days a system of State banks organized under State laws issuing currency based on all kinds of security and as varied as were the laws of the different States. The panic that came in 1837 resulted in showing what a vicious system that was. The Government lost some of its deposits in some of those State banks. I do not at this moment recall just how many thousand dollars it amounted to, but it lost a considerable amount.

Finally, in order to get some relief during the administration of President Van Buren the Subtreasury system was adopted—that is, provision was made for the appointment of a number of assistant treasurers of the United States to be located at various points. These Subtreasuries were made the depositories of the Government funds, and the Government carried on its fiscal operations through them. That system still exists. The ground for its existence has long ago ceased to exist.

It was demonstrated time and again prior to the adoption of the present reserve system how utterly vicious and dangerous the Subtreasury system was in this respect—that is, the Government deposits were deposited in the treasuries and accumulated there. The money was taken out of the circulation of the country and piled up in the Subtreasuries, so that at times there was a stagnation and almost a panic in the money market of the country.

The only way the situation could be relieved, Mr. President, or attempted to be relieved under the old system was for the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw the Government deposits from the Subtreasuries, especially the great Subtreasury in New York, and deposit them in the banks of the country. The moment the funds were deposited in the banks the money entered into the circulation of the country, and did not lead to such a shrinkage and diminution of the currency of the country as it did while the money was tied up in the Subtreasuries.

We passed two years ago or more the Federal Reserve Act, creating a system of Federal reserve banks. That act as it originally came from the House of Representatives required the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit all Government funds absolutely in the reserve banks. Objection was made to that on the part of the Treasury Department when the bill came before the Senate committee. The result was that there was a modification; and the law as finally passed is found in section 15 of the Federal Reserve Act. It provides as follows:

SEC. 15. The moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except the 5 per cent fund for the redemption of outstanding national-bank notes and the funds provided in this act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes, may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in Federal reserve banks, which banks, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States; and the revenues of the Government or any part thereof may be deposited in such banks, and disbursements may be made by checks drawn against such deposits.

This clearly contemplated that this new system of banks was practically to take the place of the old Subtreasury system. With 12 reserve banks in the country there is no longer any occasion to maintain the system of Subtreasuries.

I wish to call attention to the total expense involved in the Subtreasury system. But before I do that I want to direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the main the Subtreasuries are places where Government funds collected in the shape of Government taxes are deposited and drawn against. With the Federal reserve banks, especially as to those located in the cities where there are Subtreasuries, there is no occasion to maintain the system of Subtreasuries. It is practically a duplication of work.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the number of these Subtreasuries. There is one at Boston, one at Chicago, one at New York, one at St. Louis, one at San Francisco, one at Baltimore, one at Cincinnati, one at New Orleans, and one at Philadelphia. The total cost for these Subtreasuries as they appear in the bill amounts to $463,420.

Let me now call your attention to the salaries that are paid. The assistant treasurer at Baltimore receives $4,500; the assistant treasurer at Boston, $5,000; at Chicago, $5,000; at Cincinnati, $4,500; at New Orleans, $4,500; in New York, $8,000; in Philadelphia, $5,000; in St. Louis, $4,500; and in San Francisco, $4,500.

I can readily see how the men who hold these positions are very anxious to have these Subtreasuries retained. But there is no necessity for it. The other day there was a report from the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject, intimating that it is necessary to keep up the Subtreasuries because they are the depositories of gold and they have no other place to deposit the gold. That is not true. The gold is deposited in the mints and assay offices of the United States.

In looking over this appropriation bill, on the pages following the provisions that I have moved to strike out, I find that at Carson City, Nev., there is a mint, and the appropriation in the bill for that is $7,500. At Denver there is a mint and an assay office, and the appropriation for that is $191,600. At New Orleans there is a mint and an assay office, and the appropriation for it is $12,650. At Philadelphia there is a mint, and the appropriation for it is $448,600. At San Francisco there is a mint, and the appropriation for it is $250,000. At Boise, Idaho, there is an assay office, and the appropriation for it is $7,400. Deadwood or Black Hills, S. Dak., has an assay office, and there is an appropriation of $7,500 for that. Helena, Mont., has an assay office, with an appropriation of $8,400. New York City has an assay office, and the appropriation for that is $237,100. Salt Lake City has an assay office, and the appropriation for that is only $3,800. Seattle has an assay office, and the appropriation for it is $31,950. The aggregate amount of the appropriations for these mints and assay offices is $1,171,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in the letter which he has sent here—of course, it was written by some subordinate—is utterly mistaken in assuming that it is necessary to keep these Subtreasuries for the storage of gold.

I want to call attention to the fact that some of the members of the Efficiency Board have already investigated this question and made a report. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has a copy of that report, and I have no doubt he will present it to the Senate, from which it clearly appears that it is utterly unnecessary to maintain these Subtreasuries.

Last night I clipped the following from the Washington Star, which I want to read in this connection:

There is about seven hundred millions of gold bullion and coin that the assay office in New York City has been unable to safeguard because of its lack of facilities, and which it has put into the custody of the Subtreasury, its next-door neighbor. In the Subtreasury at New York the boxes containing this fortune are piled so high and take so much room that only a canyon between is left as an aisle for those who must walk through the vault. The congestion is unprecedented.

Besides—

I call attention to this fact, and it is a surprising fact—

Besides, there is no responsibility in the subtreasurer for the safety of the gold. The Director of the Mint and his subordinates in charge of the assay office are bonded to insure the safety of precious metals in their custody.

So it appears that the Subtreasury is not under any bond for the custody of the gold it receives. I will read it again:

Besides, there is no responsibility in the subtreasurer for the safety of the gold. The Director of the Mint and his subordinates in charge of the assay office are bonded to insure the safety of precious metals in their custody. And, furthermore, apparently the subtreasurer at New York is not delighted with the custody of all this wealth, even though he is not directly responsible. So—

Now, listen to this:

So arrangements are to be made to restore the gold to the custody of the mint. Assistant Secretary Vogel, of the New York Subtreasury, has arranged with Supt. Adam Joyce, of the Philadelphia Mint, to take at least $600,000,000 of gold into his charge.

There is already stored in the mint at Philadelphia over $470,000,000 in gold bricks. The increment from New York will mean that an additional $1,000,000,000 in gold will be together in one place.

An idea of just how much gold is involved may be gained from the fact that a gold brick 2 inches thick, 3½ inches wide, and 9 inches long is worth $8,000. In $1,000,000,000 there would be about 125,000 of these gold bricks. If placed end to end, they would stretch 18 miles. If they were bricks of clay, they would fill 55 wagons. But no wagon would be strong enough to carry the weight of a wagonload of gold.

This shows, Mr. President, in the first place, that the contention of the Treasury Department that these Subtreasuries are needed for the storage of gold is unwarranted, for most of the gold for which there is room has been stored in the assay office at New York City, and as to the balance which the Subtreasury does not want, it has made arrangements to remove to the mint at Philadelphia. So that reason falls to the ground.

If you take into account the fact, Mr. President, that the city of New York has a Federal reserve bank, that it has an assay office where the gold can be deposited, and that the overflow of gold in the assay office can be transferred to the mint at Philadelphia, you will see that there is no foundation for maintaining the Subtreasury at New York except to give desirable places to officeholders, the assistant treasurer at that place being a salaried officer at the rate of $8,000 a year.

The same thing is especially true as to San Francisco, to which I will call attention, and which in principle is in the same condition. At San Francisco there is a Federal reserve bank; there is a mint located there, an assay office, and also a Sub-treasury. Mr. President, will any sane man tell me, if he is not particularly the guardian of or is not interested in the office-holders in that city, any reason why the fiscal operations of the Government in that part of the country can not be carried on through the Federal reserve bank, and why the storage of gold can not be adequately provided for in the mint and assay office at San Francisco?

More than that, from this article—and I think it is correct—it appears that these Subtreasuries or Independent Treasuries are under no requirement to give bond for the custody of the gold coin or the gold bullion that is put into their vaults. They give the usual official bond that such officers give, but no special bond is given for the custody of the gold in their possession.

To my mind, as I said the other day, the question is up to you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who are in control of the Government. If you believe in practicing the economy that you preach, here is a golden opportunity for you. Wipe out this whole Subtreasury system, which is a remnant of Van Buren's administration, and let the fiscal operations of the Government be carried on as the Federal reserve act of 1913 provided in section 15.

Mr. President, I was a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency at the time of the passage of the Federal reserve act. I then thought that we ought to have adopted the House provision which required the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit all Government funds in the reserve banks. The principle involved in that act was the reverse of the old Subtreasury system. The Subtreasury system gathered up the revenues of the country, tied them up, and kept them out of circulation, while by requiring the Government deposits to be made in the Federal reserve banks, as provided in the law, the money would be constantly in circulation, and no such stringency, as we had time and again under the Subtreasury system, would arise from the collection of the Government revenue.

The matter is still optional, and we continue to be at the mercy of the Secretary of the Treasury. If he sees proper, he can still withhold deposits from the Federal reserve banks; he can still have the money piled up in the Subtreasuries; and he can continue to do what was done under former administrations, after the money had been piled up, by disbursing it amongst favored banks throughout the country. How much fairer and juster is it not, Mr. President, to have the Government revenues as they are received deposited in these Government agencies which we have created, these Federal reserve banks, and in that way have them remain in constant circulation?

We have amply provided for the storage of gold. There is no occasion to maintain this Subtreasury system for that purpose. The newspaper article I read indicated that the Subtreasury at New York, even if it were absolutely necessary, is not in a condition to store all the gold, but that the bulk of it is stored in the assay office, and the balance of it is now to be removed to the mint at Philadelphia.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Minnesota speaks as though this gold belonged to the United States Government. Does he think so?

Mr. NELSON. I do not speak of it in that sense at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To whom does the gold belong?

Mr. NELSON. Most of it belongs to private individuals, and the Secretary of the Treasury will issue gold certificates on it. It is deposited with the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator means that the Secretary of the Treasury has already issued gold certificates on it?

Mr. NELSON. I do not mean to say that. It may be possible as to some of it, but not as to all of it. Gold may be deposited in the assay offices and in the mint for future coinage on which there have been no certificates issued.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am speaking of gold now on deposit at New York and the larger Subtreasuries. In all those cases the gold is owned by the individuals who hold the gold certificates that are in circulation.

Mr. NELSON. To a large extent, but not absolutely so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator know any provision of law under which the Federal reserve banks can accept this gold and issue gold certificates thereon?

Mr. NELSON. I will tell the Senator what the law is. A man can deposit gold in the Government mint or assay office under existing law, and on that deposit he can get his gold certificate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NELSON. I am not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the gold that is deposited in the mint is deposited for coinage——

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But that the gold which is deposited in the Subtreasuries is already coined, and on that the Subtreasury issues certificates which circulate as money.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, not at all. The uncoined gold, or gold in bars, is deposited in the assay offices.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; and in the Subtreasuries.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, yes; some of it is deposited in the Subtreasuries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Minnesota is seeking to abolish the Subtreasuries, and my impression is that some of the functions which those Subtreasuries perform can not be performed under existing law by the Federal reserve banks. I am in sympathy with the idea the Senator has, that those functions should be transferred to the Federal reserve banks, but I think before that can be done we must have legislation, and that we shall not attain the object simply by striking out the provision for the Subtreasuries. I know of no provision of existing law under which $25,000,000 of gold can be deposited in a Federal reserve bank and the man who deposits it receive gold certificates for it.

Mr. NELSON. No; but it can be deposited in the mint or in the assay office and gold certificates be received for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say that out of a total of $2,093,000,000 in gold held by the Treasury, according to a late report of the Treasury Department, $1,740,000,000 is in the mints and assay offices of this country. Of that $1,740,000,000, about $450,000,000 is in Denver, $357,000,000 in San Francisco, $325,000,000 in the Philadelphia mint, and $607,000,000 in the New York assay office.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not doubt that at all. It is placed there for safe-keeping, but the certificates are issued by the Subtreasuries, or they are issued by the Secretary of the Treasury here in Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. But only about 12.5 per cent of the gold held for the redemption of the gold certificates and United States notes is kept at the Subtreasury.

Mr. NELSON. Will both Senators yield to me? I have the law here, which I believe covers the case. I read from chapter 170, act of June 8, 1878.

Deposits of gold to be received by superintendents of mints or assayers of assay offices.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to constitute any superintendent of mint or assayer of any assay office, an assistant treasurer of the United States without additional compensation, to receive gold coin and bullion on deposit for the purposes provided for in section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

Section 254 provides for deposits in the Subtreasury and the issuance of gold certificates. So we see that under the law the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to appoint the superintendents of the mints and assay offices to discharge this duty, without allowing them additional salary, and to make them technically assistant treasurers of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator read the section there referred to?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. NELSON. Here is section 254 of the Revised Statutes. It has been enlarged and amended, but the principle involved in it is not departed from.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to receive deposits of gold coin and bullion with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in sums not less than $20, and to issue certificates therefor, in denominations of not less than $20 each, corresponding with the denominations of the United States notes. The coin and bullion deposited for or representing the certificates of deposit shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of the same on demand. And certificates representing coin in the Treasury may be issued in payment of interest on the public debt.

And so forth. I need not read the remainder of section 254, which allows the deposit of gold coin and gold bullion in the Subtreasuries and the issuance of those certificates. As to the statute from which I quoted, the Senator can see how that dovetails and fits in with this provision. I am reading from the compiled statutes. This is found in the Statutes at Large, No. 26, statute 102. I read this again, having already once read it:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to constitute any superintendent of mint or assayer of any assay office, an Assistant Treasurer of the United States, without additional compensation, to receive gold coin and bullion on deposit or for purposes provided for in section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think he has put an erroneous interpretation on that section. The fact is that the Government of the United States has received something over two thousand million dollars of gold and has issued certificates against that gold, which certificates are in circulation among the people to a large extent.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That provision is to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit a part of that gold with the mint and assay offices of the country; and the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the chairman of the committee explains that it is desired not to keep this all in one place, but to keep it under the physical control of the Government itself, and not to intrust that gold to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. NELSON. This amendment does not contemplate changing that. Striking out the appropriations for these offices and discontinuing them will leave in force the law I have just read. Can not the Senator see that? The Secretary of the Treasury can appoint every one of these officers in the mints and assay offices Assistant Treasurers of the United States, and when they are so appointed they have precisely the power that the Subtreasurer in New York has.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; there is where the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NELSON. I am not mistaken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. All they have the power to do is to receive and hold for the Government gold which the Government has already received from private individuals, through the Treasury Department and through the Subtreasuries.

Mr. NELSON. That is all the Subtreasurer can do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Subtreasurer has the power, under the law, to issue certificates, but a mint officer has no power to issue certificates. Those certificates are the certificates of the Treasurer of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. NELSON. The Secretary of the Treasury can issue those certificates.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I interpret the statute to which the Senator has referred, it simply makes those mints the storehouses of the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the gold for which he has issued gold certificates.

Mr. NELSON. That is all the Subtreasuries are—storehouses.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NELSON. No; I am not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Subtreasuries issue those certificates direct.

Mr. NELSON. Suppose the subtreasurer does, the gold is there and they are storehouses for the gold.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Suppose those certificates, instead of being issued by the officers of the mint, are issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, the gold still remains stored in the Subtreasury just as it does in the mints and the assay offices. There is no other difference, and the Senator can not demonstrate that there is, except in one particular, and that is when the gold is deposited in the mint it is in the hands of the Government, and I am inclined to think, in view of the way the statute reads, that those assistant treasurers can issue the same certificates that the assistant treasurers at the Subtreasuries can, because they are put in the same class; but, whether they can or not, the Secretary of the Treasury can issue the gold certificates if the gold is deposited in the mints or the assay offices. There can not be any doubt about the law. I will again read the provision. It is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to constitute any superintendent of mint or assayer of any assay office, an assistant treasurer of the United States without additional compensation, to receive gold coin and bullion and deposit for—

for the purposes provided for in section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

What are those purposes? The gold coin and bullion are deposited in the Subtreasury for storage and safe-keeping, and when these men are appointed assistant treasurers they become endowed with the same power as the Treasurer of the United States, and under this law they can undoubtedly issue certificates. I think, Mr. President, that any Senator who has this reform at heart and who desires to save the Government the expense of nearly a half million dollars a year need not have any difficulty about the law of the case.

My amendment simply strikes out the appropriation for these officeholders. I admit it is a cruel blow to all of them. Here are nine assistant treasurers of the United States, running in salary from $4,500 up to $8,000, as in the case at New York. It is a hard thing to turn them out, and I dare say they do not consider it much of an economy or much of a reform in the public service; but now, Mr. President, having established the Federal Reserve System, having provided expressly by law that the Federal reserve banks shall be depositaries of Government funds, the Secretary of the Treasury having a right to deposit everything, with but few exceptions, in the reserve banks and to draw checks against it, these officials are unnecessary. I will read the law again. It is very plain, but I am afraid some of the Senators who were not present when I read it before may not understand it.

SEC. 15. The moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except—except the 5 per cent fund for the redemption of outstanding national-bank notes and the funds provided in this act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in Federal reserve banks, which banks, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States; and the revenues of the Government or any part thereof may be deposited in such banks, and disbursements may be made by checks drawn against such deposits.

I think that was a very wise provision. The purpose of it was to destroy or afford the opportunity to destroy the viciousness that came from the old Subtreasury system. I will reiterate, at the risk of being guilty of undue repetition, that the great vice of the old Subtreasury system was that it piled up and accumulated the revenues of the Government at one or two points, principally in the Subtreasury at New York; that it took that money out of circulation, which led in many instances within my recollection to a money stringency in this country, and when that stringency came or was threatened, Mr. President, we saw the spectacle, which I hope we may never see again, of money being taken out of the Subtreasury of the United States and put into the hands of some favored large banks in New York City, instead of it being scattered in the channels of trade throughout the country. I read again the act of March 4, 1900, as amended by the acts of 1906, 1907, and 1911.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer, or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $20, and to issue gold certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $10, and the coin so deposited shall be retained in the Treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose.

When the law provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint the superintendents of the mints and assay offices Assistant Treasurers of the United States, it equips them with the powers and the attributes that an Assistant Treasurer of the United States has under the present system.

But, Mr. President, as I said in the outset, it is a question of reform in the Government service; it is a question of economy; it is a question of removing what I believe to be a duplication of work. The work that has heretofore been done by these Subtreasury systems can now be done by the Federal reserve banks, with the aid of the assay offices and the mints of the country; and, if in this contention for economy there is any desire to practice it here is a fine opportunity for doing so without injuring the service one iota. More than that, if we strike these provisions from the bill the matter will go to conference, and if any amendment is needed—and I doubt whether any material amendment will be needed—but if any slight change is required it can be easily effected by the conferees.

There is a necessity for the continuance of the mints and assay offices of the country for various purposes. First, they are needed for the coinage of gold; in the next place, they are needed for the convenience of the miners as assay offices; and they are also needed and are of value as depositories of gold that is placed on deposit with the Government.

I need add no more at present, Mr. President, but to say that this question is up to the Democratic Party. If they believe in the economy they have so persistently preached there was never a broader, a more open, or a better field in which to put it in practice than is now afforded by the opportunity I present them of striking out this section from the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, usually I can agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I can not agree with him to-day in the advocacy of this proposition. I do not think the Senate will agree with him if we can get enough of the Members here to understand just what the question is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I think the Senate ought to hear this question discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Norris	Shields
Borah	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Hughes	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Husting	Page	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	James	Penrose	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones	Phelan	Sterling
Clapp	Kenyon	Pittman	Stone
Clark	Kern	Poindexter	Thomas
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Townsend
Cummins	Lewis	Ransdell	Underwood
Curtis	McLean	Reed	Vardaman
Fernald	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Walsh
Fletcher	Myers	Saulsbury	Watson
Gallinger	Nelson	Shafroth	Weeks
Gronna	Newlands	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall try to be very brief, indeed. I simply want to state the facts.

The proposition of the Senator from Minnesota is to abolish the Subtreasuries by striking out the appropriation. If that is done, it will leave us with no law, no plan to carry on the business that is now carried on by the Subtreasuries. It is not a proposition to abolish the Subtreasuries and adopt something in lieu of them, but simply to abolish the Subtreasuries by starving them to death.

It is true that there is a provision in the Federal reserve act, to which the Senator from Minnesota called attention, which provides that the moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except the 5 per cent fund for the redemption of outstanding national notes and the funds provided in that act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes, may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in the Federal reserve banks, which banks, when required by the Secretary, shall act as fiscal agents of the Government. But notice that the language of the act applies only to certain funds and certain moneys, whereas the Subtreasuries have many other functions and perform many other duties. If they are abolished by shutting off the revenue, these other functions and duties which they perform will be left without any agency of the Government to perform them. Surely, the Senate does not want to leave the fiscal matters of the Government in that chaotic condition.

It is also true, to state the matter fairly, that a portion of the duties might be performed by the supervisors of the mints if they were designated as subtreasurers; but here is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury setting forth the business of the Subtreasuries. You will find it, Senators, in a letter which has been printed, and which is Document No. 1777 of the House of Representatives:

"They issue gold certificates; they are charged with the duty of acceptance of gold coins for exchange, acceptance of standard silver dollars for exchange, acceptance of fractional silver for redemption, acceptance of minor coins for redemption, acceptance of United States notes for redemption, acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption, acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption, cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency, laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process, exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be requested, remittances from United States depositary banks of their surplus deposits of internal-revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds, deposits of postal savings funds direct, deposits of money-order funds direct and indirect, deposits of post-office funds direct and indirect, deposits on account of 5 per cent redemption fund, deposits of interest on public deposits, deposits of funds belonging to disbursing officers, funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat, encashment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at a Subtreasury for payment, the payment of United States coupons and interest checks, and, in addition to the foregoing, the Subtreasuries have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of the gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks."

It will be observed that all those offices and duties are being performed at present by the Subtreasuries; that it is not proposed to wipe out the Subtreasuries and substitute a new plan and create a new authority—a thing that, of course, might be done—but it is proposed simply to starve the Subtreasuries to death. That plan, if adopted, will leave us without Subtreasuries and without any department of the Government to perform the various functions that are enumerated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, many of the functions enumerated by the Senator can be performed by the Federal reserve banks, can they not?

Mr. REED. I called attention a moment ago to the only clause that gives the Federal reserve banks any authority, and that is limited. As I stated—perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber at the time—that authority is very limited, and I called attention to the limitations.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think the Senator understood my question. My question to the Senator from Missouri was this: Are not many of the functions enumerated by the Senator from Missouri now performed, or can they not be performed, by the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. REED. I shall have to repeat much I have already said if I answer the Senator. I have said that all of them can in some sort of fashion be performed by the Federal reserve banks if we pass a law giving the Federal reserve banks that authority. It is not proposed, however, to pass such a law now; and if we wipe out the Subtreasuries and do not pass a law creating some other authority—the Federal reserve banks or some other—then we will have these various duties that must be performed left without any agency to perform them.

There is at the present time a law which would give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to call upon the Federal reserve banks to do certain of these things, but only a small part of the duties that are performed by the Subtreasuries can be performed under the existing law. The existing law is limited to this:

> The moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except the 5 per cent redemption fund and the funds provided in this act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes, may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in the Federal reserve banks.

But that is only two out of many things that the Subtreasuries do.

Mr. GRONNA. I was interested in the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota to the effect that all these functions can be performed by the supervisors of the mints. I am just asking the Senator from Missouri for information as to that.

Mr. REED. I say that in my opinion—and I think I can not be mistaken—the Senator from Minnesota is in error if he meant to say that all of these duties that are now performed by the Subtreasuries can be performed by the banks, unless the authority shall be hereafter given to the banks by an act of Congress. That is to say, the law at present does not give that authority except to the limited extent to which I have already adverted. So that if we starve the Subtreasuries to death by enacting the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, we will have these various duties and functions left without any agency to carry them on. Therefore, even if the Senator from Minnesota were right in his contention that these institutions are a source of large expense, and that money could be saved to the Government by abolishing them, manifestly before we strike them down we must set up in their place some agency or some authority to do the things that otherwise will remain undone.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but there is just one matter to which I want to call attention, and it is this:

There are really two kinds of gold kept by the Treasury. There is the gold that is stored there, on which gold certificates are issued. They may be issued by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the mints. Now, under the law, the Treasury is required to maintain a gold reserve—it used to be $100,000,000, I think; now it is $150,000,000—for the redemption of our paper currency, our greenbacks. That money is supposed to be constantly in the Treasury, and no gold certificates are supposed to be issued against it.

Mr. REED. That really does not change or controvert anything I have said. I do not think it does.

Mr. President, the next thing to which I call attention is this, and I want to impress the fact upon the Senate if I can: It is proposed to wipe out the Subtreasuries, and it is asserted that then all of the duties that are now performed by the Subtreasuries may be transacted by the Federal reserve banks, and all of the money now held by the Subtreasuries handled by them.

What are these Federal reserve banks? We talk of them here in the Senate sometimes as though they were Government banks, owned, controlled, and managed by the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, the Federal reserve banks are private institutions, the stock of which is owned by the various national banks and the few State banks and trust companies that have joined the Federal Reserve System. The majority of the board of directors of every one of these Federal reserve banks is elected by the member banks, and every officer save one within the banks is appointed by the officers who are elected by the member banks. The proposition, therefore, is to turn over certain functions, powers, and duties of the Government to private institutions that are owned and controlled by the banks of the country. When we propose to enter into that sort of thing it would be well for us to pause and reflect and make certain that we are not committing a great error.

I am not at all satisfied with the proposition that all of the money in the Federal Treasury should be deposited in these private banks, to be there managed and controlled by the directors of those banks, subject only to the supervision of the Federal Reserve Board. It is a very doubtful question. It is a question that ought to be thought over and studied, and not acted upon hastily. But I repeat that if we kill the Subtreasuries, and do not by express authority of law confer upon the Federal reserve banks powers not now possessed by them, we shall be left with important duties to be done, and no agency to perform them; and that we can not afford to do.

The next thing to which I call attention is the fallacy of asserting that we can wipe out the Subtreasuries and save the amount of money the Subtreasuries now cost. Mr. President, these Subtreasuries are not duplicating work that is being done by any other agency of the Government. The work which they perform must be performed by somebody. If you wipe out the Subtreasury and put the duties that it now performs upon some other instrumentality, that other instrumentality must be paid. You can not get the business done for nothing. Somebody has to be paid for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will turn to page 31 of the bill which is under consideration, he will find this provision in it:

> The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the work performed by the Subtreasuries and report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries may be transferred to other offices of the Government or banks of the Federal Reserve System, and for the purpose of this investigation the representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency shall have access to all necessary books and other records of the Government.

The Senate has put this provision in this bill, and I hope it will stay in the bill. I agree with the Senator that this is a rather sudden movement to abolish these Subtreasuries. I have no personal interest in any one of them. None of them is in my State. But inasmuch as we have given authority to the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate this matter, I think the Senator will agree with me that we might well allow it to remain as it is until we get a report from that bureau.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I had in mind the particular clause to which he has referred, and had the leaf turned down in the bill; but I am very glad to have the Senator call attention to it, because he does it in his usual forcible and terse manner.

I was saying, however, that this work must be done, and if done it must be paid for. I call the attention of the Senators, and particularly of the Senator from Minnesota, to this fact: If we turn it over to the private banks, the Federal reserve banks, we can not compel them to do this work for nothing. They will be entitled to compensation for it. They are private institutions; and even if we were to pass a law adding this to their duties without compensation it would, nevertheless, add to their expense, and the expense ultimately would come out of the people of the country. So that if you have work that is being properly done, and is not a duplication of work being done by some other department of the Government, there is no occasion to change from the instrumentality employed to another in the interest of economy, unless you can do it in a cheaper way through some other instrumentality.

Nobody will argue that these Federal Subtreasuries have been extravagantly managed or run. I call attention again to this letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

> It will be seen that the cost of maintaining these institutions, treating the Subtreasury system as a whole, is only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, approximately, on the total transactions involved—an insignificant sum compared with business done, the important service performed, and the conveniences afforded the public.

In that connection I also call attention to a letter written by Mr. W. D. Vandiver, who is the subtreasurer at St. Louis, but who is a man who has given this and similar questions great study, in which he goes further than the Secretary of the Treasury. He states:

> Secretary McAdoo calls attention to the fact that the handling of four and a half billions of dollars of Government funds by the Subtreasuries last year cost only about one one-hundredth of 1 per cent.
> Does the Federal reserve bank, or any other bank in the country, operate on as small percentage as that?
> Furthermore, the Secretary counts only the funds handled for the Treasurer's general account. If he had included all the transactions of the Subtreasuries, the total amount handled would have reached a still larger figure—probably the stupendous sum of six and a half billions.

This letter—which I am going to ask leave to insert in the RECORD, so that Senators may read it; I do that particularly because the hour has come, I think, when we are to take up some other matter by common agreement—throws a flood of light upon this question, and I hope Senators will read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES SUBTREASURY,
St. Louis, Mo., January 23, 1917.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I see from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that some people still have very erroneous ideas about the Subtreasuries.

My old friend Senator NELSON, of Minnesota, says that they are useless and that they can be abolished without any inconvenience to the Government merely by turning over their work to the Federal reserve banks.

It is surprising that so able and experienced a public official as he would imagine that these banks and the Subtreasuries are duplicating each other's work. It is still more surprising that anyone at all acquainted with Government business would imagine that any private corporation is going to take over a large amount of Government work and do it for nothing.

Congress might abolish the Subtreasuries, but could not abolish the work. It is Government work, just as much as that done by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving or any other branch of public service. Furthermore, it is done by as faithful and efficient a corps of expert clerks and tellers as can be found in any bank in the country.

There are plenty of patriots willing to do this work for Uncle Sam, but I don't know any of them that are willing to do it for nothing.

There are two questions involved in this discussion:

1. Should the Government relinquish control of its own currency and coin—seven hundred and thirty-four millions of it held in Subtreasuries—and turn it over to private corporations? Secretary McAdoo says no. I think he is right. The principle involved answers the question at once. Secretary McAdoo has investigated the matter and knows the working of the system. His letter of December 16 to the Speaker of the House of Representatives is a very clear statement of the case. If you have not read this letter, I hope you will call for it and bring it to the attention of other Senators.

2. Would it save the Government any expense to have the work done in the reserve banks?

On this question the Secretary only raises a doubt, but does not discuss the question, leaving it for future investigation.

I have given the question careful attention and am fully convinced that it would not save the Government a single cent, but would cost many thousand dollars more than it now costs.

Secretary McAdoo calls attention to the fact that the handling of four and a half billions of dollars of Government funds by the Subtreasuries last year cost only about one hundredth of 1 per cent.

Does the Federal reserve bank or any other bank in the country operate on as small percentage as that?

Furthermore, the Secretary counts only the funds handled for the Treasurer's general account. If he had included all the transactions of the Subtreasuries the total amount handled would have reached a still larger figure—probably the stupendous sum of six and a half billions.

I venture the statement that no other institution in America ever handled that volume of actual cash, currency and coin, without an expense of at least 50 per cent more than the Subtreasuries cost.

To put a plain, practical point to it, right here in St. Louis the Federal reserve bank last year handled less cash than this office did, and only about twice the total volume of business of all kinds, and yet had an expense account of nearly four times the total cost of the Subtreasury.

In fact, the bank has three officers that draw more in salaries than the total appropriation for this office, with 26 faithful and efficient employees. This is not said in criticism of the bank, but a just and fair comparison will show that the Subtreasury is a much more economically conducted institution than any bank.

The work of this office has increased fully 25 per cent since the reserve banks were started, and the clerks and tellers are working overtime every day and have not had a dollar added to the appropriation for salaries.

To abolish the Subtreasuries and employ the banks to do the work, instead of saving expense, would add many thousand dollars to the cost of getting this work done, besides turning the Government funds over to private corporations.

These facts ought to be better understood in both Houses of Congress.

Yours, very truly, W. D. VANDIVER.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in conclusion I call attention to the fact that the Senator from Minnesota is mistaken in reading a newspaper article to the effect that the subtreasurers give no bonds. The bonds run as high as $500,000 for a single treasurer, that at New York, and I ask leave to print a list of the bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Bonds of the subtreasurers of the United States.

San Francisco	$350,000
Chicago	450,000
New Orleans	300,000
Baltimore	250,000
Boston	250,000
St. Louis	300,000
New York	500,000
Cincinnati	250,000
Philadelphia	300,000

Mr. REED. I also desire to print as a part of my remarks, so that it may appear in the RECORD, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of December 16 to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and in view of the fact that the hour has arrived for transacting other business, I conclude my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 16, 1916.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, it is provided that—

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued the reasons in full for such continuance; also, if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to the Federal reserve banks."

In accordance with the above authorization and direction, I have the honor to report as follows:

There are nine Subtreasuries located, respectively, in the cities of Boston, Mass.; New York City, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; New Orleans, La.; and San Francisco, Cal. The Subtreasury system was authorized by the act of August 6, 1846, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof.

The duties and functions of the Subtreasuries may be stated generally as follows:

Issue of gold order certificates on gold deposits.
Acceptance of gold coins for exchange.
Acceptance of standard silver dollars for exchange.
Acceptance of fractional silver for redemption.
Acceptance of minor coins for redemption.
Acceptance of United States notes for redemption.
Acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption.
Acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption.
Cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency.
Laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process.
Exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be requested.
Remittances from United States depositary banks of their surplus deposits of internal-revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds.
Deposits of postal savings funds direct.
Deposits of money-order funds direct and indirect.
Deposits of post-office funds direct and indirect.
Deposits on account of 5 per cent redemption fund.
Deposits of interest on public deposits.
Deposits of funds belonging to disbursing officers.
Funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat.
Encashment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at a Subtreasury for payment.
The payment of United States coupons and interest checks.

In addition to the foregoing the Subtreasuries have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of the gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks.

The receiving of deposits and payment of checks has been assumed to a large extent since the establishment of the Federal Reserve System by the designation of Federal reserve banks as Government depositaries in those Subtreasury cities where Federal reserve banks are located. Federal reserve banks are located in the Subtreasury cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco. New Orleans has a branch of the Federal reserve bank of Atlanta, while neither Baltimore nor Cincinnati has a Federal reserve bank.

It has always been deemed advisable to deposit the gold reserve and trust funds of the Government in several places, rather than to concentrate them in one, for reasons of security as well as public convenience.

The Federal reserve act does not expressly, or by implication, contemplate the substitution of the Federal reserve banks for the Subtreasuries, nor would it, in my opinion, be possible, or advisable if possible, to attempt such a substitution. While the general or current fund of the Treasury may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be deposited in the Federal reserve banks, the reserve and trust funds of the Government, viz, gold coin and bullion and silver dollars held in trust by the Government against outstanding gold and silver certificates and greenbacks, are not included in this authorization. The gold coin and bullion held against gold certificates, amounting at present to more than $2,000,000,000, a considerable part of which is deposited in the Subtreasuries, should not, in my opinion, be committed to the custody of any private corporations (and the Federal reserve banks are private corporations), but should be in the physical control of the Government itself. This applies with equal force to the $152,979,025 of gold reserve held against United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890 and the silver dollars held against silver certificates. If, however, it should be deemed advisable to transfer the custody of these trust funds to Federal reserve banks or to any other private corporation or corporations, it would be necessary to make a special deposit of such funds in vaults especially constructed for the purpose and to maintain a Federal guard, or some form of adequate Government control over such vaults.

Since the Federal reserve banks are, as I have already stated, private corporations, just as are the national banks, the duty of providing the necessary storage vaults and of assuming the custody and control of these trust funds could not be imposed upon the Federal reserve banks by legislation. It could only be accomplished by negotiation and agreement, involving, necessarily, compensation for the service performed. Whether or not arrangements could be made with Federal reserve banks, or any private institutions, for the custody of these trust funds upon terms and under conditions satisfactory to the Government, and at a saving in cost over the Subtreasury methods, while, at the same time, providing all of the conveniences in handling these funds and the same measure of security as now afforded by the Subtreasury system, is a matter upon which I am unable to express an opinion. I desire to repeat, however, my earnest conviction that it would be unwise to commit the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions. The custody of these trust funds, their maintenance, direction, control, and administration are distinctly a governmental function, and should be exercised only by the Government.

Aside from the custody of the trust funds of the Government, the Subtreasuries perform a highly useful service to the public in making exchanges of money, supplying money and coin where needed, and reducing the cost and expense of shipments of money and coin from a common center. It is necessary to maintain the facilities and conveniences provided by the Subtreasuries in the large centers of business in the country, such as the cities in which the Subtreasuries are now located. Even if these particular functions could be transferred to Federal reserve banks where they exist, the services rendered by the substituted agencies would have to be compensated for. This would involve expense to the Government, while, at the same time, the facilities provided might not be as thorough and satisfactory as those supplied by the Subtreasuries themselves.

It has been suggested that the Subtreasuries are merely conveniences and not necessities, and that their duties might be performed entirely by the Treasury in Washington. This is in a sense true, but the cost of handling all the business from a common center, in a country so extensive as the United States, might be greater than the expense of the Subtreasury system, whereas the delays and inconveniences which the public would have to suffer might prove a very serious handicap upon business. It could with equal force be argued that internal-revenue offices throughout the United States could be abolished and all of the work done at Washington, and, in like manner, that many of the customs offices thorughout the country could be abolished and all of the work done from Washington. It is the duty of the Government to provide adequate facilities to meet the convenience and necessities of the public in all parts of the country, and the problem must be considered as a whole and not merely in detail.

It may be possible to reduce the expense of administration of some, or all, of the Subtreasuries. It has been only one year since the Federal reserve banks were made Government depositaries and fiscal agencies, and the current or general funds of the Government in such cities transferred to Federal reserve banks. About that time I appointed an improvement committee (described in my annual report of 1915) to make a careful study of departmental methods in all directions and to report upon the best means of improving the general administration of the Treasury service in its various important branches. The administration of the Subtreasuries is one of the subjects for investigation, and I sincerely hope that within another year it may be found possible to reduce the expense of operating these institutions in some, if not in all, of the cities where they are now located.

The amount of the Government funds in each Subtreasury, the volume of the total transactions annually performed by them, and the cost of maintaining these institutions are set forth in the following table:

Subtreasury.	Government funds held June 30, 1916.	Total transactions, fiscal year 1916.	Expense of maintenance, fiscal year 1916.
Baltimore	$12,573,371.07	$108,215,675.59	$32,749.53
Boston	34,452,695.24	217,020,680.17	52,051.29
Chicago	120,537,589.79	597,365,033.95	84,325.04
Cincinnati	31,388,654.90	105,703,081.30	28,819.14
New Orleans	31,917,751.13	73,990,519.44	27,481.22
New York	329,402,485.45	2,464,715,492.12	187,587.75
Philadelphia	26,183,266.27	473,623,903.18	57,792.76
St. Louis	48,629,847.19	193,370,692.54	37,385.63
San Francisco	99,088,010.01	291,058,033.53	25,812.27
Total	734,173,671.05	4,525,063,111.82	535,004.63

It will be seen that the cost of maintaining these institutions, treating the Subtreasury system as a whole, is only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, approximately, on the total transactions involved—an insignificant sum compared with business done, the important service performed, and the conveniences afforded to the public. Aside from New York, the cost of maintaining the other eight Subtreasuries is $347,416.88, which is a comparatively small sum to pay for the service and convenience they provide. If these institutions were abolished, the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed.

I am of the opinion that it would be inadvisable at this time to abolish all, or any, of the Subtreasuries. It is an important matter and should be considered deliberately. With the test of further experience it may develop that the functions of the Subtreasuries, or some of them, may be transferred to Washington, or to some other agency, but action should not be taken hastily or inadvisedly.

I regret exceedingly that my necessary absence from Washington, in connection with the establishment of the Federal farm-loan banks and other public business, made it impossible for me to submit this report to the Congress at an earlier date.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter on this matter, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD, inasmuch as I am prevented from addressing the Senate on the subject. It is a letter from the subtreasurer at San Francisco.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SUBTREASURER AT SAN FRANCISCO.

All of the Subtreasury employees, except the assistant treasurers, are strictly under civil service; no one can be appointed to this service except eligibles who have passed civil-service examinations and are certified by the Civil Service Commission, and then the selection must be made from one of the three highest on the list. Nearly every employee of the San Francisco Subtreasury has held his position for from 15 to 25 years. Recently an employee resigned. All the employees under him were promoted one position, and the Civil Service Commission held a competitive examination for the vacant clerkship thus created. Over 50 bright young bank clerks took this examination, which was a very rigid one. About a dozen passed, and the three highest were certified as eligibles, and from their number one was chosen.

The duties and functions of the Subtreasuries are generally as follows: The payment of United States coupons and interest checks; payment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at a Subtreasury for payment; deposits of postal savings funds direct and money-order funds, direct and indirect; deposit of Post Office funds, direct and indirect; deposit on account of 5 per cent redemption fund; deposit of funds belonging to disbursing officers; deposit of interest on public deposits; funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat; exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be required; remittances from United States depositary banks of their surplus deposits, of internal-revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds; laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process; cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency; acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption; issue of gold-order certificates on gold deposits; acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption; acceptance of gold coins for exchange; acceptance of United States notes for redemption; acceptance of minor coins for redemption; acceptance of fractional silver for redemption.

In addition to the above, the Treasury Department often assigns special duties to the Subtreasuries. For instance, the assistant treasurer at San Francisco represented the Comptroller of the Currency during the money stringency incident to the war in 1914, and was chairman of the committee that passed on the securities offered for emergency currency.

Thirty million dollars was handled by the San Francisco Subtreasury on these emergency-currency loans without a single loss. The interest collected would pay the expenses of the San Francisco Subtreasury for many years. This entire work was done without cost to the Government.

The San Francisco Subtreasury has now in process of collection about 200 promissory notes of American refugees living in this vicinity and who were in Europe at the beginning of the war, and who under an act of Congress were loaned funds with which to purchase their return passage. These collections are also made without expense to the Government.

Panama Canal tolls are paid at this Subtreasury, and the owner of a vessel may pay the toll the day the ship is ready to enter the canal and have the canal advised by wire, which is a very great convenience to commerce.

Just now, as extra service, the San Francisco Subtreasury is receiving subscriptions for stock in the Federal land bank to be located at Berkeley.

It is true that the Federal reserve banks could discharge most of the duties of the Subtreasuries, but they could not do this work without employing, in addition to their regular force, employees with similar skill and experience to the force that is now doing the Subtreasury work; and the Federal reserve banks would have to pay as high, if not higher, salaries for this service than is now being paid by the Government.

I dislike to make personal comparison, but in support of this contention a comparison might be made between the salaries of the governors of the Federal reserve banks and those of the assistant treasurers, or between the salaries of the cashiers of the Federal reserve banks and those of the cashiers of the Subtreasuries, and I venture to suggest that it will be found that the principal employees of the Federal reserve banks are receiving more than twice as much salary as the principal employees of the Subtreasuries.

The Federal reserve banks are private corporations like national banks, and the duties of the Subtreasuries could not be imposed upon the Federal reserve banks without compensating them for such service.

It might not be necessary or wise to indefinitely continue all of the Subtreasuries where even most of the business could be taken over by Federal reserve banks, but such a change can not be accomplished except by proper legislation and negotiation and agreement regarding compensation to be paid the Federal reserve banks for the service; it certainly would be most unwise to abruptly stop all the business of the Subtreasuries by failure to make provision for their maintenance, as was recently attempted in Congress, without transferring their functions by proper legislation.

The total amount of Government funds held by the nine Subtreasuries on June 30, 1916, was $700,000,000 and the total transactions of these nine Subtreasuries during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was nearly $5,000,000,000, and at a total expense of about $500,000, or approximately one one-hundredth of 1 per cent.

The San Francisco Subtreasury is third in number in assets, ranking next to New York and Chicago, third in the list of business transactions, and yet ninth, or the least of all the Subtreasuries, in expense of maintenance.

This Subtreasury at the end of the last fiscal year carried about $100,000,000 in funds, its transactions during the last fiscal year amounted to nearly $300,000,000 and its cost of maintenance was, in round numbers, $25,000.

And, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, if these Subtreasuries were abolished the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed, or if arrangement was made with the Federal reserve banks to do the work they would necessarily have to be compensated.

In addition to the foregoing duties and functions of the Subtreasuries, they have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; much vault space is required for the deposit of these trust funds, especially the silver dollars; the new San Francisco Subtreasury Building, which has only been completed a year and a half, cost approximately a half million of dollars, and its vaults, among the largest and best in the country, cost $130,000; besides the large amount of gold coin stored in these vaults, they contain over $25,000,000 in silver dollars, nearly all of which are held as trust funds against outstanding silver certificates.

None of the Federal reserve banks have the facilities for taking over and storing these trust funds, and if they provide such facilities they would necessarily have to make a considerable charge for the service and safe-keeping of these prodigious sums of money.

The present Secretary of the Treasury and other Secretaries of the Treasury have always been very much opposed to committing the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions; the custody of these trust funds, their maintenance, direction, control, and administration are distinctly a governmental function and according to the contentions of the Treasury Department should be exercised only by the Government.

A large portion of the money in the Subtreasuries are trust funds which really do not belong to the Government and can not be used by the Government because they are held as security for the payment of gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; hence it is a fallacy to argue that this money should be put in circulation through the medium of the Federal reserve banks. Any agency that holds this trust fund must hold it as a trust fund or, in other words, must hold it in storage.

San Francisco is a city of commerce and the Subtreasury here performs a highly useful service in furnishing merchants full weight gold coin for shipment to the Orient to settle trade balance; during the past six months $15,000,000 in gold coin has been withdrawn from the San Francisco Subtreasury for shipment across the Pacific.

Aside from the convenience to the business public provided by the Subtreasuries, in the large centers of business in the country, it is not considered good business safety to have all the money held by the Treasury Department, about $2,000,000,000, nearly all of which is trust funds stored in one place, and if it was that place would be a shining mark for the first enemy that undertook the invasion of the country.

In conclusion it is not claimed that the Subtreasuries are necessities but they are conveniences, and it is the duty of the Government to provide adequate facilities to meet the convenience of the public in all parts of the country. San Francisco is 3,000 miles from the Treasury at Washington, and if the Subtreasuries are to be reduced from nine to three, as recently suggested in Congress, shall the San Francisco Subtreasury, which is the only Subtreasury west of the Mississippi River and which not only serves that part of the country but Alaska, the Philippine and the Hawaiian Islands, be one of the three?

Respectfully,

WM. F. MCGEE,
Assistant Treasurer, United States.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 9, 1917.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I reserve the right to ask for a separate vote, when the bill goes into the Senate, upon the committee amendment on page 117 of the bill, and to ask for a division of that question, and for a separate vote upon the paragraph in the middle of page 117.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask that the appropriation bill may be laid aside, as the hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, when we are to go on with the calendar under Rule VIII in pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that will be done. The Chair hears no objection.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived the Senate under the unanimous-consent agreement of yesterday will proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2406) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2730) to fix the compensation of assistant appraisers of merchandise, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 7) providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 20) for appointment of a committee of Senators to examine into questions relating to the acquisition or construction of manufacturing plants to supply the Army and Navy with arms, armament, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 3551) relating to the procedure in the United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1107) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the Secretary call only the Senate bills. That is the understanding under the unanimous consent. The unanimous agreement was confined to Senate bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Senate bills and House pension bills.

Mr. OVERMAN. And House pension bills.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not here at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, being detained in committee at the time. I had no notice of it at all, except——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment, please. There are certain House bills here that are quite as important as the Senate bills. There is one here with reference to the establishment of a juvenile court in the District.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me, I want to say that it was concluded by the Senate that Senate bills now ought to be acted upon, because they would have to go to the House of Representatives. The House bills have already passed that body, and they are here; and we can have another session by unanimous consent and take up the House bills on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I shall not interfere with the action under the Senate rule; but I confess I do not quite see the force of an agreement of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

Mr. SMOOT. It was virtually agreed, I will say to the Senator, that we shall hold a night session and take up the calendar at an early day.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was not agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it was virtually agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of Senate bill 1107 has been read. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over because there is a House bill to which there will be no objection later on, I think.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a very long bill and a long report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 645) to provide for the closing of barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) relative to leasing of Osage oil lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 1100) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1096) to provide for carrying into effect of the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3927) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Busch, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. All these bills involving individual claims should go over. There is a general bill covering all of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. GRONNA. There are many bills not included in the bill the Senator from Utah refers to. There are some claims bills reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and other bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to bills relating to the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4418) to establish game sanctuaries in national forests, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4884) for the relief of the estate of A. B. Denton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are a number of bills on the calendar reported from the Post Office Committee for private claims. I will state that there is a general bill, an omnibus bill, on that subject covering all these claims. So these individual bills may be passed over when reached.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not put them under Rule IX?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; we do not want to do that.

The bill (S. 1065) to provide for summer-residence homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WORKS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

HOME FOR LEPERS.

The bill (S. 4086) to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to make an appeal for the present consideration of this bill. If any Senator will investigate the matter, he will see the need of an establishment such as is contemplated in the bill, and I hope it will not be objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. It is one of the most important bills and is really one of the most pathetic we have before the Senate. There are a number of poor lepers in the country now who have no homes and who are suffering, and suffering terribly. The States can not provide places for them. There are only a very few of these poor people, and I hope no objection will be made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I want it distinctly understood that if the bill is going to lead to a discussion that will take the balance of the day I shall object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will not take more than five minutes.

Mr. RANSDELL. It will take only a few minutes. I will agree to withdraw it in 20 minutes if it takes that much time. I can expedite the matter by moving to substitue House bill 193, which passed the House and which differs in only one very slight particular.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement that can not be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; as an amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 193) to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to select and obtain, by purchase or otherwise, a site suitable for the establishment of a home for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy, to be administered by the United States Public Health Service; and either the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury any abandoned military, naval, or other reservation suitable for the purpose, or as much thereof as may be necessary, with all buildings and improvements thereon, to be used for the purpose of said home.

SEC. 2. That there shall be received into said home, under regulations prepared by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, any person afflicted with leprosy who presents himself or herself for care, detention, and treatment, or who may be apprehended under authority of the United States quarantine acts, or any person afflicted with leprosy duly consigned to said home by the proper health authorities of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized, upon request of said authorities, to send for any person afflicted with leprosy within their respective jurisdictions, and to convey said person to such home for detention and treatment, and when the transportation of any such person is undertaken for the protection of the public health the expense of such removal shall be paid from funds set aside for the maintenance of said home.

SEC. 3. That regulations shall be prepared by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the government and administration of said home and for the apprehension, detention, treatment, and release of all persons who are inmates thereof.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause the erection upon such site of suitable and necessary buildings for the purposes of this act at a cost not to exceed the sum herein appropriated for such purpose.

SEC. 5. That when any commissioned or other officer of the Public Health Service is detailed for duty at the home herein provided for he shall receive, in addition to the pay and allowances of his grade, one-half the pay of said grade and such allowances as may be provided by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the preparation of said home, including the erection of necessary buildings, the maintenance of the patients, pay and maintenance of necessary officers and employees, until June 30, 1917.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana what is the essential difference between the House bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. In the House bill the doctors who are sent to wait on these leper patients are given additional pay amounting to one-half the pay of their regular grade and in the Senate bill the pay was to be one-quarter additional. I am frank to say I am trying to get the House bill passed, because I fear if we send it back we may not get it passed. I want to have the House bill passed, and that is the only particular in which they differ.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is inconsequential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Louisiana is reporting this bill out of the committee?

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill. I move that the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill, and we report that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The House bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4086, to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States, will be indefinitely postponed, without objection.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read in full.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made and the bill will go over.

OPIUM TRADE.

The bill (S. 3526) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was read April 24, 1916, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Finance to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That on and after the 1st day of March, 1915, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away opium, anhalonium (mescale or muscale buttons, peliote), or coca leaves, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on: Provided, That the office, or if none, then the residence of any person shall be considered for the purposes of this act to be his place of business. At the time of such registry and on or before the 1st day of July annually thereafter every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs shall pay to the said collector a special tax at the rate of $1 per annum: Provided, That no employee of any person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs, acting within the scope of his employment, shall be required to register or to pay the special tax provided by this section: Provided further, That the person who employs him shall have registered and paid the special tax as required by this section: Provided further, That officers of the United States Government who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for the various departments of the Army and Navy, the Public Health Service, and for Government hospitals and prisons, and officers of any State Government, or of any county or municipality therein, who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons, and officials of any Territory or insular possession or the District of Columbia or of the United States who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for hospitals or prisons therein shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

"It shall be unlawful for any person required to register under the terms of this act to produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs without having registered and paid the special tax provided for in this section.

"That the word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person; and all provisions of existing law relating to special taxes, so far as applicable, including the provisions of section 3240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby extended to the special tax herein imposed.

"That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying the provisions of this act into effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes,' approved December 17, 1914."

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5206) for the relief of mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. OLIVER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say that there is a tremendous demand for the passage of this bill all over the country. A great many doctors are very much interested in it, and I believe it ought to be passed.

Mr. WORKS. I wish to say that I shall have to take up considerable time in the discussion of the bill when it comes up for consideration. It is not intended to take up bills of that kind now, I believe.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator if he wishes to discuss it?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. All right, I will not insist on taking it up if the Senator wishes to discuss it.

The bill (S. 5854) to provide for the erection, furnishing, and equipping of a building in the city of Washington, D. C., for the Department of Justice was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5344) for the regulation of the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

JACOB NICE.

The bill (S. 1579) to correct the military record of Jacob Nice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Jacob Nice, who was a private of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States, as a private of said company and regiment, on the 17th day of August, 1865: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of Jacob Nice."

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The bill (S. 5437) to further amend the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, to extend the same to elections for United States Senators and for presidential electors, and to regulate, control, and limit campaign and other contributions and expenditures in connection with such elections, and to define corrupt practices in connection therewith, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN L. O'MARA.

The bill (S. 698) to correct the military record of John L. O'Mara and grant him an honorable discharge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws, John L. O'Mara, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on August 16, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or back pension shall accrue or become payable by virtue of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John L. O'Mara."

PRACTICE OF PODIATRY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, there has been passed over a bill which I think was passed over under a misapprehension. It is a very important bill and probably is not understood. I refer to Senate bill 5344, for the regulation of the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia. Its purpose is the regulation of the practice of chiropodists in this District. In most of the States of the Union chiropodists, before they may practice their calling, have to secure a license and to be examined as to their qualifications. In this city, however, anyone may become a chiropodist and, as a result, sometimes blood poisoning occurs from their practice. It seems to me it is very important that this calling should be regulated. This bill is approved by the physicians of the District of Columbia and is very highly recommended. The bill proposes to make regulations requiring an examination of anyone desiring to become a chiropodist. On examination it will be found that the States of Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Vermont, Michigan, Colorado, California, and other States have legislation upon this same line. It does seem to me that the District of Columbia should have such a law. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to again recurring to the bill and that it may be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland for the consideration of the bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5344) for the regulation of the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS BLANCHETTE.

The bill (S. 5504) for the relief of Louis Blanchette, alias Lewis Blanchard, alias Louis White, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws, Louis Blanchette, alias Lewis Blanchard, alias Louis White, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company F, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, on the 1st day of February, 1864: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or back pension shall accrue or become payable by virtue of this act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let that bill go over.

Mr. GRONNA. This bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and it has been unanimously reported.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I withdraw my objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INJURIES TO UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 2846) to provide compensation for accidental injuries to employees of the United States resulting in disability or death was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, we have already passed a bill covering that general subject, and while I do not think it is as good a bill as this, I think it is not worth while to undertake to consider this bill. I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

COMMAND OF THE AIR (S. DOC. NO. 687).

The next business in order was Senate resolution 210, which had been reported by Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Printing, on June 3, 1916, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] on May 9, 1916, entitled "Command of the Air," an address by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, United States Navy, retired, before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, be printed as a Senate document.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXHIBIT OF STATE RESOURCES IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The bill (S. 3444) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

MANUSCRIPT OF CHARLES CHAILLÉ-LONG.

The bill (S. 2292) to acquire the manuscript of Charles Chaillé-Long, containing an account of the unveiling of the McClellan statue, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that for the purpose of acquiring the manuscript prepared by Charles Chaillé-Long, containing an account of the proceedings at the unveiling of the statue of the late Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan, to appropriate $800, to be paid to Charles Chaillé-Long upon the certificate of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress that the manuscript and account of proceedings is satisfactory.

Mr. JONES. For how much does that provide?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that the bill provides for an appropriation of $800.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think, with the permission of the Senate, I may say that before any expenditure can be made the manuscript must be approved by the chairman of the Committee on the Library.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN B. WALKER.

The bill (S. 5974) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $5,000 to Ellen B. Walker, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., as full compensation for the death of her husband, Thomas A. Walker, who, while in the employ of the United States Government, in its Bureau of Indian Affairs, lost his life by the collapse of a water-tower structure at Paguate, N. Mex., on July 17, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARCUS P. NORTON'S PATENTS.

The bill (S. 391) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand stamp patents, or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does this bill refer to the old Norton claims against the Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been before the committee for 13 years to my knowledge.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know that; and it has been reported favorably time and time again.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read, so that we may see just what it provides.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and is hereby, vested with full jurisdiction to adjudicate and determine the claims of the heirs and legal representatives of Marcus P. Norton and his assignees arising from the use by the Post Office Department of inventions and devices for the postmarking of mail packages and the cancellation of postage stamps at one and the same blow, described and claimed in letters patent granted and issued upon the petition of Marcus P. Norton, and numbered and dated as follows in the record of the United States Patent Office: Twenty-five thousand and thirty-six, August 9, 1859; 37175, December 16, 1862; 38175, April 14, 1863, and all extensions and reissues thereof which said use was approved and authorized by joint resolution of Congress, July 14, 1870, and otherwise.

SEC. 2. That the said claim is hereby relieved from any bar of the statute of limitations, and suits shall be instituted hereunder within 90 days after the passage of this act upon the petition of George C. Lewis, agent, trustee, and attorney in fact for all parties of interest in said claim or the claim shall be forever barred.

SEC. 3. That in the trial of the said cause the court shall receive in evidence any testimony and exhibits which have heretofore been placed in evidence in any United States court in suits based upon the said patents or any of them; and that from such judgment or decree as may be rendered either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to examine the bill for a moment. In the meantime the Secretary can proceed with the next bill on the calendar, and if I have no objection to Senate bill 391 I will so indicate.

The Secretary proceeded to state the next Senate bill on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw my objection, Mr. President, to Senate bill 391.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3351) to amend the act of August 30, 1890, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 865) granting to the State of Arizona public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALBERT L. REAM.

The bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Albert L. Ream, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill has once been passed and been reconsidered; that the preamble has been agreed to; that the amendment on line 5, page 2, has been agreed to; and that there is an amendment now pending offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to amend the amendment proposed by the committee by striking out "$3,650" and inserting in lieu thereof "$8,650."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read. Most of us have no knowledge as to what it is.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I will explain the matter to the Senate. This claim has been pending here for three years. The case is about as follows: I have known all his life the claimant. He is a young man of high character, and was employed as foreman in connection with the work on the Panama Canal. He was receiving from the Government $112 a month. He met with an accident, which has totally disabled him. His age at that time was 37 years. The report of the Government officials, which has been made part of the report of the committee, shows that he was engaged in the line of his duty at the time of the accident, and that he was without fault. The evidence is conclusive that he is permanently injured.

The report of the committee allowing him $3,650 was made before the passage of the workingmen's compensation law, which was enacted some time ago. In accordance with the provisions of that act, he would have been entitled to receive one-half of his yearly salary, which would have amounted to about $56 per month. The certificates of his physicians are here; the statements of his neighbors are here; my own statement is incorporated in the report; and I felt that under the circumstances the amount allowed to a man of his age for total disability would not receive countenance in a court of justice and should not receive the indorsement of the Senate. I have asked that this young man be allowed $8,650. As I have said, this is a case of total disability, and I might add that the man has a wife, who is an invalid, dependent upon him. Altogether the circumstances of the case are such as to appeal very strongly to the humanity of this body as well as to its sense of justice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the law provides that in case of such an accident occurring at the Panama Canal the employee shall receive one year's salary.

Mr. KERN. He has received the benefits of that act, but the amount was used up in doctors' bills and expenses. The man is entirely helpless.

Mr. SMOOT. I am saying what the law provides.

Mr. KERN. That law has ceased so far as he is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is mistaken as to the law not being in operation.

Mr. KERN. The law is not in operation as to him. The advice of counsel, as is stated here, is that that law is not applicable to this case.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that there have been many, many cases of accidents in the Panama Canal, in connection with which the Committee on Claims have allowed an amount equal to a year's salary to the person injured. The cases that come here, however, are cases that happened before the law was passed. Since the passage of the law the only reason for such a claim coming to the Senate is because of the fact that the allowance of a year's wage is not considered sufficient.

Mr. KERN. Of course, in this case that allowance was used up at once. The man is a total wreck and received the injury while in the line of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. If we pass this bill, Mr. President, it will only create a precedent under which every man who is hurt or injured in any way at the Panama Canal and is not satisfied with the present law will get some Senator or Representative to introduce a bill for his relief.

Mr. KERN. This accident, as I understand, occurred in 1912, and the man has been waiting four years for some relief.

Mr. SMOOT. The law to which I have referred was passed before 1912, as I remember. I think it was passed in 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Why not pass the bill for the amount that the committee allowed, $3,650?

Mr. BRYAN. I will say this in justification of the committee: Of course, this man received his year's salary; that is $1,350. The committee came to the conclusion that in view of the severe injury they would allow $5,000, subtracting from that the amount he had already received, making the amount $3,650. If that is done, he will have received $5,000.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, it is a question for the Senate. It is a matter of humanity as well as of justice. It has been certified here that the injury was received by this man in the line of duty. He was not at fault. He received this terrible injury, and, to use his own language, which is made part of the report of the committee:

> The justice of my claim I leave to the decision of those through whom this claim will be presented to the United States Government for adjustment. At the same time I retain implicit confidence in my Government to answer an appeal based upon an accident, which, like a bolt out of a clear sky, deprived me of a perfect physical being by dashing me into a future of weakness and pain.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I know that there have been accidents in our arsenals in which the eyes of persons have been destroyed, and I know that there have been arms blown off, and an accident at the Panama Canal in which the lower part of the body was crushed; but I do not know of a claim that has been paid by the Government of the United States exceeding $5,000. I know it is an unpleasant thing to discuss a case like this, but I am only saying that that has been the past practice of the Senate. Of course, if the Senate wants to pay this man $8,650 besides the $1,400 that has already been paid him, it is creating a new precedent. If the Senate wants to establish that precedent, it can do so.

Mr. KERN. Since that time there has been a congressional expression of opinion in the law we passed as to what employees ought to receive. There had been none up to that time.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, he has already received his one year's pay.

Mr. KERN. Oh, he received those wages, I suppose.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, under the law as passed what would he have received?

Mr. SMOOT. Fourteen hundred dollars; and he has received that.

Mr. KERN. He would have received $50 a month as long as he lived. His expectancy of life is now 25 years.

Mr. HUGHES. Under the employers' liability law that we recently passed?

Mr. KERN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. What are the Senator's figures based on?

Mr. KERN. My figures were $8,650.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was to be paid in cash, in order to discount it.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you arrive at that by a calculation of what he would receive if he were subject to the provisions of the law we passed?

Mr. OVERMAN. If it is paid in cash, it ought to be discounted according to the mortality table.

Mr. HUGHES. I am asking the Senator if the figures in his amendment are based on a calculation?

Mr. KERN. No; they are not based on a calculation, further than this——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The agreement was that we should consider unobjected bills. This bill is arresting the whole calendar. I have no objection to it myself—none whatever—but the debate is holding up the entire calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

M. JONES. What is the amendment?

Mr. KERN. $8,650 instead of $3,650.

Mr. BRYAN. Let us take a vote on it. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the amendment?

Mr. OLIVER. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "$3,650" and in lieu thereof to insert "$8,650."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. HUGHES. I call for a division.

The amendment was agreed to, on a division.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

RANK AND PAY OF PETTY OFFICERS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 368, Senate bill 833, a bill to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade. I was not in the Chamber when that bill came up. I want to say to Senators, in asking this privilege, that it affects 56 noncommissioned men. I hope the Senator from Georgia will listen before he shakes his head. There may be other shaking before we get through with this calendar on other bills, if a bill is objected to simply because we have no knowledge of it and refuse to allow a Senator to state what the bill is.

We have already passed a law which advances all of the commissioned officers who have had 30 years of service in the United States Army. This bill seeks to advance to the next higher grade—which, with a noncommissioned officer, would be corporal—those who have had service in the Civil War and also 30 years of service in the Army of the United States, and to advance their pay. There are 56 of these men still living, so that the entire expense will amount to about $5,000. The passage of the bill is recommended by the department, and the full report shows that it ought to pass. I hope Senators will not interpose an objection to extending the same justice to those in the ranks that has been done to the commissioned officers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is not the Senator mistaken when he says that all of the commissioned officers he describes have been advanced this much? The daughter of a brigadier general who lives in Atlanta called on me to-day and urged me to have her father advanced one degree. His service began in 1855, and he served all through the war, and served over 30 years in the Regular Army.

Mr. McCUMBER. This bill relates to the Navy rather than to the Regular Army. I was mistaken in speaking of the Regular Army.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I told this lady that I did not think it ought to be done; that I could not do it, though her father is one of my fellow citizens, and one of my friends. I thought he ought to stand under the law as it was passed when he entered the service and when he served.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if the Senator will read the report, he will find that a law has been passed affecting all the commissioned officers in the Navy. A year ago there were 115 that would have been affected by this bill. The department now reports that there are 56 that will be affected. They reported that about $10,000 would cover the expense a year ago. The department, in recommending the passage of the bill, reports that $5,000 will cover the entire expense. Inasmuch as it has been applied to all of the commissioned officers, and there are but 56 of the noncommissioned officers and petty officers still remaining, it seems to me there can be no objection to this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Did I understand the Senator to say that this bill only applied to the noncommissioned officers?

Mr. LODGE. That is all—noncommissioned officers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. The commissioned officers have already been advanced.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have the commissioned officers been given what you are asking for the noncommissioned officers?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; they have been.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The bill ought to be passed, then. I hope the consideration of the bill will not be objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I objected to it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. OLIVER. Regular order!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if it is true, Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the floor. I think I can finish what I want to say. If all of the commissioned officers in that class have been advanced, I do not like to object to the noncommissioned officers being advanced. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from North Dakota whether the commissioned officers have been advanced, as a matter of fact?

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall have to get the report. The report states that they have been advanced.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the Secretary to read the bill, beginning with line 10—the proviso. It is not printed here in the bill I have. It is a defective print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That if such advanced rank or rating shall not carry with it an increase of pay, or if there be no higher enlisted grade to which advancement may be made as herein authorized, then and in such cases said men shall receive an increase of pay of 20 per cent over and above the retired pay actually received by them, respectively, at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question. During what period of time must these people have served? Have they served since the Civil War?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand it is 30 years.

Mr. BRYAN. Have they served 30 years since the war?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that would be, I suppose, including the war service.

Mr. BRYAN. But as the bill is drawn they need not have served except prior to April 9, 1865. That would be one proposition. Of course if they had served 30 years since the war in the Navy or Marine Corps, they would have a stronger claim, it seems to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course that would mean since the close of the war. I call attention to the following language on page 2 of the report:

It may be added that all of the enlisted men to be benefited by this measure have had at least 30 years' service, for enlisted men are not placed on the retired list unless they have 30 or more years of service.

Mr. BRYAN. That probably explains it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered to have been reported to the Senate, engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No, Mr. President; I do not want to agree to the passage of the bill. I am opposed to all that character of legislation, but I will not interpose an objection to its being considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and subject to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have again recognized the principle of Civil War service. These men are retired at an advanced rank because of their service during the Civil War.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement only Senate bills are to be considered this afternoon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that only Senate bills and House pension bills are in order under the unanimous-consent agreement that has been entered into.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am very much interested in the House bills reported from the Post Office Committee, but under the agreement they can not be considered.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION, LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 4811) to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, how much of an appropriation does this bill carry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It carries $50,000.

Mr. JONES. I simply desire to say that the Committee on Fisheries, at a meeting a few days ago, reported a House bill, and the amount in each case was reduced to $40,000. I propose an amendment, therefore, making the amount $40,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that an omnibus fish-hatchery bill?

Mr. JONES. The bill we acted on the other day is. This bill is not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of this bill, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

FISH HATCHERY, DELAWARE.

The bill (S. 4970) to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Delaware was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a bill of the same kind. There is an omnibus bill dealing with this whole subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5395) to repeal sections 2588, 2589, and 2590 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6204) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3773) to cancel the allotment of Davie Skootah, on the Lummi Reservation, Wash., and reallot the lands included therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask what was done with Order of Business 586?

SEVERAL SENATORS. That is a House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, no action is in order on House bills.

The bill (S. 5335) conferring upon tribes of Indians the right to recall their agents or superintendents was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OLIVER C. RICE.

The bill (S. 4915) for the relief of Oliver C. Rice was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Is there no proviso to that bill as there usually is in other bills of that character?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; there is not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES B. SMOCK.

The bill (S. 4620) to remove the charge of desertion against James B. Smock was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to it, unless somebody shows that he was not a deserter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. The bill has been reported with a committee amendment proposing to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James B. Smock, who was a private of Company H, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 27th day of November, 1862.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator can show me that this man was not a deserter, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CURTIS. I say, I hope the Senator will not object to this bill. It has the usual proviso, and the bill is strongly recommended by the department. The evidence shows that he went home sick and supposed he had a discharge. He had his certificate, and it was considered as a discharge.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator assures me that he was not a deserter, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask if the usual proviso is attached to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is none.

Mr. CURTIS. I will move as an amendment the usual proviso—that no back pay or anything of that kind shall be allowed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be put in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 5, insert:

Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue after the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVER C. RICE.

Mr. OLIVER. I notice that the bill just preceding was passed over for the same reason. I suggest that it be taken up and passed with the same proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill which was just passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4915) for the relief of Oliver C. Rice, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Oliver C. Rice shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a drummer of Company D, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, from the 7th day of August, 1861, to the 7th day of March, 1862, and to have been discharged honorably as a drummer of said company and regiment on the date last mentioned.

Mr. WATSON. I ask that the usual proviso be added to the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add in line 11 the following proviso:

Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SITE OF POWER PLANT.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) relative to the construction on the site selected of the central heating, lighting, and power plant authorized by the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

EDWARD L. KEYES.

The bill (S. 6698) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, in his discretion, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Edward L. Keyes, late second lieutenant, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, to be a second lieutenant of Cavalry in the United States Army, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with the rank of second lieutenant as of date of the approval of this act: Provided, That no pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind for any cause prior to the passage of this act shall accrue or be paid to said Edward L. Keyes by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARE OF INDIGENT TUBERCULOUS PERSONS.

The bill (S. 5885) to provide Federal aid in caring for indigent tuberculous persons, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WORKS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

THOMAS A. DICKS.

The bill (S. 4857) granting an extension of patent to Thomas A. Dicks was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE.

The bill (S. 2512) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of West Virginia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the southern district of West Virginia by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That no vacancy in the office of the existing district judge of said southern district of West Virginia shall be filled by appointment, and in case of such vacancy there shall be thereafter one district judge only for said district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CLUB.

The bill (S. 6178) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Congressional Club in Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator from Washington will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. JONES. I do not see why this property should be exempt from taxation.

Mr. POMERENE. Much may be said perhaps on both sides for that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. POMERENE. I intend to make my statement in any event.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The property of the Daughters of the American Revolution has been exempted from taxation. This property is owned by this club, which is composed of the wives and daughters of Senators and Representatives, and I think it is performing a very great service in this city. I feel that it would not be inconsistent with the public good to have the bill passed. Every reason can be urged for it that has been urged in behalf of the exemption of the property of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. JONES. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

AMENDMENT OF INDIAN APPROPRIATION ACT.

The bill (S. 6715) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

CHURCH PROPERTY AT KEYSER, W. VA.

The bill (S. 1989) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church, Keyser, W. Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to make an appeal in behalf of this bill. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is absent on account of illness, is very much interested in it. I do not think there is any valid objection to it, and I hope it will be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. I think this bill was considered along with the others at the time the omnibus claims bill was pending. My recollection is that it was considered by the committee at that time and was not reported favorably.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is now reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] favorably without an amendment. It was introduced by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and, as I said, the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is very greatly interested in it, and has requested me to aid in securing its passage.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have not had a chance to examine it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. On behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] I desire to join in the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that consideration be given to the bill at this time. The Senator from West Virginia is unable to be present and is very much interested in the passage of the bill. By direction of the Committee on Claims I reported the bill in August of last year. It has been pending on the calendar since that time. I ask that the bill be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas how it happened that this claim was not included in the omnibus claims bill? Has it been before the Court of Claims?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I see no finding of the court. I think the Senator is mistaken. I do not think this claim has ever been before the Court of Claims.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no personal recollection about the matter. I am basing my statement upon the report which accompanies the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. That is the very reason why these claims were required to go to the Court of Claims. Here we have ex parte statements, statements by the parties interested, without an opportunity on the part of the Government to meet the claim. All similar claims have been required to go to the Court of Claims. It would not be in order now, because the Crawford amendment was adopted to prohibit any more being referred.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I have refreshed somewhat my recollection concerning the claim by referring to the report. It appears that the case was referred to the Court of Claims and the evidence submitted; but under the provision which the Senator from Florida has in mind the court has not determined the matter. The committee, however, considered the evidence in this case and instructed me to report the bill, and of that committee the Senator from Florida is the chairman.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; and that is the reason why I am so careful about it. I should like to see everybody treated alike. No claim has been allowed without a reference to the Court of Claims. Congress two years ago decided that they would not refer any more claims to the Court of Claims. This is a claim for damages done during the Civil War.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is $1,500 in each case. It is a very small amount compared to bills we are constantly passing.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not going to object to the bill being considered. Still, I want to register my objection to the bill. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is a member of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Florida if this is not a case similar to many claims for the destruction of church property which the committee acted upon and reported in the omnibus bill?

Mr. BRYAN. It is; it is the same class of claim, and we have refused to consider them at all. They have gone to the Court of Claims. Of course, this claim could not be referred to that court now, in view of the Crawford amendment. It is not in the same situation with all the other claims that were submitted to the Court of Claims and favorably adjudicated. They were all included, as the Senator knows, in an omnibus bill. Of course, this claim existed at that time. It was not placed in that omnibus bill. The Senator from Michigan is very familiar with the work that was done upon that bill. I can not remember each of the individual claims, but there must have been some good reason why the committee did not put the claims of these two churches into that omnibus bill. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] was a member of the subcommittee that examined into it. My purpose here is to prevent the passage of one claim which does not stand any higher than many others the payment of which has been refused by Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator object, then, to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I do not like to be placed in that attitude; I am opposed to the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It occurs to me that it is rather an unusual proceeding. There were many of these claims——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the Senator's permission, the Chair understands that there is no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the claim has not been referred to the Court of Claims, I will object.

Mr. ROBINSON. The claim has been referred to the Court of Claims and the evidence submitted and the case was ready for determination, but before the case was determined under the Crawford amendment in the omnibus bill which passed here a year or two ago the court held that it had no jurisdiction to determine the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I object. There are a large number of claims in exactly the same condition, and they ought all to be treated alike.

Mr. GALLINGER. There will be a great many other objections in the next few weeks if this is objected to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not take that view of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will take it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Here is the situation. Many of these claims were reported by the Committee on Claims. We passed upon all the bills that we thought were proper at that time and put them in an omnibus bill. This bill was not presented or, if it was, it was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a statement? The omnibus bill——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state it.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the consideration of this bill has been objected to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say a word.

Mr. OLIVER. We are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will withdraw the objection temporarily that I may have an opportunity to say something to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think the Senator has the right to withdraw an objection temporarily for the purpose of making a speech. We are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, and we want to get through with the calendar. I am perfectly willing to have the bill considered, and I hope that all bills will be considered as we go along, but to have general debate for half an hour as to whether or not we will take up a bill is not in accordance with the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is disposed to agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania; but, I dare say, a certain amount of discussion will be tolerated for the purpose of enlightening the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I wanted to say was this: The House has passed a bill authorizing the Court of Claims to take up all the cases that were cut off and dispose of them. We have reported that bill favorably, and it is now pending on our calendar. If we can dispose of it, this case will be then at once disposed of by the Court of Claims, just as the others. I am just anxious to help treat all alike; that is all. With that statement, if the Senator from New Hampshire feels that I ought not to object to his pressing this bill, I will not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word, Mr. President. The report says this bill was sent to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found "that the church, as a church, was loyal to the Government." In that respect it is different from a good many others passed here. The report states that from about April 1, 1862, to the 28th of November, 1864, military forces of the United States held possession of said church building and continued such possession and destroyed the property. I do not think a technicality ought to lie against the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I care nothing about the amount involved in the passage of the bill, considered by itself. The finding, however, that the church, as a church, was loyal is the finding in every case before the court. The members might be disloyal, yet the church, made up of membership, was loyal. But I am going to end all this discussion by objecting, because we certainly ought to have the finding of the Court of Claims here before the bill is passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

DR. B. R. HUNTINGTON.

The bill (S. 2461) for the reinstatement of Dr. Bert R. Huntington in the Medical Corps of the United States Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Bert R. Huntington, late a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps, United States Army, to the grade of first lieutenant, Medical Corps, United States Army: Provided, That prior to such appointment the said Bert R. Huntington shall pass, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War, the professional and physical examinations required of candidates for appointment as first lieutenants in the Medical Corps of the Army: And provided further, That in computing the said Bert R. Huntington's term of service necessary for promotion to the grade of captain he shall be given credit for the full term of his prior service as a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill authorizing the appointment of Bert R. Huntington as first lieutenant, Medical Corps, United States Army.

USE OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

The bill (S. 5800) to provide for the use of public-school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

Mr. HOLLIS. I appeal to the Senator not to object. This bill does not fasten on the District of Columbia the use of public-school buildings as community forums. That is already authorized under existing law, but certain questions have arisen as to the order of procedure and the disposal of conflicting claims. This bill is for the purpose of allowing the inhabitants who live near the school building to take charge and do the business in an orderly and proper way. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am very anxious to examine the bill before it is passed.

Mr. HOLLIS. The bill was carefully examined by the District Committee and the report was unanimous. There was no objection to it. I hope it will be allowed to pass.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

Mr. NELSON. I am opposed to the principle of the bill, and so I shall have to insist on my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

LOAN OF RIFLES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to grant the free use, for military drill, of rifles to any duly accredited camps of the Sons of Veterans Reserve was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized to grant to duly accredited camps of the Sons of Veterans Reserve the free use for military drill of any rifles in the possession of the War Department. The Secretary of War shall arrange for the loan of such rifles in quantities sufficient to meet the requirements for military drill of the certified membership of such camps of said Sons of Veterans Reserve as make application, without cost, other than transportation charges, to said organizations, but under such suitable bond, executed by a responsible bonding company, for the care and return of said equipment as the Secretary of War may reasonably require: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall be furnished with a list of the certified membership of such camps of said Sons of Veterans Reserve as make application and the number attending military drills, which drills shall be held at least once a month; and if it shall appear that the number attending such drills falls below 50 per cent of the number of certified members of such camps of the Sons of Veterans Reserve, the rifles loaned shall be returned to the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to grant the free use, for military drill, of rifles to duly accredited camps of the Sons of Veterans Reserve."

WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The bill (S. 4500) to incorporate the World's Sunday School Association was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 25, after the words "body incorporate," to insert "of the District of Columbia."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to disagree to that amendment. The very worthy gentlemen who desire this incorporation are very anxious to secure a national charter. There is no danger of it being abused, and I think they should be granted that privilege. They want to do work all over the world and they think that the granting of such a charter will give them greater prestige.

Mr. OVERMAN. We can not grant national charters.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall not insist upon disagreeing to the amendment if the Senate thinks a national charter should not be granted, but these gentlemen are exceedingly anxious——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Judiciary Committee has considered the matter and has decided that we can not do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill has been reported favorably.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been reported favorably, but with amendments.

Mr. OLIVER. The committee have reported that this should be a corporation merely of the District of Columbia, but these gentlemen are exceedingly anxious to become a corporation of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. We can not grant them such a charter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I remember that we took the matter up, and we did the best we could for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 5, after line 3, to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the said association may, if it be considered advisable or advantageous in the carrying on of the work of the association in the different countries of the world, divide itself into two or more divisions, whose names, powers, and limitations shall be declared and defined by the by-laws, and each of said divisions, when so defined and organized, shall have all the powers herein granted, but shall be subject to the laws and rules of the countries in which they have jurisdiction as fully as if they were independent corporations, provided that no such division shall have the right or power to create any obligation to be borne or assumed by the association as a whole or any other division thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6 (5), page 5, line 18, before the words "of the United States," to strike out "constitution" and to insert "Constitution and laws," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6 (5). That the association may adopt and change at will such rules and by-laws as it deems proper for its government and control not in conflict with the charter, the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Province and Territories of the Dominion of Canada, or any State, country, Territory, Province, or district in which such rule or by-law is sought to be enforced, and shall provide the time of meetings, the number necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and how votes of members shall be cast, and such other matters as may be found necessary and proper for the carrying out of the objects of the association.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8 (7), on page 6, line 8, after the words "city of," to strike out "New York, in the State of New York, one of the United States of America. Meetings," and insert "Washington, D. C., but meetings," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8 (7). That the association's principal office shall be in the city of Washington, D. C., but meetings of the association may be held at any place selected by the association, and may be called in the manner authorized by the by-laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to know why it is necessary to incorporate a society of this kind as a corporation of the District of Columbia? There is a general law in the District of Columbia——

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not report the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment—under which an incorporation may be had. What is desired, as I understand, by this association is that it shall be incorporated by an act of Congress. There is nothing to be gained by having it incorporated as a corporation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN. They wanted an act of Congress, and we did not think that it would do any harm if they should be created a corporation of the District of Columbia. We discussed that matter. I did not report the bill, but we saw no objection to the passage of this bill as amended if they desired to make their society a corporation of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what reason is there why they can not be incorporated under the laws of the United States?

Mr. OVERMAN. We have uniformly refused to incorporate societies under the laws of the United States and to give them national charters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have heretofore incorporated societies by general act of Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; but, of course, the necessary Federal foundation must exist. I have not examined this bill so as to determine that matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, these gentlemen, who seem to be scattered over the world, can come here and incorporate in the District of Columbia on the payment of $1. I think a charter from the District of Columbia would amount to nothing. They want a broader charter; they want a national recognition; and I think they ought to have it, for they are engaged in a great work.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, I move to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall object until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] who had charge of this bill comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, I am willing to have the bill passed as it stands, but I really think that national recognition should be accorded to these gentlemen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6823) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make further survey of the Pecos River and Valley in Texas and New Mexico to determine the feasibility and cost of an irrigation project thereon was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, that bill carries no appropriation. It merely authorizes a survey and examination, and I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that it go over for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

STOCK-WATERING PRIVILEGES ON FLATHEAD RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 6716) to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what has become of Order of Business No. 724?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a House bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are we not considering bills on the calendar?

Mr. GALLINGER. We are considering Senate bills only.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope this bill may be considered. It merely allows the city of Salida, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for park purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill to which the Senator refers is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. The Secretary will state the next Senate bill on the calendar.

The SECRETARY. The bill (S. 6716) to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to say that that bill is recommended by the Interior Department; in fact, it was drawn by the department. I merely wish to state the nature of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that I received a letter a few days ago in relation to the bill, and I have not had time even to look at the report. If the Senator will allow the bill to go over, I do not think I will have any objection to it later.

Mr. MYERS. I think the Senator ought to give as much credence to my words as to those of the writer of the letter. I will ask the Senator from whom was the letter?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the letter I received was from a citizen of Montana, but I really have forgotten his name. It only recently reached me, and I have not had time to examine it.

Mr. MYERS. I merely want to state—and I will only take a moment or two—that this bill is for the benefit of a large number of people on the Flathead Reservation. Along the Flathead River there is some rough, unbroken land which has never been homesteaded. The settlers back of that land have let stock run across the land to the river. This bill merely provides that when that rough, broken land may be patented it shall be patented subject to the rights of the stock owners back of it to let their stock run across the beaten path to the water.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill may be all right, and I have no objection to it from what I know personally, but I received a letter regarding it; I have not given the letter consideration, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. I think this will be the last chance for it to be passed, and I regret that it can not be passed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

A. J. LOWARY.

The bill (S. 6737) for the relief of A. J. Lowary was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to A. J. Lowary $98.75, that sum having been paid into the Treasury in exchange for a lease of certain land which thereafter was never enjoyed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 6692) to amend section 6 of an act to expedite the settlement of title to lands in the State of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1864, being an act entitled "An act to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," being chapter 194 of volume 13 of the Statutes at Large, page 334, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of California to cause all the private-land claims finally confirmed to be accurately surveyed and plats thereof to be made whenever requested by the claimants: Provided, That each claimant requesting a survey and plat shall first deposit with the Secretary of the Interior a sufficient sum of money to pay the expenses of such survey and plat, and of the publication required by the first section of this act, and the money so deposited shall be available for expenditure by the surveyor general in payment of the expenses of such survey and plat, including all the expenses incident thereto, and of the required publication. Whenever the survey and plat requested shall have been completed and forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as required by this act, the surveyor general shall state an account showing the exact cost of the survey, plat, and publication, and any excess deposited over such cost shall be returned to the claimant."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not know that I properly understood the reading of the bill, but as I caught it there is a provision to direct the surveyor general of the State of California to perform some act. I will ask the Secretary to read again that portion of the bill.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. JONES. I think that bill had better go over.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I inform the Senator from Washington that that bill is highly recommended by the Department of the Interior, and I have here a letter written by the Secretary of the Interior asking that it be passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. JONES. If the Senator sees no objection to it, I will not object. I did not notice that the Senator was present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that in that bill Congress is directing the surveyor general of California to survey private lands. What have we got to do with the surveyor general of a State?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the surveyor general of the State is a Federal officer, and the bill provides that the claimant must deposit the expense of making the survey.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all right, if he is a Government officer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. CARTER.

The bill (S. 6783) for the relief of William F. Carter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to validate the homestead entry of William F. Carter, of Lothair, Mont., for the south half of section 20, township 31 north, range 4 east, Montana meridian, in the State of Montana, made under the act of February 19, 1909 (35 U. S. Stat. L., 639), subject to future compliance with the law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS WITHDRAWN UNDER RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (S. 6829) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain briefly what is the necessity for that legislation?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that bill was drawn by the Interior Department, was sent to me, and introduced by request. Not having originated it, I am not as familiar with it as if I had originated it myself. As I understand, however, there are certain public lands which have been withdrawn from reclamation projects for administrative purposes, and this bill provides simply for their disposition.

Mr. JONES. It refers to improvements made on the lands. I was going to ask the Senator whether or not this bill applies to those tracts which may have been reserved in the different projects upon which the Reclamation Service have placed their headquarters and other buildings?

Mr. MYERS. That is the exact application of it.

Mr. JONES. And they do not need them any longer, and therefore want to dispose of them?

Mr. MYERS. That is the exact application. They want some law enacted whereby they may be allowed to dispose of them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the language of this bill is altogether too broad. It might seem to imply that the Reclamation Service might go out and utilize the fund ad libitum for the purpose of improving lands under a project, and then put those lands up at public auction for sale. The real purpose of the bill is simply to permit the sale of those lands no longer needed upon which buildings have been constructed for administrative purposes and where possibly a garden may have been cultivated in connection with them. I move to amend by inserting after the word "fund," in line 10, on page 1, the words "for administration or other like purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "fund," it is proposed to insert "for administration or other like purposes."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think that is a good amendment. It merely carries out and makes plain the idea the bill was designed to carry out; but I will ask my colleague if the word he suggested was not "administrative"?

Mr. WALSH. No; "administration."

Mr. MYERS. I thought the Senator suggested "administrative."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA W. THRAILKILL.

The bill (S. 6671) to validate the homestead entries of Anna W. Thrailkill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that Anna W. Thrailkill's homestead entries 023955 and 035325, Great Falls series, covering the southeast quarter of section 24 and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 25 of township 23 north, range 9 east, and lot 3 of section 19 of township 23 north, range 10 east, of the Montana meridian, in Montana, be validated and permitted to remain intact in the same manner as though she had not, before applying therefor, perfected title to a tract of 307.77 acres under the desert-land laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIBLEY ISLAND, MISSOURI RIVER.

The bill (S. 6730) revoking authority to lease Sibley Island, in the Missouri River, to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal the provision contained in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes" (29 Stat. L., pp. 413–435), reading as follows:

That the city of Bismarck, in the State of North Dakota, by and through its regular city council, shall have authority to use, upon lease from the Government by the Secretary of the Interior, Sibley Island, an island in the Missouri River near said city of Bismarck, for a public park: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the felling of timber on said island for sale or consumption, nor shall any timber be cut save for the purpose of improving or beautifying the grounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLEVELAND L. SHORT.

The bill (S. 3735) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, lines 5 and 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cleveland L. Short the sum of $2,000 in full payment for permanent injury caused by his being pushed from a moving train on the Panama Railroad, Canal Zone; and the said sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think that requires a little explanation. The bill reads that Cleveland L. Short received an injury by being pushed from a moving train. It does not say who pushed him from the moving train.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I can explain that to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. This is the case of an employee on the Panama Canal work who was in the habit of going to his place of employment by train. The train usually slowed up at the point where he usually got off to enable all the workmen whose daily work was at that point to get off there. On the occasion when this accident happened to Mr. Short, however, the train did not slow up; he was afraid to jump; but other persons behind him pushed him so that he lost his balance and fell off the train. His foot was crushed, and his leg amputated above the ankle.

Now, under the Panama Canal law, as this was a good surgical job and healed in 45 days, this man received only $227 compensation, which is a manifestly inadequate sum in view of his being so seriously crippled for the remainder of his life.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report recites that he was "either pushed or fell from a train." Is it possible that we have any law that gives compensation to a man in the Government service who happens to fall from a moving train? Can that be possible?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There is a per diem allowance, I believe, for men in hospitals who are injured in the course of their work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but this was not in the course of his work.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Well, that is what he got. He got $227 as an allowance, as I understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that was more than he deserved.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, Mr. President, then he can return to his work, and perhaps he is working now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. He can return to some kind of work; but it is perfectly obvious that being without one leg, he is crippled for life, and very seriously crippled for life.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what work he is doing now?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not know; no.

Mr. SMOOT. Is he in the employment of the Government?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That was a good many years ago—1909, if I remember correctly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN G. YOUNG.

The bill (S. 3731) for the relief of John G. Young was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John G. Young $719 for salary as deputy collector in the sixth district of North Carolina for the months of January, February, March, April, May, June, July, and August, in the year 1879.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY CO. ET AL.

The bill (S. 6949) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LEE of Maryland subsequently said: Mr. President, I am going to ask the Senator from Georgia, who objected before he had heard the purport of Senate bill 6949, to withdraw his objection, so that I can briefly tell the Senate that it refers the cases of three railroads to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 748. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, this bill is for the purpose of consolidating three bills and referring to the Court of Claims claims for the relief of three railroads which were held by the Post Office Department to be land-aided railroads, and which in that way lost 20 per cent reduction of what was due them under certain contracts for carrying the mails. It was found afterwards by investigation and adjudication that they were not land-aided railroads, and thus in the Court of Claims they have already recovered for the length of time that they could recover money due them on these contracts, so far as limitations would permit.

This present bill consolidates three bills, one of which was introduced in behalf of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., one for the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., and one for the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., so as to permit them to go back to the Court of Claims, and if they can prove that they carried this mail matter for additional time claimed, to be compensated regardless of limitations. This relief was considered just by the committee; and similar action has been taken in quite a number of other cases which are mentioned in the report. So that this relief is consistent with previous legislation and with what seems right under the report of the Postmaster General to permit these railroads to go to the Court of Claims for an adjudication regardless of limitations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this claim is made after a six-year limitation, is it not?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. They were not permitted to bring suit during that time.

Mr. SMOOT. Are not the claims always paid by the department when they are just, and have they not six years in which to make those claims?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The department was in error, as a matter of fact and of law. It held that these railways were land-aided roads. For a period of years the department so held.

Mr. SMOOT. Did they hold it after the six-year limit had passed or before?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. They have been holding it for a longer period than six years, so that when the roads were permitted to go to the Court of Claims they could only sue for the six years which is allowed in the Court of Claims. This bill permits them to go back again, and, if they can prove that they carried this mail under contract, and that the Post Office Department improperly deducted 20 per cent from their contract on this erroneous hypothesis, they can recover that 20 per cent equitably due.

Mr. SMOOT. It is rather a doubtful measure, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., in accordance with the decisions of said court in causes Nos. 28272, 29636, and 30159, and the claims of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., in accordance with the decision of said court in cause No. 29875, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the claim of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., in accordance with the decision of said court in cause No. 24409: Provided, That the court in rendering judgment shall enforce the provisions of section 3477, Revised Statutes of the United States, prohibiting the assignment of claims against the United States, and shall render judgment for said claimants only for the amounts in which they, and not any predecessors of theirs, were underpaid, it being the purpose of this act to waive only the statute of limitations, and not any other legal defense the United States may have to said claims: Provided further, That the same right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as exists in other cases in the general jurisdiction of said court is hereby granted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, OWATONNA, MINN.

The bill (S. 1724) to reimburse the First National Bank of Owatonna, Minn., for revenue stamps stolen or lost in transit, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is nearly 6 o'clock. As soon as this bill is passed I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if we had not better adjourn. There is no doubt but that we will hold a night session in the near future to take up the calendar.

Mr. NELSON. This bill involves only $42.

Mr. STONE. There is not anything on the calendar in which I am interested.

Mr. NELSON. Let this bill be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the First National Bank of Owatonna, Minn., $42, to reimburse the bank for that amount of revenue stamps stolen or lost while in transit from St. Paul, Minn., to Owatonna, Minn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT OR NEAR BELTON, MONT.

The bill (S. 784) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Belton, Mont., for hotel purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "meridian," to strike out "described as follows: Beginning at the point where the north line of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 36 intersects the southerly right-of-way line of the Great Northern Railway Co., which right-of-way line is distant 100 feet southeasterly from, measured at right angles to, the center line of the said company's railway as now located and constructed; thence southeasterly at right angles to said right-of-way line 330 feet; thence southwesterly at right angles, parallel with and distant 330 feet southeasterly from said right-of-way line 660 feet; thence northwesterly at right angles 165 feet; thence southwesterly at right angles, parallel with and distant 165 feet southeasterly from said right-of-way line to the west line of said section 36; thence north along said section line to the said right-of-way line; thence northeasterly along said right-of-way line to the place of beginning; containing about 8 acres," and to insert: "Within the following-described area: Beginning at a point on the southerly line of the right of way of the Great Northern Railway Co., 100 feet southerly from and at right angles to the center line of the main track of said railway at a point in said center line 484 feet easterly from its intersection with the west line of said section 36; thence southerly at right angles to said center line 330 feet, this course following, approximately, the line of the westerly fence constructed by the United States Forestry Service in 1909; thence easterly at right angles to the last-described course 672 feet; thence northerly at right angles to the last-described course to the said southerly line of right of way, this course following, approximately, the line of the easterly fence constructed by the United States Forestry Service in 1909; thence westerly along the said southerly line of the right of way of the Great Northern Railway to the place of beginning, excepting therefrom that portion within lot 8, containing 5 acres, more or less."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if it is not usual to lease these lands in the national parks for a period of years instead of to sell outright the title to them?

Mr. WALSH. In reply to the Senator from Washington I will say that this land is not within the park; it is outside.

Mr. JONES. Oh, this land is outside of the park?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Is it in a forest reserve?

Mr. WALSH. It is in a national forest.

Mr. JONES. Is it not customary to lease even lands in a national forest instead of selling them? I thought we were trying to get private holdings out of the national forests instead of encouraging them.

Mr. WALSH. My recollection is that we have a provision of law authorizing the sale of small areas within the forest reserves. This is only 5 acres.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that we have had up here several times the proposition of submitting to the Secretary the question of making leases of small tracts of land within the national forests. I am not sure that we have even passed that legislation. But this is the first instance I recall of our permitting the sale to private parties of public lands in these forest reserves. I wanted to ask the Senator whether he thought this was really a wise thing to do?

Mr. WALSH. I can not think otherwise. Let me say to the Senator that the land in question is immediately adjacent to the right of way of the Great Northern Railroad Co. It is the station at which passengers get off to enter the Glacier National Park by the western entrance, and the buildings will really become a part of the railroad property, just the same as yards would be or anything of that kind.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think it would be to the advantage of the Government to have land so advantageously located as that leased from time to time?

Mr. WALSH. The bill provides, as the Senator will see, that the hotel is to be operated under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the Government selling any land. That is the only way in which a State can get any taxes whatever. It seems to me, in view of that fact, that this is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. JONES. Of course, Mr. President, I should be in favor of that as a general policy; but I do not like to say at one place, "You can sell," and at another place "You can not."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe in getting the land in private ownership wherever you can. I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. JONES. I doubt very much the propriety of our doing that; but I am not going to object myself to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS DAHUFF.

The bill (S. 6862) for the relief of Amos Dahuff was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Amos Dahuff, who was captain of Company H, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as of said organization on the 19th day of February, 1865, provided that no back pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the approval of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 26, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 25, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, whose glory shines round about us on land and sea and sky and whose goodness pours itself out in a thousand blessings new every morning and fresh every evening, we thank Thee for the æsthetic sense which enables us to appreciate the beauties thus displayed and for the gratitude which inspires worship and praise. And we pray that we may walk worthy of such preferment in the wake of Him who taught us nobility of soul and the splendor of a perfect character, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—PUBLIC-BUILDING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I move a change of reference of the bill H. R. 20410, to create a temporary building commission for the purpose of investigating all the public-building needs and methods of the United States in order to recommend a public-building policy, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida, by authority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, moves that the bill H. R. 20410 be rereferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House what is the scope of the bill that is proposed to be referred from the Appropriations Committee to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The title expresses it very fully, I think.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations because it carries an appropriation of $50,000, and the practice of the Speaker has been, when Members insist on referring bills carrying appropriations to committees that have not jurisdiction of such bills, to refer them to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? All of the public-building bills, of whatsoever kind, carry authorization of appropriations. That is all this seeks to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different thing. Authorization and appropriation are two different things.

Mr. BURNETT. The form of the bill as introduced is for a direct appropriation. Would that oust the jurisdiction of the committee because somebody has put it in the form of an appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it does.

Mr. LANGLEY. The subject matter of the bill is properly one that should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. Committees not authorized to make appropriations begin to crop out in that regard. However, this committee never did.

Mr. BURNETT. Some other committees are doing it now.

The SPEAKER. I know. That is what the Chair is talking about. Finally the Chair announced that he intended to refer bills that carried appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations. If he did not do that, every committee in the House would be making appropriations.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to rerefer this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

EXAMINATIONS ON ELLIS ISLAND.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization from the further consideration of the present resolution, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 370.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be directed to send to the House of Representatives a copy of the examinations into conditions on Ellis Island, taken by and before Byron H. Uhl, assistant commissioner of immigration, at Ellis Island July 25, 26, and 27, 1916.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that is not a preferred matter. It does not come within the rule.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. BURNETT. That it is not preferred. The gentleman can not call it up at this time without unanimous consent.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman means it is not privileged?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. This resolution was introduced on September 8.

Mr. BENNET. It is strictly privileged under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. This resolution has been privileged for some time.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee be discharged from further consideration of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, did the Speaker overrule the point of order that it is not privileged? The rule is that the House can call for information in the possession of the head of a department. This resolution requests a copy of certain documents, or examination, taken at Ellis Island, which does not appear on the face of the resolution to be in the possession of the Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be directed to send to the House of Representatives a copy of the examinations into conditions on Ellis Island, taken by and before Byron H. Uhl, assistant commissioner of immigration, at Ellis Island July 25, 26, and 27, 1916.

It was introduced on September 8 and referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this requires certain labor on the part of the head of the department. It is not calling for information in his possession but for a copy of certain testimony.

Mr. BENNET. It is calling for nothing but information. It is calling for facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not call for facts. It asks the Secretary to make a copy of something and send it to the House.

Mr. BENNET. It always requires labor to comply with a request of the House of Representatives. All that is necessary to do is to make a copy of that and send it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. On the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is not a matter of information that is asked for, but it is a matter of the copying of the contents of a lot of papers. A matter of information would be answered by giving the information that the Secretary of Labor has, but instead of asking for the information that the Secretary of Labor has it is asking for the copy of a whole lot of papers without indicating how much, or what they relate to, or anything of the kind, except investigation at Ellis Island.

I do not think it is within the rule in respect to calling for information, because it may involve an immense amount of work in making copies of papers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He might be entitled to call for documents in possession of the department, but under the guise of a privileged resolution to compel the Secretary to furnish him with a copy of a deposition is something new in our practice. It is not calling for a document in the possession of the Secretary, but merely for a copy of such a document. We may have the right to call for documents, but I know of no right, as a matter of privilege here, to compel department heads to copy and send them to us.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is queer to me for the gentleman from New York to make the argument that the House can not call for a copy of a document in the possession of a department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It can call for the document itself.

Mr. MANN. There is no right to insist that the original document be sent to the House. We call for information; that is, for a copy of the document on file. That is what we usually call for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a document at all. The gentleman has not called for information. He has called for a copy of something.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that this resolution comes within the rule. The point of order is sustained.

PERMISSION TO A COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the purpose of asking the consent of the House that the Committee on the District of Columbia may sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief summary of the life and death of Joseph Benton Donley, formerly a Representative in the Forty-first Congress, who died at his home at Waynesburg, Pa., on January 23 last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOSEPH BENTON DONLEY.

The summary of the life and death of former Representative Donley is as follows:

Joseph Benton Donley, a former Representative from Pennsylvania; born in Mount Morris, Pa., October 10, 1838; completed preparatory studies; was graduated from Waynesburg College in 1859; entered the Union Army as a captain of the Eighty-third Illinois Infantry in 1862; was graduated from the law university of Albany, N. Y., in May, 1866, and admitted to the bar; elected as a Republican to the Forty-first Congress (March 4, 1869–March 3, 1871); after retirement from Congress practiced law in Waynesburg, Pa. He died at his home in Waynesburg Wednesday, January 23, 1917.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 14th day of February, 1917, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill H. R. 20079, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20079, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20079, the river and harbor bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterway from Mississippi River to Bayou Teche, La.: For improvement in accordance with the smaller project submitted in House Document No. 610, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $100,000: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purpose of this improvement: Provided further, That this provision shall not be construed as authorizing the purchase or improvement of any privately owned canals or waterways.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, on page 22, line 2, after the word "lands," by inserting the words "and easements."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bayous Vermilion and Plaquemine Brule, and Mermentau River, La.: For maintenance, including channel, bay, and passes of Bayou Vermilion, and tributaries of Mermentau River, $46,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUPRÉ: On page 22, line 15, after the word "for," insert "continuing improvement and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sabine River, La. and Tex.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 668, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $30,000: Provided, That all sunken logs and timber taken by the United States, after due notice, from said stream, or from any other navigable waters of the United States, in the process of clearing them for navigation, shall become the property of the United States, subject to sale, and that the proceeds of sale shall go to the credit of the improvement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this item on page 23, from line 1 to line 10. It is beyond the scope of privileged matter which can be reported in a river and harbor bill, in that we assume the right of legislation for all navigable streams in addition to the item in the paragraph.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can not understand what the point of order is.

Mr. TREADWAY. The item for taking logs from navigable streams and assuming them to be owned by the Government, irrespective of the fact that it applies solely to that stream, is beyond the scope of privileged matter under a river and harbor bill. The item is not privileged matter in a river and harbor bill, and therefore it is out of order under Rule XI, as to the rights of the River and Harbor Committee.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that this item has the indorsement of the Engineers of the War Department, and has been thoroughly investigated. It is not taking a penny from the Government, but, on the other hand, something will be returned. The logs returned will be of great profit. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order. This will not cost the Government a penny, but will return some money to the Government. It is a limitation solely, and it will save money to the Government.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no proof whatever that the logs in the stream do belong to the Government. We are assuming ownership of them and beginning all kinds of legal entanglements by proposing this legislation and making it general legislation as well as applying to this particular item.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the sentence on line 6 reads, "or from any other navigable waters of the United States." I maintain that is beyond the scope of our rights as a Committee on Rivers and Harbors to retain or report an item of that sort.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of the improvement of rivers and harbors. This provision is clearly in the interest of the improvement of the Sabine River. By reference to the project, if the Chair desires to refer to the project, he will ascertain that the object of the improvement is in the interest of navigation. It is for the improvement of the river by the taking out of logs to increase the navigability of the stream, the logs now obstructing very materially the navigation of that river.

The CHAIRMAN. There can not be any doubt about that, but the question is whether the Government has any right to sell them.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This provides means for the removal of these logs, a little different, to be sure, from the ordinary method we would pursue for taking logs from the stream. But it is intended to accomplish that purpose. It provides, of course, that the logs shall be taken out, that a dredge or boat shall be constructed at the cost mentioned in the report, and that boat having been constructed it shall be utilized in taking out these logs, which shall be condemned and sold by the Government and the proceeds applied to the cost of taking out the logs and the cleaning out of the stream.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Would it not obviate the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts if an amendment was adopted so as to limit the arrangement to that particular stream, and not have it apply to other navigable waters of the United States?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say to the gentleman that if an amendment of that kind is offered I should be disposed to withdraw my point of order—if you make it apply solely to this one stream.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Strike out in line 6, beginning with the word "or," the remainder of the line and the word "States" in line 7.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And also change the word "them" in line 7 to "it."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. And the word "such" should be inserted before the word "sale" in line 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 23, by striking out after the word "stream" in line 6 the words "or from any other navigable waters of the United States"; strike out the word "them" in line 7 and insert "it"; and in line 9, after the first word "of" before the word "sale," insert the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, now that the reason for the point of order that I raised has been removed, I will withdraw it, and I would like to speak to the merits of the item. I move to strike out the item.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to renew the point of order against the paragraph as it stands.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late. There has been discussion on the paragraph.

Mr. ASWELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Does not the point of order come too late?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a paragraph might be subject to a point of order with one wording and not subject to a point of order with another. The fact that the amendment was adopted and certain words stricken from the paragraph might make the remainder of the paragraph subject to a point of order, whereas it was free from it before the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan makes his point of order now after the paragraph has been amended and discussed. It is clear that it comes too late under the rule to make a point of order against the paragraph that has been both amended and discussed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the universal rule is that a point of order may be reserved, but an amendment can not be offered while a point of order is reserved or while a point of order is pending. When the point of order is reserved and withdrawn and an amendment is offered it is too late to make a point of order against the paragraph. It would not be too late to make a point of order against the amendment, but in this case the point of order was made and withdrawn and an amendment was offered amending the paragraph in three places. It is too late to make a point of order against the paragraph; otherwise in the House we might amend a provision after a long debate and then the point of order made against it. The rule of the House is very strict. In the Senate they have a different rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order to the paragraph comes too late.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 23, by striking out the paragraph beginning in line 1 and ending in line 10.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to object to this item; it is a very small item, and I realize that there are several Members of the House who are interested in it. I think, however, the principle involved is serious and objectionable.

The question involved is whether or not the Government can get its pay for the expense of dredging a stream by selling the logs that it takes out of the stream. As we have now removed the feature of general legislation, making it applicable everywhere, the item is not as objectionable as before, but nevertheless we are a great institution to follow precedents. We are establishing a precedent by voting this item into the bill which will come back time and again in the future to plague us if we are going to have future river and harbor legislation.

I wish to call particular attention to this House that it ought not, for the sake of gratifying a local representative that the logs may be gotten out of the stream in his neighborhood, to adopt a form of new legislation relative to river and harbor work. We are taking a very serious legal step. Has this Government any right to assume ownership over these logs? If it is a raft that is floated down stream, somebody owns it and somebody formed it. Somebody owns the adjoining bank where the logs may have fallen into the stream. Who is to determine that we own these logs and can sell them in order to pay the expenses of getting them out or snagging them? Let us go a little easy on this item.

Further than that, let us see what the report of the engineers say in reference to it. I read from the House document, page 668, Sixty-third Congress, second session—

To give a navigable channel for draft of 3 feet for the entire year. The district officer is of opinion that the cost of improvement by any suitable method would be excessive, and he expresses the opinion that this river is not worthy of further improvement at this time. In this opinion the division engineer concurs.

The board states that this river is very greatly obstructed by logs, snags, and so forth—the removal of which would undoubtedly be expensive and out of reasonable proportion to the resulting benefits if the costs were entirely borne by the United States. If, however, the United States can be reimbursed by the sale of logs—

Mark you, that does not say that the engineers say they think it should be reimbursed, but simply—

If, however, the United States can be reimbursed by the sale of logs removed from the bed of the stream in the progress of the improvement, it believes the cost might come within reasonable limits.

Mr. Chairman, certainly that is a very negative approval of the project on the part of the Chief of Engineers, and then the board goes on to recommend this very general legislation which we have just voted out of this item, and then continues to say that with that authority granted them, namely, this general authority, it would recommend that possibly the Government might get even and get its money back under the logging process. Therefore, I maintain that we are entering upon a very doubtful legal step in assuming that we can snag the logs out of the river and that they belong to the Government. They do not belong to the Government.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Just a moment. Further than that, the project is not approved upon its merits by the Board of Engineers. I now yield.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not the custom of the War Department to sell the logs they take out of the streams?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is a legal question whether any such right exists, and I do not think the Government has ever assumed ownership.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not the custom?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not thing it is. It came up in the committee and was discussed there, and so far as I know we did not consider that the logs snagged out of the river belonged to the Government.

Mr. ASWELL. It is my information that it is the custom.

Mr. TREADWAY. It never has so appeared before our committee, and I am sure that it is a grave legal question in the mind of the chairman himself.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman was reading from the report of the Board of Engineers. Does the Board of Engineers recommend this particular project if the logs can be taken out and sold at a profit, or does it recommend the policy of taking the logs out and selling them?

Mr. TREADWAY. It hoped that the Government might give them the authority first, and then it continues, if I may be allowed to quote again in answer to the gentleman's question:

Contingent upon such legislation—

Namely, the legislation to which I have referred and which we have already cut out—the board recommends that an appropriation of $30,000 be made for the construction of a suitable snag boat, and its operation for a period of one year on the Sabine River, and that the work of clearing the river continue thereafter so long as sufficient revenue is derived from the sale of logs to pay for the operation of the plant.

The engineers themselves say very distinctly that the only way the Government can ever get square on the deal is to sell the logs.

The report further says:

While estimates of cost are not ordinarily presented in reports on preliminary examinations, the estimate given by the board is entirely for plant and its operation, no survey or other investigation being required to determine the probable expenditure required.

So far as we can pay for it by selling something that does not belong to us the engineers advocate it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. COX. The paragraph under consideration provides for the improvement of this river by taking the proceeds derived from the sale of logs and applying them to the improvement of the river. My query is this: With the language in the bill just as it is, with these amendments incorporated in it, supposing the Government does not derive enough money with which to pay for this $30,000 snag boat, then will the improvement go on or will it have to stop?

Mr. TREADWAY. The only way it is recommended, the only way the engineers recommend it, is upon the assumption that we are going to get enough money to pay $30,000 for the boat. If they do not, they do not recommend its being done.

Mr. COX. That being true, suppose the provision in the bill remains in the bill and becomes permanent law, then will they have the power and the appropriation to go ahead and make the boat?

Mr. TREADWAY. From my experience in this body, which I admit is somewhat short, I am led to think that if we do not get the $30,000 from the sale of the logs, in the next Congress the advocates of the measure would come back and say, "Why, we have this $30,000 boat down there and it is a shame to let it lie idle, so let us pay the expense of it and get the snags out."

Mr. COX. Then the gentleman thinks the improvement would go ahead?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this is about the only project in this bill in which it is found that the cost of maintenance can probably be obtained through the value of the material recovered in the bottom of the channel. It appears from the report that the upper reaches of the river which it is proposed to improve are unusually filled with sunken logs, saw logs, commercial logs, logs which have a value and which are readily marketable after they are gotten up from the bed of the river. It is well known that logs being sunk in fresh water do not deteriorate, but that no matter how long they remain in the water when taken up they are in the same condition and in as good condition as when they were originally sunken. I think everyone familiar with the subject will corroborate that statement. We have a proposition here for the improvement of a river in which it is recommended that $30,000 be appropriated for the construction of a snag boat. The operation of that boat, the maintenance of the stream which involves the taking up of logs, is to be paid for by the sale of the logs which have a marketable value.

This is an item in the bill which, in accordance with the report of the engineers, is in the interest of economy. It saves to the United States the cost of any maintenance and it is estimated——

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

Mr. SMALL. I am coming to the legal part of it in a moment—it is estimated that the logs recovered from the river will be of sufficient value to pay for the operation of the snag boat and to clear this river of these sunken logs. The report shows that the value of the logs in this stream is estimated to be of the value of a half a million dollars. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the legal right of Congress to appropriate these logs to public use. This is a public highway as to which the United States has the same authority and jurisdiction as the States would have over any public highway. Can it be doubted for a moment that if a person leaves property on a public highway and after due notice fails to remove it that the sovereign has the right to remove it and appropriate the property to its own use? This simply provides that after due public notice to whoever are the owners of these logs to remove them within a certain time, that if not removed the United States will remove them and appropriate the logs so removed to its own use by sale of same and expend the proceeds in the improvement of the highway or river which they impede. I think there can not be the slightest doubt that Congress has that right. These logs are derelicts. They have been there for years—some of them. They impede the navigable waters. The United States, the sovereign of that highway, certainly has the right to give notice to whoever may be the owner to remove them within a certain time, and if not removed that the sovereign itself will remove them and sell them and appropriate the value of the same to its own use. I think there can not be the slightest question in reference to that legal proposition.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Sabine is, in every sense of the word, actually and legally a navigable stream?

Mr. SMALL. I think so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And it is the privilege of the Government, and I conceive it to be its duty, to keep it a navigable stream. Now, if it were filled with mud, they would have to remove the mud to improve the navigation of the stream. They would get nothing for the mud. Now, is it not particularly fortunate under these circumstances that it will take out something else than mud by which it may remunerate itself for at least a part of the cost of the improvement?

Mr. SMALL. Whether fortunate or unfortunate, certainly the Government has the right in taking them out to say what shall be done with them and say that it appropriates to the public use these logs after they are taken out. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in this case, where the appropriation is to furnish the instrumentality of the snag boat to be used in taking the obstructions out of this river, to wit, logs, and the actual expenditure necessary in taking out the logs is to be borne by the sale of the logs, it is a meritorious feature, instead of one to be condemned as the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to contend.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What is done with snags we remove by the ordinary snagging process? They destroy them, do they not?

Mr. SMALL. They usually have no value and they are destroyed. They have no marketable value.

Mr. SAUNDERS. You can not put them on other people's land?

Mr. SMALL. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS. You can not set them afloat because that will be a detriment, so they destroy them.

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then according to the analogy of that if we commence operations on the Sabine River to-day these logs have got to be pulled out and destroyed?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then there is an alternative that in lieu of destroying them the committee is endeavoring to cause them to pay some of the proportionate cost of removal.

Mr. SMALL. That is all; and it is estimated in this case that the logs are so numerous and so valuable that they would furnish a sufficient amount to pay for the cost of the operation of the snag boat, or, in other words, the cost of the maintenance.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Have there been any decisions of the courts determining the title of marked logs raised under conditions prescribed in this bill?

Mr. SMALL. I can not say as to any decision of the courts of the United States, but there have been numerous decisions in the States that where property is left in a highway or left in a stream or otherwise abandoned that the sovereign, the legislature, has a right to prescribe conditions for their removal, and if not removed, that then they may be destroyed or appropriated to the public use.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is a law as to abandonment, but there is also a law as to marked logs with reference to the question of title, and the question of title there has been determined by a decision of the courts.

Mr. SMALL. Well, all that leads to the question of the right of the public as to obstructions in a public highway, in this case a navigable stream. Mr. Chairman, I think the item has merit and ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this item to which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] referred, I am frank to say I do not think is a good one, but I think the gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order to the only good thing there is in it. I do not believe that this river ought to be improved, but if we do improve it we ought to leave in the provision that we now have in that section. I have no doubt about the legality or about the power of the Government to take these logs and condemn them and sell them. The Government has the power to remove any obstruction in navigable waters, and very frequently we have removed vessels. Out in my part of the country the Government removes fish traps worth thousands of dollars. Now, when logs are taken out of a stream they are either burned or otherwise destroyed or abandoned.

I think we will make a very great mistake if we do not permit the Government to take these logs and sell them where they are of value. What can be the use of compelling the Government to either destroy or abandon these logs if they are of any value? I regret that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] made a point of order against the general legislation. The point of order was well taken, of course, but that would have been a valuable piece of legislation and in my judgment ought to have been in here, and if the committee thinks this item should remain in the bill at all I think by all means we should leave in this provision in regard to selling these logs.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, having been in a hearing on the Committee on the Territories on the question of prohibition, which has been agitating the committee for some time, I happened not to be in the House when the section was reached, as it was at a time when it was not expected it would be reached in the bill. Therefore I could not present the views which I would have presented as to the general proposition of this section being in accordance with the general law which is already in existence, and for that reason, as well as for the reason that I wish to have the item retained in the bill, I will read the law on this subject, which is perfectly clear and conclusive. And I give the gentlemen who have thought there was no law sustaining this item the benefit of the fact that this law is incorporated in a general rivers and harbors act and not in a special statute, and for that reason I suppose has been overlooked in this discussion.

The act approved March 3, 1899, was entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes." Now, this is the way that section reads:

SEC. 19. That whenever the navigation of any river, lake, harbor, sound, bay, canal, or other navigable waters of the United States shall be obstructed or endangered by any sunken vessel, boat, water craft, raft, merchantable timber, or other similar obstruction, and such obstruction has existed for a longer period than 30 days, or whenever the abandonment of such obstruction can be legally established in a less space of time, the sunken vessel, boat, water craft, raft, logs, merchantable timber, or other obstruction shall be subject to be broken up, removed, sold, or otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of War, at his discretion, without liability for any damage to the owners of the same: Provided, That in his discretion the Secretary of War may cause reasonable notice of such obstruction of not less than 30 days, unless the legal abandonment of the obstruction can be established in a less time, to be given by publication, addressed "To whom it may concern" in a newspaper published nearest to the locality of the obstruction requiring the removal thereof: And provided also, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, at or after the time of giving such notice cause sealed proposals to be solicited by public advertisement, giving reasonable notice of not less than 10 days, for the removal of such obstruction as soon as possible after the expiration of the above specified 30 days' notice, in case it has not in the meantime been so removed, these proposals and contracts, at his discretion, to be conditioned that such vessel, boat, water craft, raft, merchantable timber, or other obstruction, and all cargo and property contained therein, shall become the property of the contractor, and the contract shall be awarded to the bidder making the proposition most advantageous to the United States: Provided, That such bidder shall give satisfactory security to execute the work: Provided further, That any money received from the sale of any such wreck, or from any contractor for the removal of wrecks, under this paragraph shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

We do provide the manner in which the notice shall be given to those who have any legal rights in the property. There is the right absolutely given to those who have the removal of the obstructions to take the obstructions, whether it be rafts, merchantable timber, or whatever character of obstruction it may be, out of the water, and the following section gives the right to the United States Government, after due notice, through an advertisement, to sell these obstructions which have been taken out, when they are worth being sold, and converted into money and covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, for 30 years this stream was one of the navigable streams, located partly in the State of Louisiana and partly in the State of Texas, and was used for the purpose of navigation, and on that account many of these logs have been dropped into the river from the rafts that were being towed in it by the boats that were carrying them to the mills up and down the river. For the last 15 years those obstructions have been so great as to impede the navigation of the river, and for a space of 30 or 40 miles to absolutely prevent it. The river is now navigable to where these logs are piled up in it, and below Orange, Tex., to the Gulf the river is already navigable, and the rivers and harbors bill that we are now considering has provided for appropriations for the Sabine River up to the city of Orange. There is no question about its being a navigable river. The logs are there, and the Board of Engineers report that the logs should be removed, and that it will take about $30,000 to put a snag boat in the river and remove them, and the estimate is, there will be about $500,000 worth of logs which can be taken out, and the money for them put into the United States Treasury. During the last few minutes the gentleman asked whether or not it would be acceptable for him to remove the logs under contract. Of course, I would not take any part in such a contract myself. He asked if we should not go in together and buy these logs. There are hundreds of people in that country who would be glad to buy these logs at many times the value that it would cost the Government of the United States to take them out. This is not a hasty report of the Board of Engineers. They fully considered this question before they reported on it. It was reported favorably by the Chief of Engineers and by the Board of Engineers, and was argued before the Board of Engineers by the United States Senator from Louisiana, by one Senator from Texas, and Members of the House from Louisiana and Arkansas at the time when the question was up, as to the importance of the navigation on the Sabine River.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this stream is in my district. I represent the State at large. A part of its length serves as a State line between Texas and Louisiana. The so-called obstruction of logs for about 30 miles prevents a regular continuous navigation for something over 200 miles. I have been up and down and all over the country adjacent to and surrounding the Sabine River. I live up toward the head in the interior of the State. These logs often float down during overflows for several hundred miles from immense timber belts, where they have been cut for sawmills. A vast forest of the finest kind of pine, white oak, red oak, and burr oak is found all up that river section. Instead of the timber being damaged by being under the water, I will say that an oak log after it lies in the water for several years is known in the markets of the world as "antique" oak, and is far more valuable than when fresh, and pine is not damaged. And for this timber to be converted into money is an easy problem, and I think we are adopting a proper method by being able to utilize some of the stuff we take out of a stream to pay for the labor invested in improving its value as a navigable stream.

I just wanted to make these remarks on this question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I very much——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to see if we can not place some limitation on this debate. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like another five minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto end in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this paragraph, because it presents a situation with which I have had some experience in my district. In the first place, there is an unfavorable report by the Corps of Engineers, but the committee proposes an appropriation. The engineers have occasionally made unfavorable reports concerning harbors in my district, and in every case I have had to take my medicine. I never have been able to get an appropriation from this Congress for any harbor blacklisted by the Corps of Engineers. But it is said there is a saving clause here, in that there is an opportunity for lifting logs from the bottom of the river and disposing of them at a profit, and thereby meet the expense of the improvement. I live in a lumber district, or it was one years ago, at the mouth of a river down which as much log timber floated as over any river in this country. I believe I say that advisedly, and for hundreds of miles the bottom of that river is covered with sunken saw logs.

The Supreme Court of the State of Michigan in a well-considered opinion determined only a few years ago—four or five years ago—that the title to sunken logs remains in the original owners of them, and that anyone who disregards the rights of the original owner and raises logs and undertakes to appropriate them or the proceeds of their sale to his own use is liable for the value of them to the original owner. I was connected with litigation in the courts of our State where these questions were involved, so am somewhat familiar with them.

Now, as to the opportunity of making money out of the raising of these logs, I know of several instances where companies were organized for raising logs in that way, the incorporators having obtained assignments of the log marks from the original owners, those assignments carrying title to the sunken logs; and during the time the log-lifting companies carried on the business of raising logs there was loss in every case. There was, I believe, no instance of profit. No instance of profit is shown in all the experience of the men or companies who undertook that business. So there is nothing in this claim of the gentlemen from Texas that here is "a saving clause" which will justify this House if it wishes to adhere to the policy of following the report of the Board of Engineers or in overturning the report of the Board of Engineers or disregarding the first portion of it, which says that this project is altogether unworthy.

Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that this Government might enact legislation making it legal and proper for the engineers to lift these logs, so that the question of ownership of and title to the logs would not stand in the way of the improvement of a navigable stream. The title to these logs can be acquired, and in the course of improving a navigable stream the right can be acquired to take the logs from the bottom of the stream and convert them to the use of the Government or sell them and put the money in the Treasury. But that right can be acquired only after notice to the owners, and nothing being done by the original owners after due notice they can be held to have abandoned their property. The Government can then assume control of the property, remove it from the river, and sell it and devote the proceeds to meeting the expense of making the improvement.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I do not call to mind the statute of Louisiana, but I think our statute in Texas covers all the right an original owner may have 250 miles above the raft. Two years after he is estopped from claiming ownership if they have passed off his region of territory. It may be the same in Louisiana.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. There is no such law in my State, and while, of course, I do not question the statement the gentleman makes I think his recollection is wrong. I believe there is now no law that will permit or protect the Government or its engineers in taking possession of the logs or appropriating to itself the proceeds of the sale of them. I believe there should be such a law; but I very much doubt the wisdom of Congress assuming to enact so important a provision by inserting these carelessly drawn lines in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, in view of the success I have had in offering amendments on the floor of the House, and in order to help my friend from Massachusetts in his effort to strike out this item, I wish to say a word. I know he will appreciate my efforts.

I want to suggest to the House that this argument seems to be in a wrong direction, because, as will be seen by the testimony I will submit to you, instead of the removal of the logs relieving navigation the logs will ruin navigation if they are once taken from the streams. [Laughter.] I read now from Document No. 668, page 3:

5. The district officer states that if the river were cleared of obstructions there would be a practicable channel to Logansport for boats drawing 3 feet at stages in the river corresponding to a gauge reading of not less than 9 feet. Such stage, however, averages only about four months per year, and there will probably be seasons when this navigable period will not exceed one to two months.

6. The district officer expresses the opinion that no improvement of the river with a view to open-river navigation will ever be advisable above mile 100, and that practical navigation on that section can only be secured by means of locks and dams. He states that the river may be susceptible of improvement below mile 130 for boats drawing 3 feet for about seven months and below mile 70 for the entire year. The information obtained in connection with the preliminary examination indicates that a complete removal of obstructions would be quite expensive, and the district officer expresses the opinion, in which the division engineer concurs, that the river is not worthy of further improvement at this time.

Then four gentlemen from this House, with one from the other end of the Capitol, went before the board and gave some expert information upon this subject of navigation, so that the board was convinced that they had made a mistake, and they had an open hearing. Here is something that was developed there—I read from page 8. I wish the committee would pay attention to this, because it is interesting. I read from paragraph 17. It says:

17. Open-river navigation therefore appears to be practicable only for an average period of about four months, and that such period will be in general during the period January to June, inclusive. It must be expected, also, that there will be seasons when this navigable period will be limited to from one to two months, with possibly less than one month of continuous navigation.

Now I will read from page 8, paragraph 18:

18. As there are no farm products to be moved during the high-water period, January to June, inclusive, the only industries to be benefited at present by improvement are those in the lumber business. These industries are large and important, but their life is a limited one. Further, it is doubtful if those interested in such industries desire any modification of the present channel conditions.

Now, we have got down to one month, Mr. Chairman, when it is reported they may have navigation. But, reading on page 25, from the letter of the Sabine Tram Co. to Maj. T. H. Jackson, I find this:

We have some 50 miles of river front along the Sabine River in Newton County, Tex. At this time we think it would do harm to the river instead of benefit, for the reason that whenever the logs are cleaned out it will result in lowering the water by letting it run off. This is shown north and south of our mill at Deweyville, Tex. By taking the logs and obstruction out it caused the river to get shallower each year the logs were removed. Mr. Axtell, while with the Government, was up at our mill while it was low. We think he was of the same opinion.

There is other evidence along that line. But here, Mr. Chairman, it appears that with the logs in the best they could do is to have one month's navigation in a year, and the people living along there say that if you take these logs out it will prevent navigation. In the light of all this testimony I ask you, Ought we not to leave them in there?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that this item might be stricken from the bill, but my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] says that he realizes that his support of my proposition will concentrate support in favor of the item. [Laughter.] In spite of his assistance I wish to call attention in regard to two facts. On page 10 of the report in a preliminary examination by the district engineer, Maj. Jackson, I find that he states that the great question here is flood control and complete reclamation of the overflowed land. So it is not a question of navigation, it is one of flood control and complete reclamation of the land, according to the report of the engineer. I have not time to read all the applicable items from that report, but the whole thing is illuminating.

Let me call attention to this fact. I am reading from the report of Maj. Jackson, of the Corps of Engineers:

There can be no doubt that at the present there is no need of any improvement of this river, and it is certain that the cost of the removal of snags, drift, overhanging trees, and other accidental obstructions, so far as may be necessary to enable the stream to be used at low water and also at ordinary water stages by boats of as great a draft as permitted by the natural conditions of the stream when free of the above-named obstructions is too great to justify the expenditure. Further, it is my opinion that no improvement of this river with the view of open-river navigation will ever be advisable above about mile 100. If navigation is desired above that point, it must be obtained by the construction of locks and dams.

Now, Logansport, the place to which they are intending to get navigation, is 292 miles up stream, and the engineer says that there is no possible chance of getting navigation for more than 100 miles. So it looks as if that part of the river might be considered a nonnavigable stream according to the district engineer.

Now, we find here a statement from Gen. Black, Chief of Engineers, in support of this very testimony that there is no navigation on the river above mile 100, and, as I say, Logansport is 292 miles upstream. You are getting logs out of a nonnavigable stream.

Now, then, with reference to the legal claim and the law set up by the gentleman from Louisiana, and further referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina, let me say to the gentleman from Louisiana that if his definition of merchantable timber applied to these logs, why did the board of engineers come to Congress and ask for legislation authorizing them to sell these snagged-out logs? They knew that that law was in existence, and that if it applied to the logs in the Sabine River they never would ask to have this paragraph go into the bill, because they would know that they already had authority.

Furthermore, the gentleman from North Carolina states that it is very evident that we have the sovereign right, and so forth. He has put that up as his opinion. I do not question the gentleman's legal ability; I do not claim to have any. I am not a lawyer, but I am exercising a little horse sense in connection with this matter. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether his opinion as to the sovereignty of the Government in this respect has ever been legally established in such a case as this. He makes his own statement of that fact, but there is nothing to back it up. Consequently we come back to the point where we started, when I say that we enter into very serious legal complications when we assume ownership of these logs in the stream. The river is not worthy of improvement, anyway; it is not worth the improvement unless you can pay for the logs that the Government gets, and if we do take them and use them as our own we are getting into bad legal complications. The whole thing is wrong.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts make such a profound legal argument when he says he is not a lawyer. Did the gentleman ever hear of the old English common-law doctrine of flotsam and jetsam, by which the sovereign has the right to seize everything floating in navigable waters?

Mr. TREADWAY. Evidently the gentleman from Louisiana does not consider these logs flotsam and jetsam; he seems to think they are valuable; but, nevertheless, it seems to me that the item is unworthy of a place in the river and harbor bill. It is this kind of items that renders us liable to the criticisms that are heaped upon us, taking all the good projects and putting a few of the bad ones up against them in the balance.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct an erroneous statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. That gentleman is usually so accurate that I am sure he would desire to be corrected in this instance. He stated that this proposition had not received a favorable report. He is mistaken in that. There was a favorable report on this project. It is well known under the law that the question of whether a favorable report exists depends on the final report and recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. It is possible that there should be an unfavorable report by the district engineer; it is possible that there should be an unfavorable report by the division engineer, and also by the board of review, known as the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and yet if the Chief of Engineers makes a favorable recommendation and report, then it is deemed that the project has a favorable report.

In this instance, it is true, the district engineer did not make a favorable recommendation, based solely on the ground that the cost was excessive, and the division engineer concurred with him, but when it went before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that board reviewed the evidence, and after a full hearing of the evidence they reached the conclusion that the improvement was desirable, based on the condition that the fund for its maintenance should be provided by the proceeds of sales of sunken logs which have been removed from navigable streams, and the Chief of Engineers concurred with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, making thereby a favorable report.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the Committee on Rivers and Harbors recommend the abandonment of this proposition if the proceeds from selling the logs do not yield a profit?

Mr. SMALL. I can say for this member of the committee that if it transpires that the proceeds from the sale of the logs are not sufficient to pay the cost of maintenance, I would be opposed to continuing the project.

Mr. Chairman, I only desired to correct the inadvertent statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. I do not desire to go further into the legality of it, except to give this illustration. In 1899, in the river and harbor act, there was a provision which has been repeated since forbidding persons moving logs by raft or otherwise from dropping them into the channel of the river and making it a misdemeanor if they did so, so that these logs in the bottom of the river are there now as the result of a violation of law. One other illustration. We have a statute as to derelicts in navigable streams. If a barge is sunk or a vessel or a steamer, we have a statute now which provides that after notice the War Department, through the engineers, may destroy or remove the derelict, and if they may remove and destroy obstructions in navigable streams, certainly that implies and carries with it the right to utilize them for any purpose the Government may deem proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bayou Grossetete, La.: For maintenance, $1,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the Savannah, Ga., items, by the insertion therein of certain documents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., December 8, 1916.

Hon. CHARLES G. EDWARDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EDWARDS: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of this date, advising us that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has decided against hearing arguments from committees seeking appropriations for their ports. We appreciate that you have done, and are doing, everything possible for Savannah and feel that our interests are safe in your hands.

Mr. Conant has prepared some data which he is mailing to you tonight, and Maj. Williamson also has prepared some good arguments which he will forward to you. If there is anything we can do at any time to further the interests of the desired appropriation let me know by wire and it will have prompt attention.

With sincere regards.

W. J. PIERPONT, Mayor.

SAVANNAH HARBOR, GA., ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF ADOPTING THE PROJECT FOR FURTHER IMPROVEMENTS, AS RECOMMENDED BY THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS AND CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, BY E. R. CONANT, CHIEF ENGINEER, SAVANNAH, GA.

The length of the coast line between Norfolk, Va., and the southern point of Florida is 1,200 miles. Savannah is located midway between these points. Norfolk, Va., is a deep-water port, and its commerce and location warrants such improvements as will accommodate the deepest draft bottoms. Between Norfolk and the southern point of Florida the Federal Government has improved, and is still improving, 10 ports. The improvements have not been carried out to the same extent at each of these ports, and it would not be expected that all of the ports could be improved so as to accommodate the deep-draft bottoms.

There is no question but that at least one port over this 1,200 miles of the coast line should be improved, so as to accommodate vessels that are increasing in tonnage and draft. The increase in commerce at some of these 10 ports has been notable during the last 10 years. At some of the places there has not been a response in the way of increase in commerce proportional to the expenditure made by the Government.

In the tabulation given below are the names of the ports extending from Norfolk, Va., to Key West, Fla., the total appropriation made by the Government from the commencement of the improvement of each port to June 30, 1915, the value of commerce of each port for the year 1914, and the value of commerce for the year 1904, 10 years previous.

Ports.	Total appropriation made for improvement up to June 30, 1915.	Value of commerce for the year 1914.	Value of commerce for the year 1904.
Key West, Fla.	$780,330	$13,434,175	$5,229,150
Miama, Fla.	665,727	3,197,136	514,710
Jacksonville, Fla.	6,827,869	60,718,452	28,000,000
Fernandina, Fla.	3,647,510	9,230,082	10,715,000
Brunswick, Ga.	1,428,328	38,343,320	29,939,000
Darien, Ga.	175,365	1,450,909	917,240
Savannah, Ga.	10,676,226	349,193,305	193,820,000
Charleston, S. C.	5,095,234	46,800,741	49,994,000
Georgetown, S. C.	3,142,022	4,146,954	9,546,843
Wilmington, N. C.	6,146,168	28,682,163	44,724,500

The figures given in the tabulation were taken from the reports of the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War.

From the above tabulation it is observed that the value of commerce, which passed through the port of Savannah, Ga., in 1914, was greater than all of the other nine ports combined by over $140,000,000, whereas in 1904 the commerce of the port of Savannah while greater than all other of the nine ports combined, was but approximately $13,000,000 over the total value of commerce of the nine ports for that year. Not only has Savannah responded in the way of commerce for each improvement giving increased depth since first improvement of the harbor, but comparing the commerce with the other ports, it is observed that if any port is worthy of continuing the improvement, as far as response in the growth of commerce is concerned, the port of Savannah should be favorably considered.

On account of the cost in obtaining improvements sufficent to accommodate the largest size bottoms, it can not be expected that the Federal Government can improve all of the ports to meet this condition. As Savannah has well responded as regards increase in commerce to all of the improvements made by the Government, and as there are no physical difficulties in the way of continuing its improvement so as to give a greater depth than now existing, as the Board of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers have indorsed the project whereby a material improvement can be accomplished within reasonable cost, and one which is warranted by prospective increase in commerce, therefore it is urged that favorable action be taken by Congress whereby the recommendation of the Board of Engineers and Chief of Engineers can be adopted.

Since the report was prepared by the district engineer for the new project, several new manufacturing industries have developed at Savannah, one of which is the immense sugar refinery, where an expenditure of approximately $5,000,000 will be made. Due to this industry alone, it is stated that the Government will receive a large amount in additional duties, perhaps to an extent of $3,000,000 annually and the commencement of receiving this excessive increase in duty may be expected early in the year of 1917.

In furnishing the above argument, it is not done with the intention of discouraging the Federal Government in making further improvements at any or all of the other ports noted, but only to bring out the fact that anticipating that all of the ports can not be improved to an extent of accommodating the increased tonnage and draft of the deepest bottoms; that your attention be invited to the conditions at Savannah, and to show that of any port on the South Atlantic coast south of Norfolk, Va., Savannah is more worthy than any other port of having continued improvements, so as to obtain an enlarged channel affording passage for increased size freight bottoms.

SAVANNAH, GA., December 8, 1916.

Hon. CHARLES G. EDWARDS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EDWARDS: About 1 o'clock to-day I received your telegram, and shortly afterwards was called up by the mayor for a conference, as he had received a similar telegram.

In accordance with your request, I am inclosing the statement which I had gotten up to read before the River and Harbor Committee, and I particularly want to call your attention to the matter of the sugar refinery. There is no question but what this $10,000-a-day duty will be forthcoming, and the chances are it will even be larger, for the management have decided to increase the plant to a 50 per cent increase in the output; so the Government will be recouped inside of two or three years for nearly all the money they have spent so far on this harbor. I shall send a copy of this statement later to Senator SMITH, so that he will be prepared to take care of the bill in the Senate.

We all appreciate your work and what you have done for the Savannah Harbor, and I sincerely hope that you will succeed on this bill as you have in the past as a good wind-up to your work in Congress.

Yours, very truly,

WM. W. WILLIAMSON.

This committee appears before you in the hope of securing your support for the further improvement of the Savannah Harbor, Col. W. C. Langfitt's specifications for a depth at mean low water of 26 feet from the Seaboard Air Line Railway bridge to Quarantine, 30 feet from Quarantine to the sea, and the widening of the channel in places, has been approved by the Board of Engineers, the Chief of Engineers, and now comes to you for your consideration. The bill carries an appropriation of $1,920,000 and covers a period of four years for the work.

We have always understood it to be the policy of your committee to give their approval and support to meritorious projects, such as show a large increase in commerce on the expenditures made. We ask, therefore, your careful attention to the data following, using Government figures, which will show that commerce at Savannah has enormously responded to the greater depth of water.

Statistics on water-borne commerce of Savannah.

Years.	Appropriations.	Expended.	Controlling depth of harbor at mean low water.	Water-borne commerce for calendar year.	For every additional foot in depth attained commerce has increased in one year—	And for the period a commerce of—
From 1874 to June 30, 1885	$882,000	$831,614.40	1885. 13 to 14 feet	1884. $51,630,518
From 1885 to June 30, 1905	[1] 6,682,983	6,569,323.22	1905. 19 feet	1904. 193,820,760	$28,438,000
From 1905 to June 30, 1912	[2] 2,546,764	1,968,639.20	1912. 22 feet	1911. 246,678,077	17,619,000	$201,930,693 194,836,773 209,018,494 167,941,267 186,701,147 224,512,440 246,678,077 1,431,618,891

Total	10,791,747
To be deducted from appropriation on Savannah Harbor	122,700
Total	10,669,047	10,628,240.10

[1] Expended on channel between Savannah and Beaufort $106,700
[2] Expended on channel between Savannah and Beaufort 16,000

Total 122,700

Controlling depth of harbor for 1916 remains practically the same as of 1912, but there has been an advance in the general depth of the harbor.

Owing to the exhaustion of the appropriation, a uniform depth of 26 feet was not attained, and it is to secure this depth to Quarantine and 30 feet to the sea that the present bill is asked for. The tendency is to build larger ships, as they can be operated more economically than smaller ones, proportionately. A large and deep ship starting from Savannah at the top of high water will find that on reaching Quarantine the tide has fallen about 2 feet; hence the necessity for 30 feet from Quarantine to the sea.

Comparing Savannah in 1905 and 1915–16, we give you the following information:

Miscellaneous commercial data.

1905.
Number of banks and trust companies	10
Number of telephone subscribers	5,591
Enrollment in public schools	6,891
Population	75,000

Capital, surplus, and undivided profits of banks and trust companies, Sept. 1, 1916	$10,014,549.00
Deposits in banks and trust companies, estimated, 1916	$30,000,000.00
Real and personal property tax returns (66⅔ per cent) calendar year 1915	$58,063,392.00
Value of water-borne commerce, calendar year 1915	$420,088,304.00

We believe that Savannah has a great future. It has the largest cottonseed oil refinery in the world; it is one of the leading cities of the world in the manufacture and shipment of commercial fertilizer. Savannah vied with New Orleans as the second cotton port, one year New Orleans beating Savannah by a few thousand bales and the next year Savannah beating New Orleans. The result depends largely upon the size of the crop in the contiguous territory.

Many improvements of magnitude are now under way or in contemplation on the river front. A sugar refinery, which is nearing completion and which will handle 1,000,000 pounds of sugar daily, will pay the Government a duty of $10,000 per day, or approximately $3,000,000 annually, thus recouping the Government in four years for the total expenditure at Savannah, including the present amount asked for. The Savannah Warehouse & Compress Co. is just being completed at a cost of almost $1,000,000. It will supply a long-felt want, relieving the congestion that has occurred annually. A large barrel factory and a pulp factory are also in course of construction. Several other large enterprises are projected, but for the present can not be disclosed.

Approximately 6 miles of utilized wharf front affords shipping accommodations unsurpassed south of Baltimore; one slip has a length of 2,005 feet.

The connections at Savannah's terminals by rail and water are unsurpassed. Owing to the curvature in the coast, Savannah is nearer to Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Memphis, Nashville, and other western cities than either New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore. The connections by rail embrace all the most important roads in the Southeast and include the Seaboard Air Line Railway, Atlantic Coast Line Railway, Central of Georgia Railway, Southern Railway, Savannah & Statesboro Railway, Savannah & Northwestern Railway, and the Midland Railway. With these rail lines and their connections, Savannah serves both as a port of import and export for a very large territory, extending to Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

COASTWISE STEAMERS.

The Ocean Steamship Co. sail: Three steamers a week for New York; two steamers a week for Boston.

The Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. sail: Two steamers a week for Baltimore; two steamers a week for Philadelphia.

The large increase in water-borne commerce is not due to the handling of munitions, for with the exception of steel billets and pig iron Savannah has handled little else in this line; but in spite of this her commerce has expanded, whilst that of neighboring ports has declined, as will be seen from the subjoined table:

The United States Government has spent to date $10,699,364.91 on the improvement of Savannah Harbor. These expenditures for construction and maintenance when read in their totalities seem large, but the gratifying increase in commerce with the improvements gives at once a justification of past work and future growth of the port.

The growth of foreign exports at Savannah as compared with the leading ports of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts can be better illustrated by the following figures, compiled from the records of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

The Clerk read as follows:

Red River, Ark. and La.: For maintenance below Fulton, Ark., $55,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. SPARKMAN] for some information just at this point. I notice that the item just read carries $55,000 for the maintenance of the Red River below Fulton, Ark., to the mouth of the Red River in Louisiana. The rivers and harbors appropriation bill usually carries an appropriation for the maintenance of the Red River in the way of keeping the channel open and free from accumulated drifts in Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas from Fulton, Ark., to the mouth of the Washita River, in Oklahoma, and in reading through the bill I find that item has been omitted this year. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for that omission. I presume that the reason for it is that the report of the Army engineers shows a sufficient amount of money on hand to continue the work as it has been carried on in the past, without an additional appropriation at this time, and if such is the fact, I would like to have that information.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say in response to the gentleman's inquiry that the report shows just that condition. It reads as follows:

Proposed operations: The funds available will be expended substantially as follows: (a) About $25,000 in the repair of levees destroyed by overflows in 1915 and 1916; (b) the remainder in caring for the Government snag boats Denison and C. A. Culberson and quarter boat No. 3 at a cost of about $500 per month, and in two trips of the Denison of about six months each at about $1,500 per month for necessary work of preventing the formation of rafts. The available funds will be exhausted about June 30, 1918. No estimate for the fiscal year ending on that date is therefore submitted.

Mr. BLACK. Then I understand that the funds now on hand will run until near the end of the fiscal year 1918, in so far as relates to the present operations, and that will be at the end of the period for which this bill makes appropriations?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is the idea, as I understand it.

Mr. BLACK. That was all that I wanted to say in reference to the item at this time.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, strike out lines 12 and 13.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to strike out the paragraph for the expenditure of $55,000 for the maintenance of the Red River below Fulton. I am very much pleased to think that I was able to help my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] on the preceding item, although we failed to strike out a project which has water in the river only one month in the year, according to the official report; but, as some one suggests, perhaps in the future artesian wells may be placed there.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What month of the year is it that the water is in the river?

Mr. FREAR. It is some time between January and June, but the report says that it would be of no practical benefit, because at that time there are no agricultural products to float.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is nothing more definite than between January and June one would not know when to bring his boats there.

Mr. FREAR. That is the difficulty exactly. Mr. Chairman, the Red River has received $2,874,687 thus far below Fulton. There are $88,221 on hand and $55,000 more is asked for at this time. Last year we expended something like $65,000. The Engineer's report, on page 1007, says:

A transportation company has been organized to operate a line of boats, and it proposes to begin regular trips in the near future.

We have expended $2,874,687 on this river, and we are now told that a boat line may possibly be organized some time in the future. The commerce last year reached 27,325 tons, of which timber reached 9,000 tons and sand and gravel 4,000 tons, leaving a net balance of 14,275 tons hauled 35 miles, which is the net result of an investment of nearly $3,000,000 in the Red River, according to the official report.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the present traffic on the Red River is no index to the character of the stream. The reason that a new barge line and steamboats are to be placed in the river is because of the fact that at the last session of our State legislature there was an amendment provided to be submitted to the people of Louisiana, and that amendment was submitted in November of last year, allowing the State to levy a special tax for the establishment of a barge line. This became necessary in reference to the Red River, and this will apply particularly and almost exclusively to the Red River, because of the fact that the appropriations in the last few years have not been adequate to clear the entire river of logs and snags. The Red River is one of the greatest navigable streams in the United States. It is over 1,200 miles long and there are 600 miles of navigable stream, and it has been navigated for over 50 years. A great portion of this money appropriated was for the purpose of taking a raft out of the river many miles long, which had prevented the navigation of the river and which caused all that section of land to be overflowed, and it took a large amount of money to remove that raft.

After this raft was removed and they began actually to navigate the river it was navigable for a long number of years, and it finally happened they made such small amounts of appropriation for a few sessions of Congress that the engineers were not enabled to take all the snags out of the river and they began to knock the bottom out of the boats plying up and down the river. Navigation was simply suspended temporarily for the purpose of enabling the people to readjust themselves to the changed conditions. The new navigation company has been organized, provision for the barges has been made, and everything is in shape to carry out the regulations for the traffic up and down the river on this barge line, which is going to be inaugurated on a very extensive scale. A large part of the river is already being navigated not throughout its length from the Mississippi to Fulton, Ark., as heretofore, but up and down the river, and that is many miles, as shown by the report of the engineers.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. How long is the river?

Mr. WATKINS. One thousand two hundred and seventy-five miles.

Mr. BUTLER. How wide is it?

Mr. WATKINS. It averages about 100 yards—300 feet.

Mr. BUTLER. How deep is it?

Mr. WATKINS. At Shreveport, practically the head of navigation, 32 feet.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. The gentleman thinks they would have more water in it if it were not so long. [Laughter.]

Mr. WATKINS. Well, I will just say, "So long."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterway on the coast of Texas: For maintenance of the West Galveston Bay-Brazos River section, $15,000; for maintenance of the Brazos River-Matagorda Bay section, $30,000; for maintenance of the Aransas Pass-Pass Cavallo section, $30,000: Provided, That any portion of the amount herein or hereafter appropriated for a given section of said waterway may, upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, be transferred by the Secretary of War and made available for maintenance of improvement in any other section; in all, $75,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, lines 4 to 13, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 24, by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 4 and ending with line 13.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to read the records of the Army engineers contained in the report in this case. Let me say I am ony taking a few items which I have checked over, because unless they have a different relation to other items there is no object in continual repetition; but this is different from the others, as was the last, which was the case of having paid $2,800,000 for a river and finding as a result of our investment 14,000 tons of freight hauled 35 miles. Now, there is a different situation here. We have put in about $1,000,000, in round figures, on this project, and here is what I wish to call to the attention of the committee: They have a waterway organization down in Texas, and a very strong one, I believe, with a gentleman by the name of Mr. Holland at the head of it, who, I think, is regarded as a very able and intelligent man by all the papers that have come to us. Here is what he says about this particular project, and it is for the advice of the committee that I am reading. It appeared in the Houston Post, November 6, a year ago. He says:

It is not the appropriations that cause the rivers and harbors bill to be called "pork barrel," but the manner of making the appropriations. For instance, it is no secret that the intercoastal canal at a depth of 5 feet does not meet the demands of the lightest draft navigation for boats and barges—

Mind you, he says "lightest draft"—

Nothing less than 9 feet will make a waterway that will meet the demands of commerce—but we have proceeded on the theory that it is easier to secure the smaller appropriations and have accepted a minimum of 5 feet with the belief that it could be easily deepened to 9 feet by additional appropriations. However, when the first and second appropriations are added together it will cost the Government more than twice as much as it would have cost had the original appropriation been made on the basis of 9 feet. Penny-wise and pound-foolish is what I call it, and unless these practices cease we will never have a good Government. The time for decisive action is here; the time for half-hearted pleading is past. We ask for appropriations for a real waterway of 9 feet minimum depth, not for a makeshift of 5 feet depth.

Then, as an afterthought, he has a genuine inspiration and says:

The fact is that an inland waterway from Maine to Mexico, with a minimum depth of 12 feet, is an actual necessity for the protection of the country.

There is a statement from which it appears that this expenditure of money does not meet navigation needs for the lightest draft vessels, and it is evident from the report when you stop to read the commerce which does not reach a thousand tons. Now, it seems to me that it is a waste of money after having expended nearly a million dollars without getting any result, and it would seem wise to save that $75,000 for the future needs of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Colorado River, Tex.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $25,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this is somewhat different from the Sabine River and others, and I wish to read from the official report with reference to it. On page 11 the district officer comes to this conclusion. He says:

In view of the difficulty of improving the river between mile 21 and Bay City I would recommend that the improvement of this section be not undertaken for the present, but that the part of the river from a connection with the Intercoastal Canal in Matagorda Bay to mile 21 in the river be improved at a cost of $25,000.

The section I read a few moments ago was where they stated the canal is practically valueless and they could not use it, and that boats of the lightest draft will not run on that waterway, and unless there is some further money appropriated it is useless to put this money in. So unless there is something further to offer it is useless to put this money into that river. On page 7 the division engineer says:

The division engineer, however, can not join in the recommendation that the river is worthy of improvement to mile 21 at the present time—

He overrules the district engineer—

There is practically nothing upon this portion of the Colorado River to originate a commerce, and the conditions along this portion of the river at the present time are such as would render any local commerce difficult.

And then on page 3 the report says:

It appears, however, that there are only about a half dozen farms now in operation in the immediate vicinity of the river below mile 21. It is not seen how local commerce of any magnitude can originate for some time to come, and it is not thought that through commerce via the present intracoastal waterway would seek an outlet at this point.

Of course it can not, if that previous report which I read is true—

The board therefore reports in its opinion it is not advisable for the United States to undertake any improvement of this stream at the present time.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. In just a moment. The Chief of Engineers reached the conclusion that because of this Intercoastal Canal, which will not permit a boat of the lightest draft to carry freight, according to the statement, that this creek ought to have this amount of money because of this Intercoastal Canal there; and he reports and recommends that this $25,000 be permitted, overruling the Board of Engineers.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the committee has reported in favor of improving this stream against the advice of the engineers?

Mr. FREAR. The Chief of Engineers overruled the Board of Engineers, who give all the reasons why the river is not capable of any possible commercial use; but the Chief of Engineers simply overruled them and wiped out their judgment, so to speak.

Mr. BUTLER. I am hunting for a precedent. I have a few creeks in my corner of the State, and I am looking up precedents. I have not gotten any yet.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read as follows:

I concur in general with the district officer and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the opinion that for the section of river from mile 21 to Bay City the benefits to be derived from the improvements are not commensurate with the expense that would be entailed, and it is therefore considered that this section is not worthy of improvement by the Government at the present time. For the section from a connection with the Intercoastal Canal in Matagorda Bay to mile 21 in the river I concur with the district officer in the opinion that the improvement can be made at a reasonable cost in comparison with the benefits derived; and in view of the offers of local cooperation as to bridges and terminal facilities, I recommend that the locality be improved by the United States to the extent of redredging a channel 5 feet deep and 40 feet wide across the bar at the mouth and snagging, removing remains of old rafts, and cutting overhanging timber from the mouth to mile 21, at a total estimated cost of $25,000, on condition that the improvement be not undertaken until after the construction of a railroad spur to some point at or near mile 21, and a public wharf on each side of the river at this place, with public roads leading thereto, and suitable bridge draws in the bridges below mile 21, satisfactory to the Chief of Engineers and to the Secretary of War, all free of expense to the United States.

That is the total expense that this Government has had, namely, $25,000; and the local authorities will be at much more expense than that. I submit that the appropriation ought to be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arkansas River, Ark. and Okla.: For maintenance by snagging operations, $35,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some time ago the president of the Mississippi River Commission, Col. Townsend, who is a recognized authority on the subject of the Mississippi Valley, in view of the waste that had occurred in this valley through money placed in these rivers, made the following recommendation before a waterway organization in this city, wherein he said:

Specifically, the writer would not abandon any navigable stream in the Mississippi Valley that has been partially improved, but would leave 58 of them in statu quo, confining operations to snagging and the maintenance of existing works, and would concentrate appropriations on opening up a channel of the capacity of that existing on the lower middle Mississippi to Chicago and Pittsburgh. * * *

If the facilities thus afforded by the Government are utilized, the upper Mississippi and the Missouri River should then receive attention.

Now, I speak of that at this time because it will be referred to hereafter, that here is one of the best authorities in the country, who advises us to stop throwing money away.

Mr. Chairman, I moved to strike out the last word. How much have we put in these streams? Let us see. On the Ouachita River, which we have just passed, over $4,212,869, with a balance of $672,000 on hand, and we just passed an item of $10,000 more. What is the commerce? It floated 97,000 tons last year. Timber barged, 36,000 tons; staves, 6,000; sand and gravel, 8,000; all for an investment of $4,212,000.

Mr. Chairman, I made a pro forma amendment. Take the Arkansas, and we have here $3,328,336, and on hand $309,499. The commerce is 39,996 tons—logs, 20,713; bolts, 2,550; brush, 4,560; hauled 2 miles; total 27,823, or a net commerce on the Arkansas River of 12,143 tons, on an investment of over $3,000,000. Why, Mr. Chairman, think of the figures we are reaching. Think of the cost to the Government. What is it? Ten, twenty, thirty, or fifty dollars per ton, for maintenance, in addition to the interest charges on that amount.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand the amendment applies to the Ouachita River.

Mr. FREAR. I refer to that so as not to take any more time. I moved to strike out the last word. I made a pro forma amendment in order to discuss the two items.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the Arkansas River was taken over, or adopted, by Congress, according to my recollection, in 1879. It has been provided for, I think, in every river and harbor bill from that time until now.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] does not seem to be well posted as to what may be found in the reaches of the river and the commercial value of the tonnage. I read from the report of the Engineers, in Document No. 461, House of Representatives, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, relating to the upper reaches of the river between Little Rock and Fort Smith. The engineer says:

I have not available an analysis of the freight movement in the Arkansas Valley from which to determine the quantity that would be affected by dependable transportation lines on the Arkansas River. In the report upon the examination of the river between Little Rock and Ozark this was given as 608,000 tons for that 144 miles of river. Of this quantity 400,000 tons was coal.

I would like to say to the House that the coal referred to is anthracite, which is being used to-day, as I have been told, on our battleships. It is not so good as the Pittsburgh anthracite, but it is a hard coal and a great steam producer.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. When did the Government buy that coal for the battleships? I am pleased that the Government did so. But when?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I have no information as to that. I read further:

By using this as a basis, the assumption may be made that the total tonnage of freights that would be affected by dependable transportation lines on the Arkansas River from its mouth to Muskogee and Fort Gibson would be 675,000 tons of general freights and 600,000 tons of coal, making a total of 1,275,000 tons.

Now, this is in the upper stretch of the river from Little Rock to Fort Smith and into Oklahoma. If you leave Little Rock going south down toward the Mississippi River, this river traverses one of the richest valleys in the world. Little Rock is the capital of Arkansas. This past year there were over 200,000 bales of cotton shipped out of Little Rock alone. Lying across the river on the eastern side is the great county of Lonoke, the home county of Senator ROBINSON, and is in the district I represent. This county is a great county for the production of cotton and rice. This county borders on this river. When you come down to my home county of Jefferson, which I believe is one of the richest bodies of land in the world, you find that last year this county, which is split wide open by this river, produced, I am told, about 73,000 bales of cotton. A bale of cotton weighs, you know, about 500 pounds, and that cotton averaged 25 cents a pound last fall, and I saw some of it selling for 35 cents a pound. Pine Bluff, my home, is the capital city of this county, situated on the bank of the Arkansas River. This city handled this cotton season 150,000 bales of cotton.

Now, leaving my county, on the other side is Arkansas County, lying on the other side of this river. This is a great prairie county. Our friends from Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, and Nebraska came down to these lands and discovered that they were adapted to the production of rice. This last year they produced there one and one-half million bushels of rice, which sold for $1.05 a bushel. All this traffic can be done by this river.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. About what is the supply of the anthracite coal?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I can not say, except what this report says. This coal region is above me and above my district.

Mr. FESS. I was simply asking for information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I understand the supply is inexhaustible.

Mr. FESS. Is it genuine anthracite?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. It is good anthracite, with very little dross.

Now, down through Lincoln and Desha Counties the same condition exists with reference to commercial values.

Mr. Chairman, the source of this river is in Colorado. It comes down from the State of Colorado and through portions of Kansas and into Oklahoma, and splits the State of Arkansas wide open in the middle. At one time I saw this river measured by the engineers and it disclosed a depth of 70 feet. There are plying in the river to-day below Little Rock two or three boats that are doing good business. We have two snag and dredge boats in the river, owned by the Government.

Now, the last report that was made touching this river you will find on page 901 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1914, House Document No. 461, and in that report it is said that the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, for maintenance of improvement is $237,500.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes; I yield to my committee colleague.

Mr. SWITZER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the expensive improvement in the past is what was referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. That part of the improvement has been abandoned, has it not? This item is merely for the maintenance of the stream as it originally existed, is it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. The gentleman is correct, except that the improvement of the river has not been abandoned. It is for snagging and the maintenance of the stream.

Mr. SWITZER. The principal improvement that the gentleman from Wisconsin referred to was recommended to be abandoned by the United States Engineers, and it was abandoned, but it should not be dragged in here to the prejudice of this item.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. No. I do not quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am interested in the question of how much the Government has expended on it.

Mr. SWITZER. It should not be brought in in connection with this item.

Mr. BUTLER. How much has the Government lost on this project?

Mr. SWITZER. It is just like the coal business or any other business. Sometimes a coal mine pays, and sometimes it does not. It is the same with respect to a river project. Sometimes river projects fail, but that is no reason for stopping the policy of the improvement of rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] refers to the recommendation of abandonment. He is mistaken about that. Here is the report of the engineer on that feature of the case. He says that he is of the opinion that the improvement of the Arkansas River should not be abandoned, but is inclined to the belief that the work of revetting the banks should be continued. He says the commercial importance of the river is increasing all the time, and that is natural under an increase of population. The population of the great State of Arkansas through which this river runs has increased every year since its admission to the Union. The lands are being cleared, and where lands along this river were worth $15 to $25 an acre formerly, they are worth to-day $80 to $100 an acre. Do not be misled by anything that has been said. The bill only carries $35,000 for the maintenance of the river in the way of snagging and maintenance. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me say in response to what the gentleman from Arkansas has stated, that the $35,000 appropriation is made in accordance with the recommendation of the engineers themselves; they recommended a modification of the project and an appropriation of $35,000 for the purpose of putting into effect that modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arkansas River, Ark. and Okla.: For maintenance by snagging operations, $35,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this not for the purpose of consuming time but to continue the discussion and show how mistaken we sometimes are in reference to these things. The Arkansas River received last year $209,000 instead of $35,000, which it carries for this year, and we are carrying on improvements now. The Arkansas has $309,000 to its credit in the Treasury, or did have at the end of the last fiscal year. I concede that this is only for maintenance, but we are carrying on the improvement notwithstanding the Board of Army Engineers recommended the abandonment except for the maintenance of snagging and the construction of a snag boat. That is all stated in House Document 461, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. SPARKMAN. They recommended that the existing project be modified and not abandoned as the gentleman says. There is quite a difference between the modification and abandonment of a project, and I just wanted to make the distinction clear, otherwise it might give the public the impression that we were going contrary to the recommendations of the engineers, whereas the reverse is true. They have recommended not the abandonment of the project but a modification of it.

Mr. FREAR. Is it not true that the amendment was put on in the Senate and was refused by our committee?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, that has nothing to do with our action to-day. I am not looking backward; I am looking to the future. They recommended that the existing project be modified so as to limit the work to snagging the river, from it to the mouth of the Neosho, and it is in accordance with that recommendation that this $35,000 is appropriated.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, we have put in $3,823,336 on that river, and they said that when the improvement was completed the river would be in splendid condition to carry coal. Now, the total commerce was 39,966 tons last year, and taking out the sand and gravel and timber it would leave about 16,000 tons, and that included 1,200 tons of coal that was hauled 20 miles. That was the original proposition, that when we had put in $3,000,000 into the Arkansas River it was to be made a great coal-carrying stream. The same was true of the Big Sandy, where we hauled 12 tons of coal year before last for Government purposes after an expenditure of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000. They said that there were 800,000,000 tons of coal tributary to this river, and we find that while 900,000 tons of coal were shipped by rail out of the territory in 1914, only 2,716 tons were shipped 7 miles by water; that was two years ago. That shows that we are continually engaged in pursuing rainbow promises and prospects not realized, and when there is such a tremendous amount of expenditure being urged upon the committee it is important that we should retrench.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why there should be so much criticism of the engineers because some projects that they recommended for the Arkansas River a number of years ago, after the expenditure of a few million dollars, are concluded to be failures and their abandonment recommended. Engineers are not, of course, infallible. If eight or ten million dollars had been expended on experimental work on some harbor where it afterwards failed to develop a large amount of commerce, and there had been a failure you would hear nothing of criticism. We have spent on the mouth of the Mississippi River, on the South Pass, more than $10,000,000. What are we doing to-day? Why, we are digging the Southwest Pass and have expended on that something like $10,000,000. Why? Because they found that the South Pass is deteriorating and unless we spend millions more on the South Pass, which they do not believe would be wise, it is going to close up several miles at the mouth and there would be no navigable outlet for the stream. But because it costs a large amount of money there is no reason for our abandoning river and harbor improvement. The mouth of the Mississippi River near the city of New Orleans has a tonnage of 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 annually valued at more than $350,000,000, as large as the port of Duluth and Superior, that my friend from Wisconsin is generally talking about.

What I am calling the attention of the committee to is that there are a number of large harbors, and I see some in the bill, where we have expended thousands and millions of dollars in experimental work and which the engineers can not tell until after they have tried out the proposition what the result will be. You have to expend money in experimentation, and because a few hundred thousand dollars has been wasted in experimentation on our rivers, is no reason why you should condemn the whole policy. After it has been demonstrated that this work will not result in any great benefit as a national project the engineers recommend the abandonment of the Arkansas River, and we followed it. All we have appropriated for in this bill is enough money to keep the channel in the condition it was before we undertook the new improvement which was abandoned.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman in mind the point on the river where they have abandoned the project?

Mr. SWITZER. They have abandoned that project, and this appropriation is to take the snags out of the river to keep the original channel open to the Mississippi River.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know where the head of navigation now is after the abandonment?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not know.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to supplement briefly the appropriate remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Wisconsin referred to the condition of this river and its commerce. I assume that his efforts were to show that the original project for the improvement of the river was still in force. He did not mention in the slightest way that the engineers under the authority of section 14 of the act of 1915 had made a reexamination of this stream and had recommended that the original project had been modified to the extent of abandoning the improvement, and that further we were only to continue snagging, and they recommended an appropriation of $35,000 for that purpose.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The last river and harbor bill authorized a new survey for the purpose of examining the entire stream. That report has not come in and of course we can not tell what the engineers may do. At present we are only trying to carry out the recommendation for the modification.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, any gentleman who discusses an item in an important bill like this ought to give all of the facts bearing upon the contention which he makes. When he tells only part of the truth and withholds a part, certainly he can not escape criticism of his candor and his genuine desire to inform the House of what is the truth. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has a habit in discussing these rivers and harbors appropriations of citing to the House disjointed statements in the report and avoiding everything which is favorable as a rule, and asking the House to reach a conclusion based only upon a partial statement of the facts. These facts either through a press agency which he maintains or otherwise are given to the press and the impression is sought to be made that they represent the truth as to these projects. Such is not the fact, and I entertain the hope, though it may be vain, that this statement which I make may have the same publicity as these partial statements of the truth which he has made many times in discussing this rivers and harbors bill, and if it has that same publicity I shall be very happy. I do say, and I repeat it, that any Member who seeks to maintain the confidence of this House and the country in discussing any proposition before this House owes it to himself and to his colleagues and the country when making a statement to tell all of the truth and not confine himself to partial and disjointed statements which do not represent all of the truth.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I would like now to invite particularly the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. In the colloquy between he and I on Tuesday, as appears on page 1872 of the RECORD, if he used the words "new projects," I clearly misunderstood the statement of the gentleman and I desire to state in that connection that on the 21st day of December, 1916, before the question of new projects had been decided by the committee, I wrote a letter to the President of the United States, from which I shall quote a brief paragraph:

> I do not feel that I could conscientiously vote for another rivers and harbors bill appropriating $30,000,000 for the further improvement and upkeep of old projects, some of which have become obsolete, while others are not, in my opinion, worthy, and ignore such pressing needs as those detailed above.

The items "detailed above" refer to a concise statement of the various new projects reported by the Chief of Engineers in New York Harbor and its tributaries and New York State. That letter was printed in full in various New York papers, including the New York Sun, of January 2, 1917, and I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing that article therein. If that is the article to which the gentleman referred, I want to say to him that I stand by that article and the statement in that letter.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I was just going to say that that was my impression, but I could not say positively. I thank the gentleman because we are both agreed on that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK PROTESTS TO WILSON ON PORK—REPRESENTATIVE HULBERT URGES PRESIDENT TO ADVOCATE HARBOR PROJECTS HERE—TELLS OF UNITED STATES WASTE—COUNTRY'S GREATEST FORT NEGLECTED AND MONEY SQUANDERED IN OTHER PLACES.

Indignation at the pork appropriations of the rivers and harbors bill, which will authorize the expenditure of $30,000,000 on improvements mostly of local value in the South, while less than 2 per cent is appropriated to aid in the development of New York Harbor, the gateway to 50 per cent of the Nation's commerce, has caused GEORGE MURRAY HULBERT, Representative from the twenty-first district of New York, to send a vigorous protest to President Wilson.

Under the system of appropriating money for the improvement of rivers and harbors, Representative HULBERT pointed out yesterday, most of this year's funds will go to carry on what are known as continued projects, many of which he says are of doubtful value. The military value of the East River, which if deepened would give the United States what would amount to a Kiel Canal and make a blockade almost impossible. The commercial advantages to be derived from ridding the Hudson of the shoals which render valueless the city's $1,800,000 1,000-foot piers have all passed over the heads of the rivers and harbors committeemen, who apparently have more faith in the advantages to be gained by making improvements of local advantage in the South.

The whole present scheme of river and harbor improvement is wrong, Representative HULBERT believes.

"When the Army engineers have surveyed a project and approved it," he said, "only enough money is appropriated to carry on the work for a short time to get it under way. This causes delays and years when the construction halts altogether, and an inevitable wastage and general inefficiency result. Why, some improvement work has dragged on so long under the present archaic system that before the work was anywhere near completed it was abandoned, because it was seen that it had been overtaken and passed by modern needs. You can imagine how many millions this has cost the country.

NO BACKING FROM NEW YORK.

"It is easy to understand how the South gets these appropriations and just as easy to understand why New York does not. For years New York did not have representation on the Rivers and Harbors Committee; the southerners dominated it. When they wanted a thing they had the solid backing of their communities, while New Yorkers are too much interested in other things to give their Representatives the necessary driving power to get a thing through. That is why it takes years to get an appropriation to make the rivers navigable for the deep-draft ships that bring billions into the port of New York.

"Why, when a hearing was granted on this East River project—unfortunately it was on Lincoln's Birthday—I sent telegrams to the mayor, to business organizations, to various public officials and men interested in the development of the water front, and how many do you think showed up to get what they had been clamoring for? Not one. My only two witnesses were Admiral Benson and Col. Black.

"When the reclamation bill for the South came up I had telegrams and letters from banks and business men of all kinds in the city urging me to vote for it. Why? Because their correspondents in southern cities were for it to a man and demanded action. They are getting it.

RIVER SHOULD EASE CONGESTION.

"The people of New York have been talking about traffic congestion and figures have been offered to show that a person is killed in the streets every 12 hours and one injured every 24 minutes. Did they ever stop to think that nothing would aid in relieving the congestion of New York as much as the improvement of the East River from Third Street to Forty-second Street, so that the boats from Boston, Maine, and other eastern points could unload and load their cargoes at a point away from the points of congestion down town? Now, all that freight is landed there where the island is narrowest and then trucked through the city."

In his letter to the President, Mr. HULBERT says:

"DECEMBER 21, 1916.

"DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Less than 2 per cent of the $30,000,000 which the proposed rivers and harbors bill will carry is appropriated for the great harbor of New York and its tributaries.

"The improvement of the East River, under an antiquated plan adopted in 1868, was suspended 'as economically inadvisable' in 1912 when the project was only 63 per cent completed.

"No further appropriation can be made until the 35-foot channel recommended by the Secretary of War in 1912 is adopted as a new project.

"Meanwhile the commerce upon this 16-mile strait has increased in value from $1,500,000,000 in 1914 to over $4,000,000,000 in 1915, and I am reliably informed has further greatly increased in 1916.

NEW YORK'S NEW PIER.

"On the Hudson River the city of New York has recently constructed a new 1,000-foot pier and deepened the adjacent slips to 40 feet at Forty-fifth Street, and has planned the construction of other piers with a view to accommodating the largest transatlantic liners at this point instead of at Twenty-third Street, where the river is much narrower.

"But from Thirty-third Street to Fifty-sixth street there is a shoal on the Manhattan side of the river, over which approximately only 22 feet of water obtains, so that the pier already erected and the others to be constructed will not be available for the purpose intended until this shoal is removed.

"No appropriation can be made therefore until the adoption of the new project which has been recommended by the Secretary of War.

"Admiral Benson recently testified to the difficulties of navigating the U. S. S. Utah up the East River to the Brooklyn Navy Yard; that vessel is about 540 feet long.

"Battle cruisers authorized by the last naval appropriation bill will have a length of between 800 and 900 feet.

"Admiral Benson strenuously urges the improvement of Buttermilk Channel, separating Governors Island from the Brooklyn shore, recommended by the Secretary of War May 3, 1913.

NEW PROJECT MUST BE ADOPTED.

"But no appropriation can be made for this improvement until the adoption of the new project as recommended.

"In the same way, I might demonstrate the urgent necessity of taking on 'Upper Bay opposite Anchorage' recommended by the Secretary of War January 10, 1914; 'Craven Shoal,' recommended January 12, 1916; 'channel between Staten Island Sound and Hoffman Island,' recommended January 25, 1916; 'Bay Ridge and Red Hook Channel,' recommended March 25, 1914; 'Newtown Creek' (commerce valued at $150,000,000), recommended March 22, 1916; 'Westchester Creek' (commerce valued at $500,000), recommended December 10, 1915.

"The State of New York has constructed a Barge Canal at an expense of $160,000,000. The Secretary of War recommended two improvements in connection therewith, viz, Harlem or Bronx Kills (1902) and the Narrows of Lake Champlain in 1913.

"Boats passing through the Harlem River to the Barge Canal termini on Long Island must pass through Hell Gate. The Harlem Kills improvement would shorten the distance more than 5 miles and avoid the dangers and relieve the congestion in Hell Gate.

"Boats operating on the State Barge Canal, Champlain division, can not pass the Narrows (14 miles long), and freight to and from points on Lake Champlain and the St. Lawrence must be transferred at Whitehall.

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS NEEDED.

"No appropriations for these improvements can be made until the new projects recommended have been adopted.

"Ogdensburg Harbor is another imperative improvement.

"It is scarcely conceivable that it has a commerce valued at $50,000,000 per annum. There is also maintained at this point the only all-year ferry service to Canada west of Montreal.

"I do not feel that I could conscientiously vote for another rivers and harbors bill appropriating $30,000,000 for the further improvement and upkeep of old projects, some of which have become obsolete, while others are not in my opinion worthy, and ignore such pressing needs as those detailed above.

"It certainly does not seem to me to be equitable that only 2 per cent of the appropriation should be applied to the improvement of the harbor and its tributaries which accommodate more than 50 per cent of the commerce of the Nation.

"I hope, Mr. President, you will favor the adoption of such new projects as are imperatively needed and urge the inclusion of the New York Harbor items, inasmuch as they are national in character."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of presenting to the committee in all fairness the weight of the argument offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], who, if his side of the House is successful in the next Congress in organizing the House, will be the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I do not suppose that the gentleman could have followed the argument when he was criticising my report in the original talk we had upon the floor. I agree with the gentleman that any man who seeks to mislead this House has no right to the confidence of the House. I have given you here the money that has been expended on the Arkansas River. I have given you the money that has been expended on the Washita River, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] agree as to its abandonment or modification. I explained what little commerce has resulted. Let us see what he says in all fairness and his desire to take advantage of one who is seeking here alone on the floor of this House to expose waste in this bill. He, with others, continually jumps into the breach so as to show his indignation. Let us see what he said. I call on the RECORD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] agrees now that my statement was right in regard to himself. I would not misrepresent a single person or project on the floor of the House. There is nothing to gain by it. It is purely a question of project and not a question of personality. I speak of this because I am coming to the project to which all this is addressed, the Cumberland River, and you will get the force of it in a minute. I read now from page 4 of my minority views:

> Then we find a new project in the bill for $4,500,000 for the Cumberland River above Nashville, with an initial appropriation in the bill of $200,000, requiring over 20 years to complete. This is in addition to $3,282,500 already appropriated for the upper river in order to produce in 1915 about 37,000 tons of commerce, excluding sand hauled 9 miles and timber products. On this same river, the Cumberland below Nashville, the Government has further appropriated in past years $3,184,267, in addition to $632,000 more, contained in the pending bill to produce in 1915 just 16,374 tons of "commerce," excluding timber products and sand and gravel.

That is the report. The gentleman from North Carolina took the floor to say that that statement was not true in substance. What did he say? He took the rafted products, ignoring the statement giving the items as timber products, and I say as I said then that this item is exactly true from the Engineer's report. My report is correct in that particular. The Secretary is a fair and honorable young man and has followed me and checked me up in all these items. I am sure he has found no such error.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a question of the veracity of the gentleman or any other gentleman in the House but rather the fact that the report directly says that the benefit to be derived from such a project as the Cumberland River can not be secured until the completion of the various items? In other words, there are eight locks, I think it is, in the project now before us, and naturally is it not a fair statement that until these are all completed the real benefit from the project can not be secured? I think that is the point.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, that has no relation at all to this.

Mr. TREADWAY. It surely has relation to the merits of the project.

Mr. FREAR. It has no relation to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], who criticizes my report and said these statements were not correct. They were absolutely correct, according to the Engineer's report, because I checked them up immediately afterwards. Now, the gentleman criticizes me for telling half truths. I can not afford that, and neither can any man who wants to be fair, and I try to be fair. I have not made a single statement in regard to commerce, a single statement in regard to a project, that I did not believe to be just and square. I take that as illustrating the gentleman quoting me wrong, and this is not a question of rafting I was discussing. I was discussing here the very statement he was correcting me on—timber products. I will put it in the RECORD, if necessary, to confirm the statements made in this report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] says that he is entitled to the sympathy and cooperation of this House because he is standing alone——

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield? I never made such a statement.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if it were proper, I would like to have the stenographer read what the gentleman did say about standing alone here.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the stenographer will read.

Mr. SMALL. I understand he is not on the floor, but I would like to have him sent for to see who is right about this. The gentleman stated substantially that he was standing alone here defending, or whatever the words were he used, but, at any rate, that he was standing alone here exposing the faults, waste, extravagances, and stealings in this bill.

Mr. FREAR. I trust the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him for——

Mr. SMALL. I do not desire to yield.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman misquotes me.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield. I do not misquote him. I will ask the Chair whether he has sent for the stenographer?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman misquotes me right there.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must not interrupt the Member who has the floor without his consent.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I want the Chair to send for the stenographer and have those words repeated which he did say here. The gentleman from Wisconsin virtually states that he is the only gentleman in this House who has the honesty, the integrity, the sense of public duty to stand here and expose the iniquities in a bill reported by a committee of which he himself is a member, and in the formation of which bill he admits he took very little, if any, part, but consumed his time in preparing a minority report. And this gentleman says by reason of his peculiar fitness and qualifications that he is the only one who has the patriotism and the courage to stand up here and fight this bill. He admits that he is the only one, and upon that theory and that basis he goes before the country and the press as the only man of sufficient virtue and honesty to stand up here and contest a bill reported by a committee of which he was a member, a bill which he did not help to formulate and report, a member of the committee who, as he said upon the floor of this House, would not vote for the bill under any conditions. He would have us to believe that he is the only honorable Member of this House fitted to discharge this duty of public critic and conservator of public morals. And that is the answer the gentleman makes, Mr. Chairman, about the suggestion that in regard to items here he picks out a segregated statement and upon that attempts to reach a conclusion himself and have the House reach a conclusion that a certain proposition is without merit, and at the same time fails to tell all of the truth. That is the statement I made, and that is the statement I can prove; that is the statement I put to the country.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes of time?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I simply stated in regard to the report to show that the gentleman did not quote me correctly. He asked me what did I say. I certainly did not ask for sympathy. The gentleman says I am on this committee, and refused to take part in the proceedings and to support the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I have not the time or I would do so.

Mr. SMALL. I want to have the gentleman's statement read.

Mr. FREAR. Surely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the stenographer read certain extracts from the remarks of the gentleman. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will say that the matter is being written up.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we get a typewritten copy.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when the transcript be made it be brought into the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the matter is written up by the stenographer it be read by the Clerk from the desk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. The point I objected to was the quotation that the gentleman read into my remarks. I did not ask for sympathy. Of course, I said I stood alone. Why? Not because I had more ability nor because I had more integrity nor because I had more intelligence. But I have made some study of these matters, and am endeavoring to show the waste that has occurred in past years.

Some gentlemen on the committee did not want me to go on the committee, I have been advised. But I have made a study for the purpose of improving conditions, if I can, improving the character of the bill, and it was suggested by Members on the floor that I stand alone, but when the votes are counted I will not stand alone. We will not have as many votes as we had last time.

There are 80 new projects. They will diminish the vote materially; but I realize that I will not stand alone when this bill again comes up for passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will state that the matter has been transcribed by the Reporter and is in possession of the Clerk, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Let us see what he said in all fairness and his desire to take advantage of one who is seeking here alone on the floor of this House to expose this bill. He, with others, continually jumps into the breach, so as to show his indignation.

Mr. SMALL. That is the part to which I referred.

Mr. FREAR. I agree that is a correct statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read from the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cumberland River, Tenn. and Ky.: For maintenance above Nashville, $5,000; for improvement above Nashville in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 10, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $200,000; continuing improvement below Nashville, $632,000; in all, $837,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, beginning in line 19 at the end of the line, the words "for improvement," and on page 26 through the figures "$200,000." In other words, the new project.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, beginning on line 19, after the figures "$5,000," strike out the words "for improvement" and all of the paragraph down to and including "$200,000," on line 1, page 26.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the reason I make the motion is this: We have already improved the Cumberland River below Nashville to the extent, up to June 30, 1916, of $3,290,000. In the report of the engineer we find that the work is about 45 per cent completed. In other words, eventually the cost of the improvement below Nashville will be something over $7,000,000.

Now, that is a distinct project, previously adopted, for which I have more or less sympathy as to its merits, and further, what criticism may be addressed to it, in my opinion, hardly can hold, because in a lock-and-dam project we all know that until the completion of the entire project it is not fair to draw comparisons of handling of freight and the usual commercial statistics.

But I want to differentiate between that project and the new project which we are asked to take on now above Nashville. We are committing the Government to another lock-and-dam proposition which the engineers now estimate will cost $4,500,000.

Now, so far as I know, in my experience on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, a completed lock-and-dam project has not been brought forward. In other words, the whole system is an experiment. We have quite a number of them. The principal illustration, of course, is the enormous expenditure on the Ohio River, not yet completed. This one below Nashville is not yet completed. Let us go slow before we take on something which evidently, while it may have merit—I will not deny it has not, because I am not prepared to argue either way in that connection—nevertheless is not an emergency, and we should not undertake this work at the present time and in the present condition of the Treasury.

Let us wait before we get into this new one, costing, as it will, as is estimated, $4,500,000, or undoubtedly five or six millions before we get through. Let us see what the result is to be on the Ohio River, or what it is to be on the lower Cumberland, and these various other lock-and-dam projects. We do not need to have too many experiments going on at the same time. And that is what we are going to do when we take on this new project—experimenting still further as to the merits of the lock-and-dam proposition.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I concede the best of motives to my friend from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, in making a motion to strike out this clause of the bill. I am very much surprised, however, in view of the actual facts pertaining to this project, that the gentleman from Massachusetts feels constrained to make the motion. The truth is, instead of being a new project, this project is 30 years old. It was recommended favorably by the Department of Engineers in 1886.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am coming to the period when it was temporarily discontinued.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not true that it is a new project as to having been adopted in the river and harbor bill under the definition of what is known as a new project?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Not under what we know as a new project, except very technically. This project was favorably reported by the Department of Engineers to Congress from 1886, the entire 20 years following, until 1906. I take it that there is not a project in this bill that has been more closely scrutinized by every engineer connected with the Cumberland River, from the district engineer and the division engineer and the Board of Engineers, to the Chief of Engineers, than this project. In 1906 the shippers who originally made the reports of commerce had grown old, and many of them had died, and new ones neglected to report the commerce. The result was that suddenly this project was directed to be temporarily discontinued. A complete investigation of the facts as to the commerce followed, with the result that the district engineer, the division engineer, the Chief of Engineers, and the Board of Engineers recommended that this old project be continued until completion.

Now, the facts are, Mr. Chairman, that practically the same reason exists in favor of continuing this improvement that would exist in favor of building a railroad contemplated to be built into an immense timber and coal region which could not be developed until the road was completed to that locality. It would be as futile to stop the construction of such railroad when it got within sight of the country which was to furnish to it the chief commerce, as to discontinue this project when the locks and dams constructed have simply reached the gateway of a great undeveloped coal and timber and oil and agricultural region, 200 miles in length and 85 to 125 miles in width, which has been literally bottled up for a hundred years, and which, if opened by slack-water navigation, according to the testimony of business men and engineers who have made a personal inspection of it, would enable the States on the lower Cumberland, the lower Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Gulf ports, to receive all the coal and the hardwood timber that they would need for a generation.

Now I submit, Mr. Chairman, that 30 years ago, when Congress and the Department of Engineers turned to this river, which is 500 miles of navigable stream, 200 of which passes through this undeveloped section without transportation facilities, the chief object they had in view was to open up this undeveloped section which was to be depended on to furnish the chief commerce for the lower river. This project rests, therefore, not only on the ground that it is one of the oldest in the bill and has received the approval of all the engineers in the service and of Congress more frequenty than almost any other project in the bill, but it rests on the further ground that it is an uncompleted project, and we can not hope to develop the real commerce of that river until it is completed. Then it rests upon the further ground that this section is utterly bottled up, and that this is the only method of egress.

A very able Member of another body nearly three years ago, without understanding all the facts, made a very violent assault upon this project, and yet when he discovered the true facts, he rose in his place and frankly admitted that this project was in fact entitled to immediate improvement.

Now, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] suggests that there is no urgency in this project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that there is no urgency in regard to the resumption and continuance of this up-river improvement. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that there is the greatest urgency. I remember that during last fall there was a coal famine throughout the lower Cumberland River section, along the railroads even, when the people were utterly unable to secure coal on account of freight congestion all over the country. If the river had been open to navigation the people throughout the lower Cumberland and Tennessee and Ohio and Mississippi Valleys would have had the most ample supply of coal at the lowest possible prices. Then to say that this great undeveloped section, that these unlimited undeveloped resources, now bottled up and impossible of development—to say that that is not an emergency would indicate to my mind that it would be impossible to find an emergency river and harbor project.

Those are the chief outstanding facts in connection with this matter. Some other gentlemen on the upper and lower river will doubtless desire to consume a few minutes, and with this statement I submit to the candid judgment of the committee that the small sum of $200,000, merely to commence one lock, while the lower river is now approaching completion, so far as the appropriations are concerned, fits in precisely with the recommendations of the engineers who at times have questioned the immediate improvement of the upper river, but in the same connection stated that as the completion of the lower river was approached it would be proper to proceed with the completion of the upper river. This item should be $350,000, as recommended by the engineers.

To show a faint insight into the boundless commercial possibilities of the upper Cumberland, I read a letter recently received from Mr. O. H. Anderson, president of Oneida & Western Railroad Co., as follows:

ONEIDA, TENN., January 15, 1917.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE HULL: I am familiar with the territory traversed by the Cumberland River from Burnside, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., and have made a study of the natural resources of this territory, and can say that the territory between Lock 8 on the Cumberland River and Burnside is possibly the finest area of hardwood timber east of the Mississippi River. This territory is from 75 to 125 miles in width, without transportation facilities of any kind save for the tides in the river during the winter and spring of each year.

The coal fields situated on the south and east of the river in Scott, Pickett, and Fentress Counties are undeveloped and will remain so unless it is possible to get slack-water navigation on the river. I am now engaged in building a railroad west from Oneida, Tenn., through Fentress and Pickett Counties in the direction of the Cumberland River, and expect ultimately to complete this road to a point on the river in the heart of this territory.

We have opened up a seam of coal in Fentress County 4 feet 6 inches in thickness without a parting, and if the road was completed to the river and we had slack-water navigation all of the States bordering on Cumberland River, the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and tributaries that are navigable, could be supplied from this source with coal, timber, and other resources, and could be supplied a great deal more cheaply than is possible from any other section of the country. We have tested out 6,000 acres of coal lands and find it underlain with this seam of coal, and we are certain that at least 40,000 acres along the line of this road contain this seam of coal. The reports made by the geologists of the State of Tennessee and the surveys made by the Government failed to disclose the fact that this vast territory is underlain with coal, and for this reason many prospective coal men have been deterred from making a sufficient investigation.

We certainly hope that you will be able to secure legislation during this session of Congress that will enable us to develop this vast region as it should be developed. As you are aware, a large portion of this territory produces oil in paying quantities, and it is only a question of time until the development will be made, with proper transportation facilities.

Yours, very truly,

O. H. ANDERSON,
President Oneida & Western Railroad Co.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it is not often that I take part in a matter of this kind, where I am not on the committee, and have not, of course, as accurate knowledge as the members of the committee may have about the project. But I want to say about this particular appropriation that I do have some personal and, I believe, accurate knowledge. The Cumberland River is improved from Nashville northward for about 115 to 125 miles. There is a considerable trade on it, and there has been developed, by reason of these river improvements, a large area of territory. A railroad has gone up that far, which has developed the territory more. Now, from a point on the railroad called Cookeville north to the Kentucky line there is no means of transportation at all except this river. They have no railroad transportation at all now in that great country included in Clay, and Pickett, and Fentress, Jackson, Overton, and other counties up there in that vicinity along the banks of this river. They have no other transportation except the river. If the river is opened up there, it would develop a very large territory. It is a part of the present project. Although it is called, I believe, by the experts, a new project, really it is a part of the present project. It is just a development of the present project, and it is more necessary than improvements lower down on the river, if that is possible, for this reason, that lower down on the river they have railroad transportation. Higher, and especially through Clay County, they have no transportation, and they have to haul with wagons and trucks all through that country.

I want to say that I have been all over that country. I went over it in a Ford. I am familiar with it. I went right along the banks of the river for many miles. It is one of the richest portions of our country. It is a beautiful and picturesque country. Richer or more productive lands can not be found anywhere, and these people are as fine as there are in the world.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say he went down the river in a Ford?

Mr. McKELLAR. I went both up and down the banks of the river in a Ford. I did not try the Ford on the river. It was not Salt River, either.

I want to say to the House, speaking seriously about it, that this is a very worthy project. They have productive farm lands and coal lands. It is a rich soil. They raise corn and wheat and potatoes and hogs and everything that can be raised in this country of ours, almost. All that they lack is transportation. Their best and easiest method of transportation is through this river that has been improved within just a few miles of where it will do them the most good, and it ought to be improved up to the Kentucky line. A large territory would be served and developed.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman, Are there any railroads that tap this section of Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a railroad that goes through from Nashville to Knoxville, known as the Tennessee Central, but it does not tap this section of the country. The only means of ingress and egress is by team, or, when the weather is good, by automobiles. But ordinarily, under usual conditions of weather, they have to haul all of their truck out of there by team, and they have to haul in with teams all that they buy. Now, there is no reason in the world for that condition of affairs. This is just a gap between projects that have already been undertaken. I believe, so far as I know, it is more necessary than any other project that is in this bill. In my judgment, if we were to omit anything from the bill, we could omit any other project better than we could this. The district engineer reported in favor of it. The division engineer reported against it. Then a lot of gentlemen went before this board and presented the matter, and the board reversed itself, so the project has been put in the bill, and it should remain in the bill. I am sure if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] was familiar with the situation as we are down there, and as the Congressman from that district [Mr. HULL of Tennessee] is, who knows about the matter personally, and like all of those people who appeared before the board and who know the situation, the gentleman would not press his amendment to strike this out. It is one of the most deserving projects in the bill, and I hope the House will permit it to stay in. It is a small appropriation, comparatively speaking, but it is due the people of that part of our State to have some method of transportation better than they now have. This river is there. It can be improved, and in my judgment it ought to be improved, and I hope the motion of the gentleman to strike it out will not prevail, and I hope my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] will not press his objections.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, the river and harbor bill now under consideration carries a provision of much interest and great importance to the whole State of Kentucky, and especially that portion of Kentucky which lies in the congressional district I have the honor to represent. I refer to that provision which indorses the expenditure of four and one-half million dollars for the complete canalization of the upper Cumberland River from Burnside, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., and which makes immediately available for that purpose the sum of $200,000. Mr. Chairman, I have long since learned to respect and value the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who has made a motion to strike out this item from the bill. But he is not conversant with the facts, as I shall proceed to show. He does not understand the situation. Of course, his motion will not prevail.

I hope this sum of $200,000 will be increased in the Senate, so that at least a part of the sum as increased may be used in purchasing four lock and dam sites in the State of Tennessee and six or eight in the State of Kentucky. When these sites are selected and locks and dams built thereon, it will complete the canalization of the entire upper Cumberland from Nashville to Burnside. There are now seven locks and dams in the Cumberland River, in the State of Tennessee, above Nashville, and a site already selected for the eighth lock and dam. On the Kentucky side we have but one lock and dam, namely, Lock and Dam 21, 30 miles below Burnside, Ky. The sites for all the new locks and dams on the Kentucky side will have to be selected and paid for.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR LOCK 21.

In the political campaigns down in the eleventh congressional district of Kentucky there has been much contention as to whether credit is due to former Congressman D. C. Edwards or former Congressman Dr. W. Godfrey Hunter for Lock and Dam No. 21 below Burnside.

Away back in 1882 Congress made provision for a survey of the upper Cumberland River to determine the feasibility and cost of improving it from Nashville, Tenn., to Burnside, Ky. The report of this survey also included the improvement of the Cumberland River to Smith Shoals above Burnside, Ky. The entire project, as later revised, provided for the construction of 28 locks and dams, also a minimum depth of 6 feet in the river for the entire distance from Nashville, Tenn., to the proposed head of navigation, a distance of 357 miles. This was approved by Congress, and work on this project was commenced in 1888 and was continued at intervals up to February 26, 1906, when the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommended that the work on the locks and dams already begun should be completed and that the rest of the project should be discontinued.

Locks 1 and 2, on the Tennessee side, had at that time been completed, while Lock 21, on the Kentucky side, and Locks 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on the Tennessee side, were under construction. Since February 26, 1906, Lock 21, on the Kentucky side, and Locks 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on the Tennessee side, have been completed, but it must be remembered that on February 26, 1906, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors said that they would not recommend any more money for any further improvement on the upper Cumberland River, either on the Kentucky or the Tennessee side, except to complete the locks and dams already begun. That there can be no chance of inaccuracy, I quote the following from House Document No. 10, Sixty-third Congress, second session:

> On February 26, 1906, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, after visiting the river and holding hearings to obtain full information, submitted a report (printed as H. Doc. No. 699, 59th Cong., 1st sess.), from which the following is quoted: "The board is of the opinion that the regulation of the river and * * * the completion of Locks and Dams Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, above Nashville, * * * is worthy of being continued by the United States, but that the construction of the locks and dams proposed between Carthage and Burnside, except No. 21, now under contract, is not at present justified by the commerce involved."

This shows that I am not mistaken in the statements I have made. This report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, made on February 26, 1906, put the upper Cumberland River on the "bum," so to speak, and not a single cent of money has been expended since that day, except on Lock 21, for the buying of a single site for any other lock and dam in the Cumberland River on the Kentucky side, nor the appropriation of a single cent for the construction of one.

Congressman D. C. Edwards entered Congress on March 4, 1905, and remained in Congress for six years, or until March 4, 1911, when I succeeded him. He had been in Congress a few days less than one year, when the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, on February 26, 1906, reversed the policy of constructing enough locks and dams in the Cumberland River (28 in number) to make the river navigable the year round from Nashville, Tenn., to Burnside, Ky.

Mr. Edwards was a Member of Congress for six years. His first term began on March 4, 1905, and his last term ended on March 4, 1911. Dr. W. Godfrey Hunter was the man in Congress just prior to the first term of Mr. Edwards. Dr. Hunter became a Member of Congress on March 4, 1903, and continued in Congress for two years, or until March 4, 1905, when Mr. Edwards succeeded him. It was Dr. Hunter who succeeded in inducing the Fifty-eighth Congress to begin the improvement of the upper Cumberland below Burnside by appropriating $74,000 for this purpose. Dr. Hunter was a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress, while Mr. Edwards was a Member of the Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty-first Congresses. So, in the Fifty-eighth Congress $74,000 was appropriated by Congress to locate and begin the construction of Lock 21, below Burnside, Ky. The rivers and harbors bill, carrying an appropriation of $74,000, became a law on March 3, 1905, before Mr. Edwards became a Member of Congress. Then, to Dr. W. Godfrey Hunter is due the credit of securing the first $74,000 to begin the construction of Lock and Dam 21. On June 3, 1906, March 4, 1907, and June 25, 1910, Congressman Edwards secured $120,000, $30,000, and $85,000, respectively, to help complete Lock and Dam 21.

It has been the policy of the Government to begin at the mouth of the river and build locks and dams from the mouth up, and not from the head down. This accounts for the fact that, while the Government in 1882 decided upon the policy of improving and canalizing the entire upper Cumberland and adhered steadfastly to that policy for a quarter of a century, no Member of Congress from the eleventh congressional district of Kentucky was able to get any money appropriated to begin building locks and dams at the upper end of the river below Burnside, Ky.; and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the eleventh congressional district during all this time was represented by a Republican Representative, and notwithstanding the further fact that during the last 16 years of this period, or down to March 4, 1911, the Republican Party was in power in the Nation, with Republican Presidents in the White House, supported by Republican Congresses.

During the Republican rule Democratic Members of Congress from the State of Tennessee had gotten from Republican Congresses appropriations sufficient to build and construct Locks and Dams 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 in the Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn. These appropriations, all told, will amount, in round numbers, to $3,000,000. Republican Members of Congress from the eleventh congressional district were just as able men as those from the State of Tennessee and just as faithful to their trusts; but they were unable to induce the Government to break its precedent and policy of improving its navigable rivers from the mouth up and not from the head down, and it remained for Dr. W. Godfrey Hunter to break this precedent.

WHAT HAD TO BE DONE TO SECURE APPROPRIATIONS.

It is an impossible task to get Congress to make an appropriation to build a lock and dam in any stream unless the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers of the Army recommend such construction. On February 26, 1906, they said in a report that the commerce in the upper Cumberland was not sufficient to justify the Government in expending more money in constructing locks and dams in the upper Cumberland on the Kentucky side except to complete Lock and Dam 21, as I have heretofore pointed out. This report of February 26, 1906, was made during the first year of Congressman Edwards's first term in Congress, and during the remaining five years he was a Member of the House he was unable to get the Government to reverse itself. He was unable to get any money appropriated to start any new locks and dams in the upper Cumberland, although he worked hard and faithfully to that end. It was a difficult thing to do.

When I became a Member of Congress on March 4, 1911, I found the upper Cumberland still under the ban, the Government refusing to start any new locks and dams there. All those conversant with the situation and interested in the canalization of the upper Cumberland knew that we never would get Congress to appropriate any more money for the purpose unless we could get a favorable report from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to that effect. Realizing our dilemma, those interested in the improvement of the upper Cumberland set to work to see if they could get the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to reverse itself and report favorably instead of adversely upon the further canalization of the upper Cumberland. The first logical step in this matter was the introduction of a resolution before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, and accordingly the following resolution was introduced before and passed by that body:

Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, created under section 3 of the river and harbor act, approved June 13, 1902, be requested to reconsider its previous reports on Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn., and to make a further report with recommendation as to the desirability at the present time of constructing one or more locks and dams above Lock No. 7.

On December 5, 1912, the said board granted a hearing here in Washington to those interested in the canalization of the upper Cumberland, and Congressman CORDELL HULL, who represents the Tennessee district on the Cumberland River just south of the Kentucky boundary line, myself, and others appeared before that board and made arguments for the complete canalization of the upper Cumberland from Burnside, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn. We urged that the commerce in the upper Cumberland and the isolation of our people from railroads and the lack of transportation facilities fully justified the Government in spending the money to improve and canalize this stream. We asked for a new survey of the upper Cumberland.

The board granted our request and instructed the local engineer, Maj. Burgess, who is stationed at Nashville, Tenn., to make a complete survey of the upper Cumberland from Burnside, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., which he did, making his report on December 30, 1913. Maj. Burgess made a most thorough and exhaustive examination of the advisability of a complete canalization of the Cumberland River between those two points and reported favorably on that project. He estimated that it would cost the Government $4,500,000 to complete the canalization of the upper Cumberland from Burnside, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn.; that four new sites for locks and dams would have to be secured on the Tennessee side and six or eight on the Kentucky side, and that to purchase these sites and construct the necessary locks and dams would cost about $4,500,000, and that it ought to be done at the expense of the Government.

The division engineer differed from Maj. Burgess, the local engineer, in this: The division engineer recommended that the canalization of the upper Cumberland ought not to be undertaken by the Federal Government unless the State of Kentucky and the State of Tennessee would undertake to pay half of the expense of it, or, in other words, $2,225,000. Those interested in the canalization of the upper Cumberland knew that the States of Kentucky and Tennessee would never do this, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors on January 28, 1914, kindly granted us a hearing on this proposition. A pretty complete delegation of Senators and Members of Congress, both from the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, appeared before the board on that date and made arguments in favor of the complete canalization of the upper Cumberland at Government expense. I am one of those who made an argument upon that occasion. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, after hearing the arguments made before it, recommended to the Chief of Engineers of the Army that the entire upper Cumberland be locked and dammed at Government expense.

On February 4, 1914, in making his report to Hon. STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of which I was a member, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army said:

After due consideration of all the facts available I concur with the views of the district officer and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. The first appropriation should be $340,000, for securing all lock and dam sites and for beginning construction of Lock and Dam No. 8, with contract authorization for $201,000, covering the completion of this lock and dam. Subsequent appropriations should be sufficient to permit the beginning of construction of two additional locks and dams each year.

We incorporated in the rivers and harbors bill of 1914 the item of $340,000 to buy the remaining sites and properly begin the complete canalization of the upper Cumberland. We passed that bill through the House, but a filibuster killed it in the Senate. There has been included an item of $200,000 in the bill we are now considering, "for improvement of the Cumberland River above Nashville in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 10, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document."

I have every confidence that this item in the bill will be passed by this House. Should it pass the Senate, be approved by the President, and become a law, the policy of the complete canalization of the upper Cumberland will be indorsed by the Government, and it will be only a question of time when the entire upper Cumberland will be locked and dammed. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as well as the Chief of Engineers of the Army, recommend that after this year the Government undertake to construct each year thereafter one additional lock and dam in the upper end of the river below Lock 21, and one in the lower end of the river above Lock 8, so in a few years this work will be completed, if this bill becomes a law, and the people in the counties along the Cumberland River from Burnside to Nashville will realize their dreams of over a quarter of a century.

We feel that we are justly entitled to this. On February 4, 1914, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors said in its report:

Data now available indicate that there is a commerce on the upper Cumberland amounting to about 300,000 tons, which is considerably more than heretofore reported.

When we consider the fact that boats are able to run on the greater portion of the upper Cumberland only four or five months out of the year, the wonder is that our commerce reaches 300,000 tons annually.

On the Kentucky side, below Burnside, the Cumberland River runs through or close to the counties of Pulaski, Wayne, Clinton, Cumberland, Russell, and Monroe. Taking the counties as a whole, their wealth consists largely in timber and coal. Coal constitutes no part and timber but a small part of the present commerce on the upper Cumberland.

The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in their report of February 4, 1914, to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, made this statement:

A large part of this area is covered with timber of high value within hauling distance of the river, but under the existing uncertainties of navigation it can not be economically marketed. Much of the land in the valley and back in the hills is fertile but can not be cultivated to advantage for the same reason. There are also extensive coal lands that can be made tributary to the upper reaches of the river by short rail connections, and it is claimed that these lands will be developed and that coal will be shipped out in large quantities.

This tells the story. It explains why our commerce is no larger than it is. It emphasizes the need of the canalization of this river in order to reach a market with our products.

According to the census of 1910 there were 283,200 acres of standing timber in Clinton County and 51,367 acres of woodland. Cumberland County had 185,760 acres of standing timber and 95,341 acres of woodland. Monroe County had 86,945 acres of standing timber. Russell County had 80,666 acres. Wayne County had 17,818 acres of forest lands. This timber is virtually all there yet. It coustitutes a part of the greatest boundary east of the Mississippi River of hardwood timber in this country, such as poplar, oak, walnut, cedar, chestnut, hickory, ash, and other valuable hardwood timbers.

All of the counties with possibly one exception is rich in coal.

Hon. W. A. Dicken, of Albany, Ky., a safe banker and conservative man, wrote me some time ago about coal lands in Clinton County. He said:

We estimate the number of acres of coal lands in Clinton County to be 12,500; average thickness of veins, 4 feet. The coal in this county is of good quality.

And so, gentlemen, with the other counties.

THE WEALTH OF LOWER COUNTIES.

But objection has been raised that the population of these counties have not increased much within the last 20 years and that, judging from the assessed value of their property, they are very poor. It is true that their population has not increased very rapidly. From 1890 to 1910, the population of Clinton County, for example, increased only from 7,000 to 8,153, and this, too, for the simple reason that they have been cut off from the outside world. It is true that they are rich in a certain sense, but their riches have not been given in at much. Why should it be? What is their coal and timber worth to them except to pay taxes on? What is their agriculture products worth to them except to subsist upon? It is a lamentable situation. If you will give these people ample transportation facilities, they will tell you a different story. I was reared on Brush Creek, up in Knox County. I remember when there was not a foot of railroad in that county or any of the adjoining counties. All these counties were rich in coal, but it was worth nothing to the owners, because they could not get it to market.

Brush Creek Valley comprises an area of over 10,000 acres. The creek is about 15 miles long. Many, many years ago one man owned all this territory. As part of the folklore of that neighborhood it is handed down to us that the former owner of this now princely domain sold the entire territory for a bedquilt and a rifle gun. I can remember when this land sold for less than $5 per acre. It is one of the richest coal fields in Knox County. A railroad has been built to it. When leased at 10 cents a ton royalty, each acre of this land brings the owner about $1,000 in royalties. Most of this territory has been bought up by coal mining companies. It is to-day worth millions, with coal mining operations scattered all over it. Bell County adjoins Knox. I was virtually grown when the first railroad ran into that county. In 1900 Bell County's population was 15,701; in 1910 it was 28,447. It virtually doubled in 10 years. Bell County now produces more coal than any other county in the State of Kentucky. Her output last year was over 3,000,000 tons, or one-eighth of the entire output in the whole State.

Kentucky now stands fifth in the coal-producing States of the Union. Eastern Kentucky has 10,270 square miles of bituminous coal territory. Western Kentucky 6,400 square miles. The entire State of Pennsylvania has only 14,200 square miles. We have more square miles of bituminous coal territory in Kentucky than in the State of Pennsylvania, yet Pennsylvania in 1912 produced 160,000,000 tons of bituminous coal; Kentucky produced only 16,000,000. Why is this? The answer is transportation facilities. What has caused the lands on Brush Creek in Knox County in my time to increase from $5 per acre to over $100 per acre? The answer is transportation facilities.

What will cause both the population and the wealth of the counties of Wayne, Clinton, Cumberland, Russell, and Monroe to double themselves, as has been done in the county of Bell?

The answer comes back transportation facilities. These people are cut off from the outside world. There is a territory there in Kentucky and Tennessee as big as the State of Connecticut without a foot of railroad in it. They have neither railroad transportation nor water transportation. They would not be asking you through their Representative here for water transportation if they had transportation by rail. It has been the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and of this House and of Congress, to appropriate money on streams that have railroads going up and down either bank, and this Congress is still doing it. I voted for those things when I was on the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I voted for one in the State of California. I voted for others. I did it because I felt that the projects were worthy, and that the expenditure of the money was amply justified. If this Congress expends the money of the country on streams that have railroads going up and down either bank, if that is justifiable—and the Congress has taken the position heretofore that it is—how much more justifiable is it to spend money on streams that have absolutely no transportation either by water or by rail?

Mr. Chairman, ours is a deserving people. Wayne County has produced her Shelby M. Cullom, late a United States Senator from the State of Illinois. Clinton county nursed at her breast Gov. McMillan, of Tennessee, as well as Gov. Bramlette, of Kentucky. Monroe County claims the unique distinction of having furnished in the person of one man, Preston H. Leslie, a governor for two States. The people of southeastern Kentucky, these among them, are the greatest and purest reservoir of old Anglo-Saxon in this country.

Gentlemen, the justice of the cause of the people of the upper Cumberland are demanding an appropriation at your hands. I am relying upon your sense of fairness and your love of justice to give it to them. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], because it occurs to me, with all due respect to the distinguished gentlemen who are supporting this measure, that it is wasteful. That is the only question with most of these propositions, and I recognize that there is a difference of opinion between those who are supporting and those who are opposing the different projects. I realize also the interest that is shown in this project, and that has been shown by very distinguished gentlemen who appear in the report urging the adoption of the project. After the Army engineers had refused, again they withdrew from that position. Now, what was true 30 years ago in regard to conditions in this country, I submit, is different to-day, and I want to quote the opinion of a man who I think is an authority on this subject. As I said, it is purely a question of judgment.

Senator Burton said on the floor of the Senate—not in this particular case—

The waste which has been incurred in canalization of rivers by the expensive system of locks and dams has been even worse than the improvement of open-channel rivers, the navigation of which has dwindled to such small proportions.

I just read a few moments ago a statement of Col. Townsend who said that we ought to stop work on all of these rivers in the Mississippi Valley, with two exceptions, until we have made two practical going propositions. I am not quoting his exact words.

I understand, of course, that in a case like the Cumberland River there is a break in the channel caused by this lack of development, but in the Mississippi River, without a break from St. Paul clear down to New Orleans, we could not get the commerce there, because the moment that commerce develops a railroad is immediately constructed and carries away the tonnage. That is quite true of almost every river I can think of. That is our experience with some of these other rivers. Thirty years ago it was looked upon as a big improvement, like the Hennepin Canal and the Big Sandy, but to-day we find there is no commerce to go on those rivers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the gentleman think that after the river projects have been completed and the country developed it is natural for railroads to go there; but do not the people get the benefit of it in the reduced rates on the railroad?

Mr. FREAR. That is the difficulty with the whole thing. They are trying to use the Government and the Government's money for the express purpose of securing a reduction of freight rates, when, as a matter of fact, I understand to-day they are seeking to raise railroad rates in order to enable the railroads to make a resonable profit. In practically every State the railroad commission has the power to regulate rates. It ought not to be necessary for the Government to go in and develop these projects in order to reduce railroad rates.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman is not contending that the reduction of railroad rates enters into this item?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; I was just answering the gentleman from Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am always glad to have this project come up because it compels some able Members of the House to come here while we are discussing the river and harbor bill, and they always enlighten the House.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I want to say that I appeared before the gentleman's committee, but the gentleman from Wisconsin was not present.

Mr. FREAR. I sincerely regret it. I am always delighted to hear the gentleman from Tennessee. I have heard him make several good speeches in the House, but not on the river and harbor bill, and I enjoyed them very much. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is one of the reasons I oppose these projects, because my experience is that results are not what we hoped they would be. We spend enormous sums of money without realizing reasonable results. That is the waste of which the country has right to complain.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the existing project for the improvement of the Cumberland River was adopted more than 30 years ago, so far as the upper part of the river is concerned. The project on the lower river was adopted in 1892, and there have been no modifications of these projects except by elimination of one or two of the locks and dams which were originally proposed.

Under that project the Cumberland River was divided into two parts—what is known as the upper and lower river, the dividing line being at Nashville, Tenn. There have been constructed eight locks and dams in the upper part of the river, beginning at Nashville, Lock 21 being at Burnside, more than 300 miles above Nashville.

In the lower river one lock and dam was completed several years ago, and recently two additional locks and dams have been completed and another is nearing completion. The appropriation made last year was sufficient to enable the Government to begin the construction of Locks E and F, and that appropriation, with the appropriation in this bill, will almost entirely complete the canalization of the lower river. Notwithstanding this fact, notwithstanding the fact that as a result of the action of Congress we have a great slack-water canal there situated almost midway of the navigable portion of the river, but which does not reach the great territory in the upper part of the river so rich in coal and timber products, the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Wisconsin would have Congress abandon the work and not carry out the project as originally planned by the engineers and by various Congresses extending over a period of 30 years, and thus not give to that section and the country the advantages which were originally contemplated.

Mention has been made of the rich territory contiguous to the upper Cumberland River. I dare say there is no section of the country which is more fertile and more capable of high development than the Cumberland River Valley, through which this great river flows. The land will produce any crop grown in the Temperate Zone. No section of country offers better advantages for stock raising and other farm activities. Mention has been made of the great coal fields that exist on the upper part of the river and the abundance of forest products which would be available if there were any means of transportation.

As has been stated, railroads do not penetrate and can not penetrate this section, and the only method by which this coal and timber can be secured for the benefit of the people of the country is by way of this river.

I dare say there is no section of the country, Mr. Chairman—certainly very few—which are richer in coal than the upper Cumberland River, and if this appropriation of $200,000 is made to begin the construction of Lock 8 it will begin the work of making this river available as an outlet for all the coal and timber products and the rich agricultural products in that valley.

In the letter read by my colleague [Mr. HULL] the statement is made that the coal fields situated on the southeast of the river in Scott, Pickett, and Fentress Counties are undeveloped, and will remain so unless it is possible to get slack-water navigation on the river.

The gentleman writing this letter states that he is now engaged in building a railroad west from Oneida, Tenn., through Fentress and Pickett Counties in the direction of the Cumberland River, and that he expects ultimately to complete this road to a point in the river in the heart of this territory. He further states:

> We have opened up a seam of coal in Fentress County 4 feet and 6 inches in thickness without a parting, and if the road was completed to the river and we had slack-water navigation all of the States bordering on the Cumberland River, the Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers and tributaries that are navigable, could be supplied from this source with coal, timber, and other resources and could be supplied a great deal more cheaply than is possible from any other section of the country. We have tested out 6,000 acres of coal lands and find it underlaid with this seam of coal and we are certain that at least 40,000 along the line of this road contains this seam of coal.

He is building the road from these rich coal fields toward the river, but there must be a river navigable all the year round if this coal is to find its way to the markets of the country.

As showing the interest taken in the improvement of this river and its importance from a commercial standpoint, I wish to read a part of an editorial which appeared the other day in the Nashville Banner, one of the leading and most influential papers in the entire South. This editorial says:

> Busy scenes are being enacted at the Broad Street wharf during these days of flood tide in the Cumberland River, remindful of the time when the Cumberland took a much more conspicuous part in the trade with the sections which it connects with Nashville. The high water has lifted the prows of the steamboats to a point only a few feet below the level of the street, and the wharves are packed with cargoes for shipment. It is announced that the Alabama, a large steamer, has been brought to this city for service on the lower Cumberland. All boats plying on the Cumberland with Nashville as headquarters report a boom in business.
> The decadence of the river transportation business has been lamented most earnestly by the business men of this city. More than once Nashville has been threatened with the loss of a favorable freight rate because of the limited traffic brought here by water. Such busy scenes as now prevail at the wharf would convince any unprejudiced visitor of the importance of the river trade and of the competition which it furnishes for railroad transportation.
> It is a matter of congratulation that the Cumberland River has been provided for in the appropriation bill. The extension of the locks and dams will in time provide transportation all the year around along several hundred miles of the Cumberland above and below Nashville. While the big river steamers will not be able at all seasons to push their noses almost into Broad Street as at present, they will be able to carry a steady traffic up and down the Cumberland, thence up and down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, reaching the largest commercial centers, and to the enrichment of communities without other means of freight connection with the outside world, and thus bring added prosperity to Nashville's commercial life.

So I say, gentlemen, that, looking at the whole situation and knowing as I do the richness of this great section which is penetrated by the Cumberland River, there is, I am sure, not an appropriation in this bill which is more meritorious than that recommended looking to completing the improvements on the upper and lower Cumberland River. This is not a new project, because this project was started more than 30 years ago. Congress has already constructed locks which have resulted in stock water navigation extending 125 miles above Nashville.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I call his attention to the fact that that railroad company has already expended $800,000 in constructing 20 miles of road toward the Cumberland River through this section, and would spend probably $1,000,000 more to get it to the river. They are depending upon slack-water navigation to develop that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the statement. His statement is convincing as to the necessity for making these improvements.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], it seems to me, in some of his attacks upon various proposals in this bill has proceeded upon a wrong theory. He has proceeded upon the idea that no improvement should be undertaken unless the commerce already in existence fully justifies it. He has ignored the effect which such improvements will have in developing commerce by affording a cheap and certain outlet to the markets of the world in cases like this, where railroad facilities are inadequate or totally lacking. I submit these improvements are expected to develop commerce, and certainly no gentleman who is familiar with the territory through which the Cumberland River flows can doubt for one moment that when this river is fully improved it will greatly increase commerce. It is unreasonable to expect that boats will be put into commission upon a river where there is not all-the-year-round navigation. There is another reason for the improvement of this particular river, a reason which obtains as to all these various improvements.

and I want to take a moment of your time to refer to the report of the engineer upon the question of freight rates.

I have stated to you that in so far as this river is concerned we have at present a great slack-water channel of about 150 or 160 miles, affording all-the-year navigation. But both above and below it there are several months in the year when boats of reasonable size can not be operated. The engineer states in regard to the upper Cumberland that the completion of Lock 21, which is more than 300 miles above Nashville, has caused a reduction in freight rates of about one-half within its pool area:

Locks Nos. 1 to 7 have caused a reduction in railroad freight rates between Nashville and Carthage, 115.8 miles, and in river freight rates between Nashville and West Point, 125.2 miles.

The same is true with reference to the improvement on the lower Cumberland River. The engineer states:

The work on Locks B, C, and D will not facilitate navigation until the locks and dams are completed and placed in operation; nor can it be expected that the lower Cumberland River will be continuously navigable until the two remaining locks and dams have been completed. Nevertheless, even in its present condition, the lower Cumberland River has a marked effect on railroad freight rates, and the navigable facilities offered by this stream are undoubtedly responsible for the favorable freight rates which Nashville has been granted, as compared with rates between towns not connected by a navigable waterway. The effect of the continuous navigation provided by the canalization for the 41.4 miles below Nashville was noted from the immediate reduction by about 50 per cent in the rates charged by the Tennessee Central Railroad over that part of its line which parallels the pool of Dam A.

So I submit, Mr. Chairman, that from every standpoint this appropriation should be made. My only regret is that the Rivers and Harbors Committee could not see its way clear to make a still greater appropriation to more speedily carry on this work on the upper river, so that that section and the people there could sooner begin to enjoy all of its advantages. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ohio River: Continuing improvement by the construction of locks and dams with a view to securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, $5,000,000.

Mr. LIEB. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I have given thoughtful consideration of every item the pending bill contains, and I am sure of my own knowledge that no apologies are necessary. It is proposed to enact into a law one of the most meritorious pieces of legislation ever framed for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I think it is unfortunate that many items which should have gone into the bill have been left out because of the desire to economize. It therefore stands to reason that, having eliminated some very worthy projects, the remaining proposals are still more necessary in the program of development and must consequently represent the very cream of waterway needs in the country to-day.

We have reached the item proposing to make appropriations necessary to continue the canalization project of the Ohio River, but before going into the merits of the improvement of this stream which forms the southern boundary of the district I have the honor to represent, I wish to refer to my colleague, the eminent chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I venture to say there is not a man on the floor of the House who does not view with reluctance the fact that Mr. SPARKMAN retires from Congress on the coming 4th of March. [Applause.] But the loss is not all ours, as the State of Florida loses a stalwart champion of its glories, its resources, and its preponderance as a unit in the system of a great Government.

Furthermore, the Nation loses from the halls of its Congress a representative and a leader whose invigorating personality, knowledge of the duties he has so worthily assumed, and whose value as a coworker is seldom eclipsed. [Applause.] He has been a Member of the House and of the River and Harbor Committee for 22 years, six years of which he has served as chairman of this important committee. I have been on the committee with him for four years, and therefore consider myself competent to judge of his capabilities. But if I had served with him over a span of a score or more of years, I do not believe I would know him any better than I do.

When Members of the House work together on a committee for any length of time they naturally entertain before long a feeling of partnership, much the same as men who engage in a business partnership. That is the way I feel toward Mr. SPARKMAN. But it has been a relation of partnership looking toward the best interests of the national constituency. It has been brought about through close association, and therefore I feel it is but fitting to mention my high regard for our chairman.

Few men I have ever known have displayed the industry that has characterized Mr. SPARKMAN'S activities in behalf of river and harbor improvements. He has in this and other ways shown himself eminently fitted for the sphere of congressional deliberation that he has been brought into as a result of his qualifications. I have taken several trips of investigation in an official capacity with the chairman, and mention this because it was here that I was treated to my greatest surprise as to the working qualities of the eminent Representative from Florida.

Trips of inspection taken by a committee do not always call for the arduous labor that characterizes the pursuit of duties in Washington, but I want to say that if anyone goes anywhere else with Mr. SPARKMAN he will soon learn that he sets a hard pace in his diligent and conscientious labors. Early in the morning and late at night finds him studiously engaged in the work at hand. His powers of observation are keen to the utmost, and he evidences an unusual willingness to grasp every piece of information brought to his attention as a sure guide for his future reference.

No doubt this capacity for diligent work is what makes him so well informed on river and harbor subjects. Whether the subject be important or unimportant, our chairman is invariably ready for a reply when information is asked of him. This retentive quality of his can best be appreciated by those who know how valuable it is to have at the tip of one's tongue an immense array of data and figures from among hundreds of river and harbor projects. Mr. SPARKMAN'S knowledge is not confined to this country, as he traveled to various parts of the world as a member of the National Waterways Commission.

I am prompted to quote a few lines from the pen of James Whitcomb Riley:

And so it is you cheer me,
My old friend,
For to know you and be near you,
My old friend,
Makes my hope of clearer light,
And my faith of surer sight,
And my soul a purer white,
My old friend.

[Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of taking advantage of this opportunity to say a few words about the improvement of the Ohio River in the neighborhood of its mouth. The committee has just passed an item on the Cumberland River in which $632,000 are appropriated for the purpose of continuing the canalization of the Cumberland River below Nashville, comprising about 192 miles from Nashville to the mouth of the river at Smithland, Ky. In the original project of improving the Cumberland River locks ranging from A to G were provided for, but as the Rivers and Harbors Committee and Congress had given its approval to a project for the canalization of the Ohio River they took into consideration the building of Lock and Dam No. 52 below the mouth of the Cumberland River and above Paducah on the Ohio. Lock and Dam G has been eliminated from the Cumberland River because after Lock and Dam 52 is completed the water will be backed up into the Cumberland sufficiently far to eliminate the last lock that was to have been completed on that river. I am not certain whether the appropriation in this bill will be sufficient to complete the Cumberland or not. It will go a very long way toward completing the improvement of that great stream, but in order that the object of Congress and of the committee and of the Army engineers may be carried out, for the Cumberland River to receive the benefit of its combined improvements together with that of the Ohio River, it is necessary that the construction of Lock and Dam No. 52 below the mouth of the Cumberland River be commenced at the very earliest possible date. I have been before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and before the Board of Army Engineers, and I have camped upon the trail of the Chief of Engineers from time to time, urging the beginning of Lock and Dam No. 52 on the Ohio River at the very earliest possible moment, not only on account of the necessity of this improvement for the benefit of the navigation of the Ohio, but in order that the improvement upon the Cumberland River might not be retarded by delay in constructing Lock and Dam 52 below the mouth of that river on the Ohio River. For some reason, I presume reasons that appeal to the Army engineers from a technical standpoint, they have uniformly begun to construct locks and dams at the source of a river and have gone down to the mouth of the stream. I do not profess to be an engineer, I do not profess to criticize the technical skill of these men who have devised that method of improvement, but it does seem to me if there is any way for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to remedy that by bringing in a bill specifically to instruct the Board of Engineers and Army officers where and when to begin this construction, it ought to be done. It seems to me that great injustice is worked at the mouth of these rivers where the greatest amount of commerce exists by failing to construct the locks and dams on those great streams until smaller parts of the river have been completed where there is comparatively small navigation and commerce as compared with that on the great body of the river near its mouth.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it not necessary before there can be any amount of commerce on these rivers to have the whole system completed, and does it make any difference whether you have a big project or a little project, is it not true you have to have it all in operation before you are going to get sufficient commerce to warrant the investment of capital in boats, terminals, and so forth?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, that the river is not completed as a whole for commercial purposes until it is canalized from beginning to end; and instead of beginning at that end where there is little commerce it seems to me that the engineers might shift their arrangement in such a way as to improve the river at a point where commerce exists in larger quantities than at the mere sources of those rivers.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman has read the report of the Secretary of War on the lower Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have; but that report has not been adopted, and I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio I hope it will not be adopted, because if it is adopted—the gentleman refers to the dredging of the lower Ohio River?

Mr. SWITZER. What objection would the gentleman have to trying a cheaper method of obtaining the desired depth of the river? What is the objection to trying out such a proposition where it is inexpensive?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the gentleman, with reference to Locks and Dams 53 and 54, it may be possible for the recommendations of the engineers to be put into operation, though I do not think so; but in view of the fact that Lock and Dam 52 not only is to be constructed for the benefit of the Ohio River but in order also to back water up into the Cumberland River about 30 or 40 miles, I think it would be extremely inadvisable to eliminate Lock and Dam 52 on the Ohio River, and I desire to say——

Mr. SWITZER. That is an engineering problem, is it not, after all?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course it is an engineering problem. As I stated in the beginning, I do not profess to be a civil engineer or an Army engineer, but it is a well-known fact that commerce has been hindered and delayed and perhaps driven off the lower Ohio River because of the delay, and why not put these locks and dams at points where it will be worth while to construct them when all this system has been completed instead of completing them on small portions of the river where commerce is not so important?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The elimination of Lock and Dam 52 on the Ohio would make necessary the construction of Lock and Dam G on the Cumberland?

Mr. BARKLEY. It would. I was going to suggest that if the recommendation of the engineers should be complied with and Lock and Dam 52 on the Ohio River should be eliminated, it would still be necessary to readopt the project contemplating the building of Lock G on the Cumberland River, but inasmuch as the building of this one lock on the Ohio will improve that river and the Cumberland, too, it seems to me it ought not to be eliminated but that it ought to be begun and constructed as soon as possible.

And down toward the mouth of the river, where ordinarily the bed of the river is in some places a mile and a half wide, it is going to be a tremendous proposition to build and complete a lock and dam of the dimensions of Lock and Dam No. 52. In view of what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] says, it seems to me that they ought to give early attention to the locks on the lower river, so that it will not delay the completion of the entire project any more than is necessary.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto end in eight minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] going to discuss the Ohio River?

Mr. FREAR. Entirely confined to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be necessary for somebody to say something in reply.

Mr. FREAR. I think so; but it will not be struck out of the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let it go in then, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I realize that this is one of the items that Col. Townsend says ought to be improved, if any, in this experimental test that he proposes. It is a very expensive experiment, however, and I do not believe that we have followed it very closely so as to know that $59,377,000 has already been appropriated for the stream, and $33,265,000 more will be required on this last project, or $92,642,783 altogether; that is, for the 9-foot project. It is an experiment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman says $90,000,000 is designed for the project.

Mr. FREAR. That will be the total appropriation of money outside of the maintenance we ask when this canalization system is completed. This last project carries $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This amount of money has been expended by the United States Government on the Ohio River since the Government began to do the work?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The canalization was some $62,000,000 or $63,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. Yes. We have or will spend $92,000,000 in preparing this stream for commerce and getting it in as good shape as we can. Of course, the argument that was offered just a few moments ago that the stream will never pay at its best until all the system is completed, may be said to be true of the Mississippi and other rivers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FREAR. I prefer not to yield now.

And for that reason I want to call attention to the traffic. It is given by the Army engineers at 4,814,000 tons in 1915. That is quite a large commerce in a way, although even in their reports they have in past times placed it as high as 13,000,000 tons, as I now remember. But it is now put down at something over 4,000,000 tons on the average, as they estimate, carried 25.6 miles on the average. There is that long river of 1,000 miles, with an average tonnage of 4,814,000, that is carried the average distance of 25.6 miles.

That tonnage, and I say this in order that my good friend from Ohio may have an opportunity of dwelling on this, is coal, 2,353,663 tons; gravel, 1,181,000 tons; sand, 1,824,000 tons; and waste, 28,000 tons. Leaving out the coal and other items named, and I suppose coal has value, leaves 63,683 tons, all hauled an average distance of 25.6 miles. I do not understand how we can stop the project. We are working on it. But that is the prospect we have of returns. So far 19 locks have not been touched. We had more coal and commerce of all kinds on the Ohio River before any locks were ever started, and because of the railroad competition on both sides of the river, which occurs on the Mississippi and occurs on all these large rivers, I predict that if any of us live long enough to see this project completed the commerce will be no larger than it is to-day. I hope I will be disappointed in that prediction, but that is my judgment, based upon the experience we have had with all these other projects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that $92,000,000 has been spent on this project.

Mr. FREAR. Has been appropriated or will be appropriated—on the Ohio River before the project is completed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the present project contemplates the expenditure of $63,000,000?

Mr. FREAR. Sixty-three million dollars. We will spend $92,000,000 on the river, and this is all the commerce that has been developed after nearly $60,000,000 expenditure to date.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Sixty-three million dollars has not been spent up to date?

Mr. FREAR. Thirty million dollars more will be spent on this river.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says we have 19 locks on the Ohio——

Mr. FREAR. To build yet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And about one-half of the project cost has been expended?

Mr. FREAR. Just about.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that $92,000,000 has not been spent?

Mr. FREAR. No. I said that would be the total amount. Only about $55,000,000 to $60,000,000 thus far.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is adding the previous expenditures to the $63,000,000 project?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; to show the amount that has gone into the river to develop the present commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Only half of which has been expended?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; that is right as to the last project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I wanted a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I do not at all believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] takes his motion very seriously.

Mr. FREAR. It was a pro forma amendment.

Mr. SWITZER. This being a stream 968 miles long, and having utilized former expenditures to the extent of $55,000,000, and requiring only $33,000,000 more to complete the project, no one would think of abandoning it in the state it is now in—that is, there is work in progress on 17 locks and dams, and, of course, if the appropriation ceased, these uncompleted dams in the river, some of them half completed and others two-thirds constructed, would have to be removed, and then we would have to appropriate about as much money to remove those impediments as we have heretofore expended on the river, so that it would be ridiculous to strike out this item.

Mr. FREAR. I did not move to strike it out.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman is always referring to the small amount of tonnage on the Ohio River, and he sneers at the item of coal. The facts are, as shown by the reports of commerce for the year 1915, as I recollect them, that there is seven and one-half million tons of commerce, exclusive of ferriage. The gentleman says that at one time there were 13,000,000 of tonnage.

Mr. FREAR. That is the report of the engineers.

Mr. SWITZER. I will say this, that these reports made at that time to the Army engineers that the gentleman referred to have later been gone over, and the Army engineers now say that frequently the commerce was counted two or three times at some places at that time, and when the project was adopted in 1910 the special board and the Chief of Engineers discussed that matter of 13,000,000 tons, and they said that the commerce at that time, including the ferriage, excluding duplications, was about 9,300,000 tons. Including the ferriage in 1915, the commerce is 9,000,000 tons, and the last report of the Engineers shows that the commerce has not changed much in the last three or four years. It is now practically what it was when the report on this project was adopted in 1910. Still the gentleman from Wisconsin persists in saying that the commerce is disappearing from the Ohio River.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes that with the present trackage it would be possible for the railroads paralleling the Ohio to carry those 4,000,000 tons of coal additional?

Mr. FREAR. It is only two and one-half million tons.

Mr. SWITZER. The tonnage is 7,500,000 tons, including about 4,500,000 tons of coal. The gentleman from Missouri is nearer right than the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MEEKER. I thank the gentleman. One other question. The addition of three and one-half million tons of coal to the trackage of the Ohio railroads would make it impossible for them to haul it?

Mr. SWITZER. There is no doubt about that. There is no question but that this great waterway has been a great factor in holding down the rates on railroads paralleling the Ohio River. In the last 50 years more has been saved to the shippers of the country in reduced freight rates on account of this navigable stream than has been appropriated to keep the stream in running order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that if this river were canalized, so that the traffic would be open to the shippers all the year around, not only coal but other freights would be largely increased?

Mr. SWITZER. There is no question about that. But when the canalization is completed—and that is some years in the future—I do not know what the future tonnage of the river will be, but we do know that the tonnage of the Monongahela River, at the source of the stream, has doubled since its canalization. We do know that the activities along the upper Ohio are as great as those along the Monongahela, and we know that the coal is being carried on the Monongahela at 4 or 5 cents a ton, whereas it formerly cost 40 cents a ton to carry it; and I have no doubt but that the commerce of the stream is going to increase year by year. The valuation last year was $50,000,000, excluding ferriage. The valuation in the year 1915 was $150,000,000, including ferriage, besides the 2,000,000 passengers on the main channel, and something like two and one-half or three millions of passengers on the ferries.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is this stream open to navigation in the winter months?

Mr. SWITZER. It depends on the winter. It has been open most of this winter. But in my time I have seen the Ohio River closed during the holidays, and closed sometimes for two or three months in the year on account of ice. I take it that only for a few weeks this winter has the ice appeared. It depends on the severity of the winter and volume of water in the river. If the water is high when the cold weather comes on, it does not freeze over so readily.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ontonagon Harbor, Mich.: For maintenance, $9,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to add a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the reports as they are at present put in, which leave out the question of ferriage. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] well said a moment ago, the ferriage was $150,000,000. That has been figured in these estimates heretofore, and has apparently given a very large commerce to these rivers. It figured in the Mississippi River reports, as I will show when I get to that. But they are now taking out the ferriage. Of course, it is an absurdity to add that to the commerce of the river, because we do not need a deep channel, or a 9-foot channel, to get ferriage. That has been the difficulty with the Ohio River heretofore. Even without the canalization project we would not have to send this coal down on the railroads, because for 50 years we sent it down the Ohio to New Orleans in time of good water. I speak of this because it will show the character of the reports we are getting, because they are more accurate. I think the gentleman from Ohio is right. I do not think the loss of commerce would appear as great now as in the past. They calculated it according to a poor system. It is difficult, of course, to arrive at the actual commerce on a river, but they have added it up and find the whole commerce was carried only about 25 miles.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. This winter we came near having a very severe coal famine down the Ohio Valley, and until there was a rise in the river and enough water to float the barges that were waiting up the Kanawha and they were floated down there was no relief.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman allow me to interpose there?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. SWITZER. The rise in the river to which the gentleman refers, which relieved that coal famine, was produced by opening some of those closed locks up the river, and adding to the current of the stream the water that had been conserved above. The coal came down on that rise caused by opening the locks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pentwater and White Lake Harbors, Mich.: For maintenance of White Lake Harbor, $5,500.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Page 28, at the end of line 5, add the following: "and for maintenance of Pentwater Harbor, $5,000."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the facts respecting Pentwater are different from those respecting any other project in the bill. You will notice that in line 4 the bill speaks of "Pentwater and White Lake Harbors." They are two harbors within 20 miles of each other; in fact, have always been carried as one project on the books of the Corps of Engineers. In 1909 the local engineer made a report which was approved by the Chief of Engineers and reported to Congress, recommending $151,000 for the maintenance, repair, and improvement of these two harbors—this one project. The Chair and other members of the committee will remember that 1909 was the year when a very small river and harbor bill was passed, carrying appropriations only for worthy projects and those most needing support. Under those circumstances the Chief of Engineers recommended $151,000 for this project—these two harbors. Urged by the desire for economy, and on the demand of the then chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. Burton, of Ohio, the Chief of Engineers modified his report and recommended $101,000 for these two harbors, and in a bill carrying only about $9,000,000, and as everyone well understood, making provision only for worthy projects, there was carried an appropriation of $101,000 for these two harbors.

A little later a survey was had of these harbors, and the engineer making the report differed from the engineer who had made the former report, and recommended that no more money be expended for these harbors. That unfavorable report stands to-day; but there was $101,000 in the fund, and under direction of Congress the Corps of Engineers have been expending that money little by little, year after year, keeping those harbors open, keeping those places on the map.

That was the condition up to two years ago, when, failing to pass a regular river and harbor bill, Congress appropriated a lump sum of $25,000,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers. That authorization carried power and conferred discretion upon the Chief of Engineers to divert money from any fund or standing to the credit of any project and add it to the $25,000,000. The Chief of Engineers, going over the list of projects in his office, found $48,000 remaining in the fund for these little harbors, and arbitrarily diverted it and added it to the big sum of $25,000,000, leaving these little harbors altogether without money for their further maintenance.

I am not asking this House to disregard the recommendation of the engineers that no more money be appropriated for these harbors. I am simply asking the House to restore to that fund and to the credit of one of these harbors, a small part of the money heretofore appropriated, and which, in my judgment, was improperly diverted and taken away by the Chief of Engineers. I doubt his authority under the act of two years ago, but he exercised that power, and he has totally depleted the fund for these harbors. He has made a recommendation this year of $5,500 for one of the harbors, White Lake—and this bill carries a provision for that amount for White Lake—but no recommendation was made for Pentwater, and this bill carries nothing for it. I repeat, I am not asking this House to make an appropriation contrary to the recommendation of the engineers. I am simply asking the House to correct the mistake the engineers made in diverting the money that Congress had appropriated and set aside for this project, leaving this harbor without money.

I am asking for only a small part of the money that Congress has heretofore provided and intended should be used for these harbors so that they may be kept alive and given time for growth and development. I am not asking money for new work; simply asking for money enough to keep the harbor alive for a while, that it may have a little more time in which to justify a demand for permanent support. On the harbor of Pentwater there has been expended upward of $300,000. It is a beautiful harbor. Formerly there was a large amount of business, largely lumber, but there has been a change in conditions in that part of Michigan. The lumber industry has gone, but agriculture and manufacture and fruit growing have come to take the place of lumber, and the county in which Pentwater is located, and of which it is the only port, is one of the very best fruit counties of the State of Michigan, but there is no outlet for its products. The engineers report a lack of commerce, but the harbor has not been maintained so there could be commerce. It is a fine summer-resort country, too; but the engineers in their investigation and report take no notice of passenger business. They report the dead freight, but pay no attention to live freight. I say it is a great fruit country, and splendid agricultural development, and there would be numerous and large shipments of fruit and farm products if there were harbor facilities. We all know that fruit is perishable, and that the growers of it will not take it to a harbor if they are in doubt as to the boat coming and going on schedule time. In that respect conditions have not been very favorable.

The owners of the boat lines have expressed their desire to make Pentwater one of their regular ports, and to make regular trips to that harbor, and I have many times heard residents of the village of Pentwater say that very often a boat plying Lake Michigan and scheduled to enter that harbor would come and stand off the harbor, but the captain, doubting his ability to enter during rough weather, would take his boat away. That difficulty could have been overcome if a little more money had been available for the improvement of the harbor. It can be kept in reasonable condition for a short time with this money. I am asking for only $5,000, a small part of the $48,000 appropriated by Congress, which was intended for the maintenance of the harbor, but improperly diverted by the engineers, a serious mistake on their part. The adoption of my amendment will provide this little sum. It seems to me that conditions and facts as I describe them ought to appeal to the House and that there should be no opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to have to oppose the amendment offered by my friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], but to adopt it would be to go directly in the face of the recommendation of the engineers, something that we have not heretofore done in this bill. The Board of Engineers in the report made by that body on June 15, 1915, used this language:

> In view of the conditions existing at this harbor, the district officer in 1909 recommended its abandonment, and this recommendation has been included in recent annual reports of the Chief of Engineers. As a result of the present investigation the district officer now reaches a similar conclusion and recommends that the harbor be abandoned. In the opinion of the division engineer the harbor is not worthy of any improvement in amplification of the present project, but it is worthy of maintenance of the existing piers and of the present project channel for such width, less than the project width of 150 feet, as may be necessary for the harbor traffic.
> 3. This report has been referred, as required by law, to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and attention is invited to its report herewith, dated June 15, 1915, concurring in the views of the district officer.
> 4. After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports I concur in the views of the district officer and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that the improvement by the United States of Pentwater Harbor, Mich., from the mouth of the channel to Pentwater Lake is deemed unworthy of further continuance or maintenance, and it is recommended that the project be abandoned and appropriations for this harbor discontinued.

It will be observed that we have not inserted a provision abandoning this project. We have treated that like we have a few others where similar recommendations have been made, and have used no language that would have the effect of abandoning the project. But we did not think, in the face of the recommendations, that we could go any further than appropriate the $5,000 for White Lake.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. What does the gentleman think of the action of the engineers in diverting $48,000 from this little project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would not think that action should be condemned in view of the conclusions to which they arrived that the project was not worthy of further improvement and maintenance. I am not defending the conclusion that the engineers have reached. I do not know anything about it, except what I see in the report. I would like to make this suggestion to the gentleman, that instead of trying to have the bill amended so as to insert an item of $5,000 for Penwater he have the matter referred back to the engineers; and if they have made any mistake let those interested go before the board and have it corrected. Let them proceed regularly, and not contrary to the report of the engineers.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If the course suggested by the gentleman from Florida is followed, and we get no appropriation this year, there will be no commerce at that harbor, because the sand will drift in and no ship can enter. There will be no commerce upon which the engineers can report. This little appropriation that is asked for, only a small part of the large amount that they took away from the fund, ought to be made in order to keep the harbor open and in normal condition when next examined by the engineers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am only asking the committee to go with the engineers in this matter. They have recommended its abandonment. I do not want to do that now. It may be that the gentleman or some one else can induce them to change their opinion. But here we are confronted with the recommendation that no more money be appropriated. If we appropriate the money in this bill, we would be contrary to the recommendation of the engineers.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, may I occupy a little more time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes, five minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a few words concerning the history of this project. This $101,000 that I speak of was appropriated in 1909. Following that there was an unfavorable report by the Corps of Engineers, and inasmuch as the expenditure of the $101,000 was under the law discretionary with them, they refused to spend any part of it. When the attention of Congress was called to the fact that an appropriation of $101,000 had been made and yet the engineers refused to spend the money, this Congress, this House, with the approval of the Senate, inserted in the river and harbor bill of 1910 a positive direction to the engineers to expend the money theretofore appropriated. The engineers have been following that direction and have been spending the money, and if they had not improperly diverted it there was enough money for several years, so that the harbor might have time to grow and develop and later on justify a favorable report.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the distinguished chairman of the committee does not take the proper view of this matter. I am not asking the House to go contrary to the report and recommendation of the engineers. I believe that the policy pursued by the committee has been right. It should follow the engineers. I am simply asking that a portion of the money improperly diverted be returned to the fund.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I will.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In view of the recommendation that no more money be expended on the harbor either for improvement or maintenance, would we not violate the recommendation if we made this appropriation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I do not look upon this as additional money; it is the return of a portion of the money improperly diverted.

When I learned the diversion had been made I called to see the Chief of Engineers and asked him why it had been done. He said, "We had authority to do it, and if you need more money you can go to Congress and get it." I told him of the difficulty I would have in the face of his unfavorable report, and he expressed the opinion that very likely Congress would take care of it. Now, I appeal to this committee to correct the mistakes of the engineer. I believe I am right and that I am asking only what is fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPARKMAN) there were 32 ayes and 52 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor of refuge at Harbor Beach, Mich.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1700, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, $100,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not know that I am against this paragraph, but it seems to me we ought to have some information about it. I do not know what the population of Harbor Beach, Mich., is or what the postal receipts are in that vicinity; but we ought to have some information, so long as we are about to appropriate the enormous sum of $100,000 for improvements at Harbor Beach; we ought to know what the postal receipts are and what the population is.

Michigan is a very important waterway State, and it is represented here by some distinguished men who are not wholly in favor of appropriations for public buildings, provided the population and the postal receipts do not come to certain standards.

I am not sure, however, but that a great deal of money that might have gone into public buildings has already been expended at Harbor Beach, Mich. One hundred thousand dollars is asked for now. Such reports as I have seen indicate that we have expended upward of $2,000,000 at this point in order to rear certain sheltering arms into the sea to protect a few vessels that might be in distress.

Mr. Chairman, if we were to apply the $2,000,000 that we have expended at Harbor Beach, Mich., the population of which is not referred to in the engineer's report, and the postal receipts of which are not mentioned by any of the reports, according to the standards of certain gentlemen from Michigan, we could erect at $10,000 each about 200 post offices throughout the country; or, if we applied this $2,000,000 to the erection of post offices at $10,000 each throughout the country, then, according to certain arguments we have heard, we could, if we distributed these post offices according to the districts, gather together a majority of the votes, and thus carry the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Has the gentleman noticed that this is a harbor of refuge?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; a harbor of refuge.

Mr. MEEKER. Is the gentleman aware that Michigan has just gone dry? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. A harbor of refuge for $100,000.

Mr. MEEKER. That explains it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been a harbor of refuge for $2,000,000 altogether, up to date. If we took the $2,000,000 that has gone into Harbor Beach, Mich., the population of which is not mentioned, and the postal receipts of which are not mentioned, and applied it to public buildings as I have indicated, we could erect 200 public buildings at $10,000 each, and probably acquire 200 votes in this House in order to put that public-building bill through. But if we did that, Mr. Chairman, what would become of Harbor Beach, Mich.? What would this Michigan district say if its Representative went home without any pork for Harbor Beach?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean to insinuate that the average Member of this House can be purchased with a post office costing $10,000?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, so long as the gentleman puts a serious question to me, I would say that even now it is dangerous for a Member of this House to attend a banquet that costs a dollar and a quarter a plate [laughter], because if he does so, he might come under the keen, cold, gray eye of the gentleman from Jasper, Ind., who would rise in his place and with indignation furrowing his brow, say that such a man, attending a dollar-and-a-quarter banquet, might be susceptible to the charge of corrupt practice. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this item of $100,000, grown in this way through a series of years to $2,000,000, deposited by the Government at Harbor Beach, Mich., which might have been applied to public buildings, but which was not in order that gentlemen may realize that that large sum remains safe and snug behind the breakwater at Harbor Beach.

It may be that public buildings should not go into the district of any other gentleman while this worthy project is going on at Harbor Beach, but I am inclined to think that even though gentlemen representing such important projects as Harbor Beach, Mich., should get away with $2,000,000 in the course of a few years, still they might prove up by giving us the population and the postal receipts. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Clinton River, Mich.: For maintenance, $1,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we have here the item of $1,500 for maintenance of the Clinton River, Mich. Is there anyone here upon the committee or in the Committee of the Whole who can explain this item of the Clinton River, Mich.? I look about me, Mr. Chairman, and look over the observant countenances upon the floor. Gentlemen from Michigan are here, as are gentlemen from Wisconsin. I call upon anyone of these gentlemen to inform the House, if they will, about this item of $1,500 for maintenance at Clinton River, Mich. Do I get a rise? [Laughter.] Does any gentleman defend this item? Is there a man, with soul so dead, from Michigan, who never to himself hath said, this is mine own, my little pet? [Laughter.] I see gentlemen from Michigan here—a great waterway State, with great waterway statesmen; will not some gentleman from Michigan rise? [Laughter.] Why, Mount Clemens is in Michigan, and somewhere near by that wonderful resort runs the Clinton River. Has no one ever gone up there to be cured of rheumatism? Cranberries are grown in this vicinity, and they compete with the cranberries of the New Jersey coast. Is there no one here to speak for this cranberry inlet? [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I still have a little time to give away to any gentleman who denounces the pork barrel, any gentleman who has it down in the depths of his representative corporosity to denounce appropriations made in the districts of other gentlemen, who will rise now and speak for the Clinton River. No one rises.

Mr. Chairman, I find in the engineer's report this simple statement:

Preliminary examination of Clinton River, Mich.: Report dated October 2, 1915, is printed in House Document No. 1014, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.

Bear in mind, all of the formalities have been gone through with by somebody who represented the Clinton River, in Michigan. But the engineers say that—

Further improvement by the United States is not deemed advisable at the present time.

And yet we are spending—think of it, ye proponents of post offices and Federal buildings—$1,500 for maintaining this river up there somewhere in Michigan, where you can go for a perfectly safe cure. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do; I am glad some gentleman has at last risen. Will the gentleman from Minnesota please tell me the population in the vicinity of the Clinton River?

Will the gentleman tell me the postal receipts along the Clinton River? Will the gentleman tell me why we should desecrate the Clinton River in a "pork barrel"? Will the gentleman tell me if we are warranted in risking this $1,500 of the people's money——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). To improve the Clinton River when the whole State has gone dry? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What is the tonnage?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not find out, and I am appealing to some one to tell us the tonnage of the Clinton River.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the Chair rule that the gentleman is conducting a filibuster upon this important measure?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to argue that point of order, but the gentleman from Michigan having risen, I yield to him the balance of my time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indiana Harbor, Ind.: Completing improvement and for maintenance, $415,200.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph which provides for an appropriation for Indiana Harbor of $415,200.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 30, strike out all of lines 19 and 20.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in making this motion to strike out this paragraph I do not intend, like my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], to entertain the membership of this committee, but I do so because I believe that it is improper for this committee to continue to appropriate large sums of money to any project that is subject to the control of private interests or corporations. Some few years ago in this locality the Government owned a river which the United States Steel Trust did not quite like, and therefore they closed it up and built a channel for their private use. Finding it was rather expensive to maintain that channel, they turned it over to the United States, so that the Government would have the privilege annually of appropriating from about $50,000 to $100,000 to maintain the channel for this poor, oppressed Steel Trust. Now, I have before me the report of the Board of Engineers, from which it appears that they expect some benefits for the people of that district to be realized in the near future. Unless I am very much mistaken, no one else outside of the Steel Trust and the Standard Oil Co. has up to this day used this channel, and I can not see why we should be called upon to maintain, enlarge, and protect, at such a tremendous cost, this privately owned channel.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Suppose that the business of the Steel Trust and the Standard Oil Co. at Indiana Harbor was divided up among 15 or 20 small concerns, would the gentleman then be in favor of improving this harbor?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, were it in the interests of the people, yes; but where it is for the direct interest of a gigantic trust I am opposed to it, especially when we know that millions and millions of dollars are being made by this trust that is seeking and claiming the aid of this body.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do not those two companies do the same amount of business and employ the same number of men and pay the same amount of wages as if they were divided up among a number of men or a number of companies?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, they do more business than 15 companies, more than all the other companies in their particular line in the United States. I want to say to you that I very seldom see anybody coming to the rescue of the smaller men and urge the granting of benefits to them just as the gentleman is urging that we should come to the aid and assistance of this tremendous trust.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The United States steel plant is at Gary, Ind., is it not?

Mr. SABATH. No; but they are now using Indiana Harbor and they are also filling in a lake known as George Lake which belonged to the Government until it was discovered by the steel company. Now they believe it is their own, that it belongs to them, and so they have commenced filling it in.

Mr. MADDEN. How far is Gary from Indiana Harbor?

Mr. SABATH. It may be about——

Mr. MADDEN. Ten miles?

Mr. SABATH. Eight or ten miles I should say.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is Indiana Harbor in the gentleman's district?

Mr. SABATH. No, it is not; and for the information of the gentleman from Washington I wish to say that neither he nor any other man has ever heard me ask for appropriations for my own district. What I desire to do is to oppose any unfair appropriation, whether it be for your district or for my district. I would not hesitate, if my district were in need of an improvement, to ask for it, but I would not ask for a large appropriation for the benefit of a trust or a corporation which has taken away property that formerly belonged to the Government and converted it to its own uses and benefits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 10, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Illinois River, Ill.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance below Copperas Creek, $30,000.

Mr. McKENZIE and Mr. BENNET rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 7, insert the following:
"Fulton Landing, Fulton, Ill.: For improvement of landing at Fulton, Ill., $10,000."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise for a preferential motion relating to the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rose at the same time that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] did to inquire about the paragraph in lines 4, 6, and 7. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois to offer a new paragraph below.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this is an amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is correct.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking in entire good faith of some one from Illinois, What is Copperas Creek?

Mr. MADDEN. Copperas Creek is a place down the river where we have had dams to regulate the flow of the water, and where it is thought necessary to erect these dams in order to lower the stage of water, so that it will not overflow the adjoining country.

Mr. BENNET. The word "creek" does not necessarily mean it is a small body of water?

Mr. MADDEN. It is the main Illinois River at Copperas Creek. It is the name of the town.

Mr. BENNET. I want to say that some of our New York papers, I am sorry to say, have been passing comments on this bill because it provides for the improvement of creeks.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, Copperas Creek is one of the locks and dams on the Illinois River, located at a point on the river near where the creek by the name of "Copperas" flows into the river. Hence the name given the dam. It is not a dam called "Copperas Creek." It is a dam across the Illinois River, which cost over $1,000,000 to build, through which lock in that dam commerce on that great river passes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the two gentlemen from Illinois have made such precisely similar explanations that one might have thought they rehearsed them if they had had a chance to do so. I thank the second gentleman from Illinois also.

The mere use of the word "creek" in a bill does not mean that the body of water is small. For instance, as to the State which I represent in part, there are appropriations in this bill for Newtown Creek, on which there is a tremendous commerce; Westchester Creek, on which there is about as much commerce as there is on the Mississippi River; and East Chester Creek; but I do not think it is fair even for the newspapers in my own State, without investigation, to criticize an item for a creek simply because of the use of the word "creek." If it is a real creek, that is so shallow that possibly it only amounts to a heavy dew, that is justifiable, but the mere word ought not to be a basis for criticism.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. May I inquire what paper is making those extravagant statements?

Mr. BENNET. I do not own stock in any New York paper, and I decline to advertise any of them.

Mr. FREAR. I was wondering whether the fact that it was based upon commerce was the reason that it was humorously treated by the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. Those I mentioned simply used the word "creek" as——

Mr. MEEKER. Because it says "Copperas Creek" does not mean that it is "copper."

Mr. SWITZER. Were they careful to exclude all the creeks in New York State from criticism?

Mr. BENNET. They do not criticize any creeks in New York State.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I want to know if it is not true that newspapers do not care especially for the facts? What they care about is something that will attract attention. For example, a young friend of mine was being instructed as to how to gather news for the newspapers, and his instructor, one of our able editors, said, "Now, young man, if you run across an item where a dog bites a man, that is not news. Do not bring that in. But if you find a case where a man bites a dog, bring that in." Now, that is the proposition that is involved in these criticisms. The papers want us to present something that will excite the curiosity.

Mr. BENNET. That was always one of my favorite stories. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, what has become of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offered a preferential motion, on which he wished to be heard.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then I will wait until that is disposed of.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, in further explanation of the Copperas Creek item, I desire to say Copperas Creek, on the Illinois River, is located about halfway between the mouth of the river and the head of navigation on the river, and it marks the point on the river where the Government work ends and where the work of the State of Illinois commences, because above Copperas Creek, on the Illinois River, the State of Illinois maintains the navigability of the river. Therefore if the New York papers are talking about Copperas Creek, they ought to discuss it in connection with the work the State of Illinois does. And, so far as I know, no other State contributes toward maintaining the navigability of a great river within its boundaries. We think so much of the Illinois River, above Copperas Creek and below Copperas Creek, and of the possibilities of connecting Lake Michigan with the Illinois River by a channel extending from Lake Michigan down to the Gulf of Mexico that the State of Illinois, when the question was submitted to the voters in that State, authorized the Legislature of Illinois to bond the State to borrow $20,000,000 for the purpose of improving this great waterway.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNET. Has the gentleman ever heard about what the State of New York did in bonding our State to improve the Mohawk, a navigable stream?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; and the State of Illinois furnishes the commerce which makes it possible for the State of New York to appropriate $100,000,000 for the purpose of improving the Erie Canal.

Mr. BENNET. Inasmuch as there are no tolls on the canal and we paid for the whole canal, part of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is correct, but not the important part.

Mr. RAINEY. The State of New York is honored by having the commerce of the great State of Illinois pass through its territory.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague from New York accept an amendment to his statement?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. The State of New York has appropriated $157,000,000 instead of $101,000,000.

Mr. RAINEY. I congratulate the State of New York on its policy in the matter of waterway improvements. The State of Illinois feels the same way about the waterways within its boundaries, and if it is possible for the State of Illinois to get a channel at least 14 feet deep opened down to the Gulf of Mexico the State of Illinois might be induced to appropriate a still larger amount than the people of that State have authorized its legislature to appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE, to follow line 7, page 31: "Fulton Landing, Fulton, Ill.: For improvement of landing at Fulton, Ill., $10,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this amendment is subject to a point of order. However, I want to make a very brief statement in connection with it.

Fulton is a town in Whiteside County, in the State of Illinois. It was at one time a great shipping point. Large sawmills were located there, and it was one of the good harbors or landings on the Mississippi River. In 1907 the Government expended $4,015 in dredging out this landing, but since that time the channel has filled up, and it is impossible now for a boat to get up to the landing.

The people of Fulton sent me a petition, signed by all the leading people of the town of Fulton, asking me to take this matter up with the proper authorities. I sent the petition to the Mississippi River Commission, believing that they had jurisdiction over the matter. Col. Townsend, however, sent it to Maj. Hoffman, stationed at Rock Island, stating that it was a matter over which they had no jurisdiction, and that it required a specific appropriation. I received a letter from Maj. Hoffman in which he states that he can not divert any of the appropriation made for channel purposes to the improvement of a landing, and that it will be necessary to have a specific appropriation made for this purpose.

Now, he further says it will cost quite a large sum of money, perhaps $20,000, to put this landing in first-class order, due to the fact there is a solid rock bottom to the river at that point, and that it will be necessary either to blast out a part of that rock bottom or build out some sort of a structure into the river where the boats may land the freight that is brought up and down the river.

Now, I want simply to state this, in conclusion, if I may have a minute further: It seems to me an idle policy to appropriate millions of dollars annually for the improvement of the Mississippi River channel and then refuse to appropriate any money to make it possible for the boats to land at the towns along the river. What are we improving the channel for, if it is not to permit the boats to land and to take on and put off freight? Are they simply to pass up and down the river in this channel that we are spending so many millions in improving? It seems to me that if there is any argument in favor of improving these waterways, it carries with it the fact that we ought to improve the landings.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Would it be a feasible scheme to depend on the community there to improve their own landing, or would the expense be too great for that?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it would be too great a burden, and I do not think it would be just.

I might add this word: Some years ago, to improve the channel, the engineers built a dam out in the river which the people of Fulton say produced an eddy that filled up the landing place. The engineers of the Army, however, contradict that statement, and say that that is not the fact. But the fact remains that the landing has filled up with silt, and it is impossible for the boats to get up to the landing. I think, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to make appropriations at all, this is one of the items that would appeal to the judgment of any reasonable man.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Is there a House document report on this proposed improvement?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. The gentleman has not introduced any bill or brought the matter to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir. It came to my attention too late for that. I was under the impression that the Mississippi River Commission had the right to use part of the money appropriated for that commission to be distributed for the improvement of the river.

Mr. HULBERT. There has not been any survey or authorization of a survey as to the exact necessities at that point?

Mr. McKENZIE. It is a project that has been under the jurisdiction of the War Department. In 1907 there was expended $4,015 to improve this, and they said it was only temporary. To make it complete would cost $20,000. I am asking now for an appropriation of only $10,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amount that the Government has expended was for improving the channel of the river?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman's amendment is to appropriate money to construct or improve a landing?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a brief question. Will he withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I notice various appropriations here, but I have not noticed any appropriation for Bubble Creek, in Chicago. Not that I am in favor of any appropriation for that great waterway, but I would like to know whether anyone came before the committee asking legislation to close that creek?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not recall any request of this kind.

Mr. SABATH. Not at this session?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not at any time.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman knows that one branch of the Chicago River has been closed, and it is being closed now.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I was not aware of that.

Mr. SABATH. No recommendation has been secured from the committee or from Congress on that subject?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not recall any at all.

Mr. SABATH. For the gentleman's information I wish to say that the people owning adjoining land have been filling in that creek and are now in the market to dispose of the property, and are ready to close the other branch, and are advertising for sale property which to my mind belongs to the Government.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Has the gentleman ever presented that matter to the War Department?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I wrote a letter to the War Department a year ago and they answered me that an application had been made for the closing of that creek, and that they understood it was being filled in, and that they did not believe anyone would raise any serious objection. I myself would not be opposed to closing that creek were it not for the fact that I do not believe those people should secure title to property which to my mind belongs to the Government.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If it is navigable water, they can not acquire title by filling it up without authority. They would have no legal authority to do that.

Mr. SABATH. I do not think they have. Will the gentleman advise me in what way to proceed, or will his committee aid me to bring about a condition whereby this land can be reclaimed from those who unlawfully hold it, and be turned over to the Government?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If I were in the gentleman's place, I would present the matter, as the gentleman no doubt has, to the War Department. If the War Department does not act, then I would present the matter to the United States district attorney, because there is a statute prohibiting such acts and the courts have the authority to cause the removal of such obstructions.

Mr. SABATH. Has the Secretary of War the right to grant a permit to fill in any channel or creek which has been used and recognized as a navigable stream?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Congress alone can authorize the filling in of navigable water.

Mr. SABATH. It requires the action of Congress?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Before anyone can obstruct or fill in any such navigable stream?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HULBERT. Has it occurred to the gentleman that he might introduce a resolution asking for an investigation, have it referred to the proper committee, and request a hearing thereon?

Mr. SABATH. I wish to say to the gentleman that two years ago I introduced a resolution, with which the chairman of this committee is familiar, asking for a survey of the Chicago River and the Lake front, and showing the obstructions by private interests of the shores and rivers. The resolution was embodied in the bill two years ago, and for two years every month or six weeks I asked the Board of Engineers for a report, but up to this date I have not been able to secure it. That is the reason I am asking the chairman for advice, as to whether there is a way in which I can proceed to secure the information and to stop these people from doing these unlawful things, such as they are doing on George Lake, where the Steel Corporation is filling in that body of water without any warrant of law.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The War Department has ample jurisdiction to prevent all such trespasses as the gentleman mentions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] makes a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], on the ground that it is not germane to the bill. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois does not come within the rule as to items in a river and harbor bill, being for the improvement of a landing. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement, not exceeding five minutes, with reference to a project which is not in this bill, but has been carried in the bill heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes to explain a matter which is not in this bill, but which has been in previous bills. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, heretofore there has been carried in the river and harbor bill a Trinity River item. In justice to my constituents and to the Members of the House I want to make a very brief statement with reference to that project. In the last Congress I was authorized to state to the Rivers and Harbors Committee that the people of Dallas and that vicinity would contribute $3,000,000 toward the completion of the project if the Congress would make an appropriation covering the rest of the necessary expenditures. Since that proposition was made to the Congress the engineers having the matter under consideration have made a report in which they change the former estimate of $6,000,000 for the completion of the project to about $13,000,000. This report was made at about the beginning of this session of Congress. The local people interested, recognizing that Congress would probably require a larger contribution from them than that which they had formerly proposed to make, felt that they would require further time to investigate the matter and ascertain just what propositions they could make to Congress. Therefore, as the Representative of that district, I did not ask the Rivers and Harbors Committee to incorporate in this bill an item for the Trinity River. I make the statement for the purpose of explaining, in a measure at least, the absence of the item in the bill, and to explain to the Members of the House why the people of Dallas and vicinity have not proceeded further with reference to the $3,000,000 proposition which they authorized me to make at the last Congress. I hope that when this bill comes before the committee again for consideration that I will be prepared to make the committee and Congress another definite proposition looking to the completion of this project.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I was not able to hear all the statement that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] made with relation to this matter, although I realize his very great interest in the improvement of Trinity River, as he has expressed it to the committee previously and also on the floor of the House. But in justice to myself and in the expectation of voting for the river and harbor bill when it comes to a vote to-day or to-morrow, as long as the question of the Trinity River has come up—and I am sorry it has come up—I wish to say that so far as I am personally concerned one of the reasons why I shall vote for the present river and harbor bill, and did not vote for the last one, is the fact that the Trinity River is left out. There were two or three similar propositions in the last river and harbor bill that are not in this bill.

When general debate was on a few days ago I stated that I thought there were fewer items to condemn in the present bill than in any bill during the last four years, and the omission of the Trinity River and the Brazos, and a few of the same kind, is one of the reasons why I made that statement.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SUMNERS. I do not know whether the gentleman understood my statement——

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not hear all of it.

Mr. SUMNERS. My statement was in explanation of why we had not proceeded further with reference to the $3,000,000 proposition that I made last year to your committee. I am going to present it when the river and harbor bill comes before Congress next year, and I hope the gentleman will put on the slow pedal in so far as prejudicing the Trinity River project is concerned.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say that no member of the committee, certainly not myself, would in any way impugn the good intentions of the gentleman from Texas in thoroughly living up to any statement that he ever made to any of us, because we all appreciate the high character of the gentleman and his good faith in carrying out what he may promise to undertake.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent channel depth of 9 feet, $6,000,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building and protection of levees, at the localities under the jurisdiction of said commission, including the Ohio River from its mouth to the mouth of the Cache River, which may be done, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, by hired labor or otherwise, and for surveys, including the survey from Head of Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That of the money hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary shall be expended in the construction of suitable and necessary dredge boats and other devices and appliances and in the maintenance and operation of the same.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the act of 1916, which carried a paragraph providing that any funds in that act or which may hereafter be appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Mississippi River between Head of Passes and the Ohio River, and which might be allotted to levees, might be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War on any part of the river between Head of Passes and Rock Island, Ill.

This paragraph in the bill I have no doubt intends to carry out this provision which is now a part of the law of the land. In the event that this bill should fail in the Senate and a lump sum should be appropriated, and any part of the lump sum should be allotted for levees on the Mississippi River, the clause in the act of 1916 would undoubtedly come into operation, and appropriations for levees on the Mississippi River would also be expended for levees on the upper part as far as Rock Island.

If the bill should become a law, it is a question in my mind whether this paragraph would permit the expenditure of the $6,000,000 that might be allotted to levees on the upper Mississippi River as far off as Rock Island. The paragraph provides for an appropriation to be expended on the Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River. Then later on in the paragraph it authorizes the engineers to use a part of this money for the general improvement of the river and a part of it for completing and for the protection of levees at the localities under the jurisdiction of the said commission. The commission has never exercised jurisdiction, until the act of 1916, over levees on the upper river. I want to suggest to the committee, knowing as I do that the committee intends that this section shall carry out the provisions of the law, the advisability of offering some committee amendment to make it plainer.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, to make the matter certain which the gentleman from Illinois thinks is uncertain, I will offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17, page 31, after the first comma and before the word "for," insert the word "and," and after the word "levees," at the end of line 17 and before the comma, insert the words "between Rock Island, Ill., and Head of Passes."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee why should the Government build levees along the Mississippi when it does not build levees along the Missouri? The Missouri is much more liable to overflow up above the mountains than the Mississippi in the same place.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In principle there is no difference as far as I can see, but it has been supposed all along that the necessities were greater on the Mississippi River than on the Missouri River.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To go a little further, why should the Government, which is supposed to be working simply in the interest of navigation, build levees for either of them?

Mr. SPARKMAN. On the Mississippi and on some other rivers, but especially the Mississippi, that part between the mouth of the Ohio and the Head of Passes, it has been supposed, and is yet supposed, that the building of levees is to some extent in the interest of navigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On what theory?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Upon the theory that there is a tendency always to wash new channels and fill up the old channels. But revetment is more in the interest of navigation, but that is hardly a response to the question asked by the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would be true as to the Missouri River also.

Mr. SPARKMAN. My own individual opinion is that the building of levees along the banks of the river has very little to do with and affords very little protection to navigation. The main thing, of course, as we all know, is the protection of property against overflows from floods that come from above. And I want to say another thing right there—that the country has acquiesced in, indeed, has advocated, that class of improvement on that part of the river on the theory that the water coming from other States above overflows the lands below, causing great damage to property, and that the country at large ought to contribute, along with the people there, toward the protection against those floods.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then this is a reclamation project in part?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Very largely, though it is somewhat in the interest of navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 12, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "1."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I listened a few moments ago to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] in regard to this bill as he compared it with its predecessor which contained the item for the Trinity River. I differ with him in judgment as to the merits of the two bills. However, that is a matter of individual judgment. I can not understand how anyone after examining the 80 new projects that have been put into this bill can come to any conclusion that this bill is better than the other, notwithstanding that the Brazos and the Trinity and other projects are out. There are many items pointed out to-day along this line as vicious as any ever proposed in any river and harbor bill.

The amendment which I offer is an old one and I presume it will not be acted upon favorably by the committee, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and myself conducted a heroic though very ineffective campaign against the flood-control bill. At that time we believed, at least I did, and I take it that he did, that the Government has no right under the present order of things, under the present character of improvements that have been conducted, to reclaim land along the lower Mississippi River. I can submit and will submit extended remarks upon this subject showing that there is no question that most of this money is being used for the reclamation of lands or for the building of levees and revetments and things of that character. For navigation that river is the finest in the country; it has a splendid channel, as we have been told by Mr. BARNHART and all who use the channel. I will not refer to the commerce, because that has been discussed so many times; but I do say that it occurs to me that is a fair proportion of the amount that would be needed for an open channel, but I do not pretend to base any judgment upon it beyond that, and it is for the purpose of registering a protest against the use of Government money for the reclamation of lands along the lower Mississippi River.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman, as I recall, has asserted that if these items were to come in before the House by themselves they would likely not meet with the approval of Congress. Is it not a fact that this item for the lower Mississippi was segregated together with a bill for the Sacramento, and that it passed this House by a vote of 150 to 53, and that both of the items had been denounced by the gentleman, as well as by Senator Burton, as being exclusively reclamation projects; and is it not a fact that the gentleman was unable to get a record vote upon the two propositions that passed in the first session of this Congress?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct in every particular. The bill is not yet through the Senate, however. I do not know but that it may go through. However, it will probably get a record vote, and it will not be unanimous. I believe, however, that unless we want to stand committed to the policy of reclaiming lands, we should adopt this amendment. I concede that this is a case that merits attention among the first if we undertake private-land reclamation, but I have been opposed to it because I believe it to be wrong in principle. If the California proposition had not gone along with it, I doubt whether it would have had nearly the vote finally received. That is neither here nor there. I move to strike this out because the larger portion of the money, which is similar to that carried in the $45,000,000 flood-control bill, is for land-reclamation purposes.

UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER WASTE—$28,000,000 APPROPRIATED FOR WHAT?—THE UPPER RIVER HAS BEEN SURRENDERED TO A POWER COMPANY THAT CONTROLS AND PREVENTS NAVIGATION—$27,000,000 OF GOVERNMENT MONEY HAS BEEN LARGELY WASTED ON THE UPPER RIVER, WHICH IS ONLY A FRACTION OF $159,000,000 APPROPRIATED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER DURING PAST YEARS TO OBTAIN A WATERWAY.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit notes gathered on a trip taken down the Mississippi River in August, 1916. I have lived on or near the river for many years, have boated the river during much of that time, and believe that the statement submitted gives an accurate understanding of actual conditions on the upper Mississippi River to-day. I offer herewith the testimony of many witnesses.

By preface, it was no ride at Government expense or through the courtesy of anyone, but was taken in order to have first-hand knowledge of a 700-mile section of the Mississippi River on which we have spent $27,000,000, during which time commerce has decreased 90 per cent, and yet navigation has never been more dangerous nor obstructed for reasons specifically set forth.

No conscious bias beyond that developed by facts presented exists, and I may further add that I traveled at my own expense, had no letters of introduction, and was unacquainted with a single officer or pilot of the boat or company when I took passage at St. Paul. Further I will say that other river pilots with whom I am acquainted, and who are among my own constituents, have confirmed the judgment herein expressed, and strongly commend the efforts to bring facts and the enormous waste of money to public attention.

After several years' study of river and harbor legislation, I am convinced that the cancer of waterway waste, reaching hundreds of millions of dollars, has its seat in the region of the country drained by the rivers of the Mississippi Valley. Waste occurs elsewhere in creeks, rivers, and bays all along the different coasts, but in the Mississippi Valley occurs waste that annually reaches a dozen millions or more. For this reason I invite attention to one project, typical of many, which discloses where the fault lies and how far afield we have drifted from the actual needs of navigation.

The criticisms are intended to be helpful, and I am prepared to admit that Congress is primarily responsible for results, because it has blindly followed recommendations of those who neither by training, taste, nor experience are fitted for the practical side of navigation or business methods. This does not impugn the honest motives of men nor the integrity of officials, but we should face the facts and assume our own share of responsibility.

MEMORANDA OF DATA AFFECTING THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER FROM ST. PAUL TO ST. LOUIS, GATHERED ON A TRIP DURING THE MONTH OF AUGUST, 1916.

We left St. Paul Thursday night, August 24, on the steamer St. Paul, Capt. Day in charge, with about 120 passengers aboard. The visible freight consisted of two automobiles, a Ford machine carried part way, a few boxes of soap, possibly 20 or 30 in number, and several cases of beer and Bevo, destined for river points in Iowa. The boat has 1,200 tons capacity, but carried less than 50 tons of freight, including weight of passengers and baggage.

The St. Paul is the largest boat on the river. It is about 270 feet in length, 74 feet in width, and draws 3½ feet or 5 feet when fully loaded. Remained on deck practically all of each day, and the first traffic boat seen on the river, aside from Government craft marked "U. S.," was a little towboat with a small barge of sand. This we passed below Clinton, 354 miles distant from St. Paul, on Saturday, August 26, at a point practically half way from St. Paul to St. Louis. It was reported that we passed the first boat at Dubuque during the night at a point 289 miles below St. Paul. On the trip down we passed probably 20 or more boats marked "U. S." tied up on shore or engaged in work along the river. Some of these were flatboats loaded with stone or brush; several dredges, most of which were idle, and two dredges belonging to the Burlington Road, near La Crosse, were also passed along the river.

With the exception of Government work boats the river was practically deserted from daylight to dark. Our boat whistled alone for landings or drawbridges. I was informed by officials of the boat that there is very little river traffic found on the upper Mississippi River.

The captain of the St. Paul, Capt. A. O. Day, a man of high standing, has traveled on the river for over 30 years. He formerly owned boats on the river and related many instances of his struggle with railway companies, which have now captured all the river freight. As stated, his boat, the St. Paul, is the largest on the upper Mississippi River, and is reported in the folder to have a 1,200-ton capacity, but she didn't appear to carry more than a dozen tons on the trip, apart from passengers and baggage.

BOATS RUN 12 WEEKS EACH YEAR.

The St. Paul is maintained by the passenger business, which ceases about September 1, when school term begins. It made 7 round trips during 1916 in a season of less than 12 weeks, and is the largest of several boats run by the Streckfus Line, largely for excursion business. Our boat easily passed over bars of 4 feet, when the measurements were called out by the pilot, but we were stuck on several bars below Keokuk and landed 17 hours late in St. Louis. Capt. Day said that before improvements were made on the river an average depth of about 6 feet in the channel was usually maintained during the boating season. At that time fully 130 boats were on the upper river. For some years the number has been growing less, until in 1916 probably not more than a dozen boats are engaged in actual regular river traffic, and of these the Streckfus Co. has three passenger boats and two excursion boats in use. As before stated, all the boats rely on excursion business for support, and none are serious freight or passenger competitors of the railways which run along both banks of the river.

A significant statement made by Capt. Day, of this the largest boat on the upper Mississippi River, is to the effect that after Government expenditures made on the upper Mississippi River—now aggregating over $27,000,000—the river is in worse condition than before the expenditure of a dollar was made. One evidence pointed out lies in the poor channels and vastly increased dangers now incurred. Capt. Day indicated sunken wing dams along the river, some of which were afterwards taken out by the Army engineers, who first put them in. No lights were on these wing dams as a rule, and they are a constant menace to pilots at certain stages of the river. Of course the menace is not so widespread since the 130 boats have diminished to approximately 10 per cent of the number formerly on the river.

FOUR-FIFTHS OF THE MONEY HAS BEEN WASTED.

Enormous waste of Government funds was pointed out on every side in order to verify some old or new theory. I asked Capt. Day how much money was needed for the maintenance of a channel in the upper Mississippi River, according to his best judgment. His answer, given in the presence of others, was significant. Dividing the 700 miles of the upper Mississippi River, from St. Paul to St. Louis, into six districts, he said $30,000 would be sufficient to run every single district, or a total of $180,000 annually, for the upper river.

Asked what was being done with the $1,500,000 now annually dumped into the river, an amount nearly ten times that required for actual navigation, he declared little permanent benefit had been secured by the vast expenditure of $27,000,000, and reiterated that in many respects the river was more easily navigable before this expenditure had been made.

This judgment is not from an irresponsible or immature man seeking to carry out a theory. It is the conviction of a riverman of vast experience who is running the largest boat and one of the very few boats left on the river. Other rivermen and pilots gave similar opinions, although not always with equal frankness.

A SPECIFIC INDICTMENT OF CRIMINAL CARELESSNESS.

At Keokuk our boat dropped 30 feet in the locks so that the upper part was 15 feet below the level of the canal-lock walls. When down in the four-walled pit the captain said that in case of fire the Government has made no provision for saving passengers. No fire apparatus is on the adjoining walls, which walls are controlled by a private power company. No chance of escape is offered to passengers or crew, and sometimes 1,000 excursionists are carried on a single boat through the lock. The only method of reaching the top wall is by a little iron ladder 1 foot wide. Caught by fire, flood, or other disaster within this 30-foot four-walled cellar, passengers would be helpless, like rats in a trap.

The boat is in the lock only for a few minutes at a time during which to guard against accident, but as boat officials said, "We need an Eastland disaster to get relief from the Keokuk Dam menace." Ladders and fire apparatus should be provided either by the Government or power company and protection should be provided without delay.

Another fact appears to be notoriously in evidence. The Keokuk Dam has been turned over to a private company by the Government. Col. Hoffman is in charge of this part of the river. Many tales of his orders and pronouncements were related by different pilots and engineers, running from his efficiency record, when he cut the wages of men in two, in order to make a showing to his superiors, down to his arbitrary dealings with rivermen, none of whom apparently give him a good word. Possibly they were prejudiced, but the river is primarily for navigation, and the power company and engineers are now the appellant court to which rivermen must appeal.

While instructions require that dam gates be opened so as to maintain sufficient water for navigation, it is cheaper for this private power company to generate electricity with a 30-foot head than with one of 25 feet, and so river soundings in the channel a few miles below Keokuk frequently showed only 3, 4, and 5 feet depths, which were called off in my hearing.

CONGRESS TO BLAME FOR POOR NAVIGATION.

Cooper Lake is a backwater formed by the Keokuk Dam of some 60 miles length and about a mile in width. When we went through the dam the water on the upper side, where the power is generated, was reported as at its usual level. We were dropped about 30 feet in the lock, and from the dam down to Alton we hobbled over sand bars, with occasional involuntary stops, totaling 17 hours' delay, before we reached St. Louis. At that point readings were presented to me showing that the Keokuk Power Co. monopoly not only dams the greatest river in the world and sells its power at top-notch figures but it also obstructs and prevents navigation on a river which has thus far swallowed up $27,000,000 in public funds. The Keokuk Power Co. lobby, like the Muscle Shoals Power lobby, on the Tennessee River, does not waste its time with Congress after securing a great public right for its private purpose; but what answer can be made to the charge of rivermen that both Congress and the Keokuk Dam need an intimate acquaintance with the facts when both, acting with the Army engineers, have practically destroyed navigation on the upper Mississippi River excepting during two or three of the earlier months of the year.

The Government wastes much time and effort in protecting navigation on mud creeks throughout the country, and Congress betrays interest wherever a railroad bridge or other obstruction is proposed on streams little or big, but on the greatest river in the world we close our eyes to the Keokuk Dam and to real needs of navigation.

PLENTY OF WATER, SO RESPONSIBILITY IS CLEAR.

Plenty of water for navigation was found at St. Paul when we started on the trip, and for many miles below on the river, until Keokuk was reached. The St. Croix, Chippewa, Cedar, Wisconsin, and numerous other navigable rivers empty into the Mississippi; but after leaving Keokuk, below the dam, the river was shallow and neither wing dams, dredging boats, nor Army engineers have been able to relieve the situation. At different points along this part of the river the shallow condition exists, and the Dubuque, Quincy, and St. Paul, belonging to the Streckfuss Co., were repeatedly grounded. The Keokuk Dam benefits a private power company. I am informed this power is sold in St. Louis at the same cost that would be required if generated by coal and steam. It is a private monopoly, pure and simple, and has the privilege of damming the greatest river in the country. It seriously interferes with what little navigation remains. It was a piece of profligacy to give away to a private company this public right, and Congress is to be blamed for the situation which has been brought about.

Last year we appropriated $1,500,000 for the river above St. Louis in order to keep contractors and Government employees busy on a useless job. The 1916 bill passed the House at $1,200,000 after a hard fight. Champions of economy and of the people then went the House $300,000 better and secured more money for the upper Mississippi, an extravagant project, which lacks navigation or boats with which to navigate. One million five hundred thousand dollars for the upper Mississippi in 1916 is at the rate of $2,000 per mile, whereas, according to Capt. Day, $180,000 for the 700-mile stretch would have done better work if properly used.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT GOES BY RAIL; WHY?

The situation is significant. From St. Paul, Minn., to St. Louis, a hundred or more river towns, little and big, are shipping hundreds of millions of tons of products annually. The amount is so large it would be hard to accurately estimate, but presumably 99 per cent of all that traffic is carried by the railways, while the Government is spending millions of dollars every year on the Mississippi River without producing any result. Probably less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the actual commerce along the river finds its way into an insignificant freight tonnage carried on the river. This is apart from sand, logs, and ferriage statistics which have figured in Army engineers' reports. The tonnage is carried by several boats, whereas a hundred or more boats were engaged in actual traffic throughout a large part of the year before Government improvements were begun. For this same traffic Army engineers in 1916 recommended $2,000,000 for upper Mississippi River annual improvements, in addition to the $27,000,000 already expended. The recommendation for $2,000,000 is ten times the amount suggested by Capt. Day, who runs the largest boat on the river. What can better describe the unbusinesslike method of river improvements carried on by the Government than this very fact, and what further illustration is required to show hopeless results?

Engineers have asked for specific complaints of neglect or inefficiency. These are pointed out all along the river. Lights are supposed to be placed for steering so as to aid pilots, yet many of these are so obstructed by the surrounding brush and trees as to be of little use. I say this from personal observation. Light 288 is 65 miles past St. Louis. It could not be seen either from above or below because of surrounding foliage. My attention was directed to this and other lights by the pilots, who claimed to have made complaint of these conditions. The current is constantly shifting on the river. When Col. Hoffman was asked for targets to mark different reaches of the course, he was reported to have said, "We can not afford to place targets on every course," and yet Hoffman runs the division by efficiency methods, leaving pilots to run the course by guess.

"IMPROVEMENTS" HAVE INCREASED DANGER.

Take the buoy proposition. Hundreds of dams project out into the river, frequently sunken just below the surface and at angles of the river where no exact means exists of determining the end of the dangerous artificial reef by day or by night. Pilots pointed out this danger and said in reply to their demands for buoys only a limited number were furnished, and these were not placed until July, 1916, or at a time when the season was nearing its close. In one case, the pilot showed where he is obliged to steer by a snag in the center of the stream because the buoy, once established, had long since disappeared. It was said that a small boat with five men could establish all the buoys needed. Two boats would do the work on the upper river in proper shape, and yet the Government keeps a large fleet busy building mats, dams, and trailers parallel to the channel, while neglecting the most important part of present navigation.

In discussing experiments made by engineers, it was pointed out by pilots that on the Minnesota side of the river, below Winona, a dam was put in on one side of the river, then taken out because it was not giving anticipated results, and then again replaced on the first site. An experimental boat, one of these built by Army engineers, was pointed out. It draws, I am advised, 4 feet of water. The largest passenger boat on the river, the St. Paul, 1,200 tons, only draws 3½ feet when running light, but in building experimental towboats we provide 4-foot draft, whereas an important element to consider in river navigation is the advantage of a light-draft, practical boat.

BARGE ANTICIPATIONS AND REALIZATIONS.

Mr. Barnhart's barges have been heralded for years, but it is significant that not one of Barnhart's boats is on the upper river. They are run by screws and, in the judgment of river men, there is no more show for a commercial screw boat on the river than for a battleship on the Trinity River in Texas. Not enough water and too much bottom to the river explains the situation. Such barges can not back up and are of no possible use on the upper river, according to every practical river man with whom I consulted, and yet they are heralded by river lobbies which are interested solely in procuring large appropriations. Barnhart was promised 600,000 tons of merchandise by merchants on the lower river if he would put a line of barges to New Orleans. When he went after the freight with his first barge, I am informed he secured a total of four carloads. He also went to St. Paul after river freight with his unloaded barge and they gave him bouquets, banquets, and fine words. New Orleans and St. Paul were strong on promises, but railways continue to carry the freight and Barnhart recuperated last summer in the quiet surroundings of a sanitorium, reflecting upon the uncertainties of Mississippi River navigation. No regular boat line runs from St. Louis to New Orleans, I was informed, but $6,000,000 or more is annually spent for the lower river, $325,000 for the middle stretch and $1,500,000 more on the upper. No noticeable freight is carried on the upper river outside of the misleading statistics. That is our Government's ledger account for an expenditure on the upper and the lower Mississippi River, already reaching $150,000,000.

FROM THE MEN WHO USE THE RIVER.

When in St. Louis I visited the Streckfus Co.'s officers, who were all strangers to me, and asked what complaints, if any, they had made as to conditions. Reports of gauge readings were shown, verifying the statements made by captains and pilots of water held back by the Keokuk Dam Co., which resulted in a 17-hour delay on bars below Keokuk for our boat, which drew only 3½ feet that trip. A statement from practically all the boat lines on the upper river is appended to show that criticism is not confined to one or two captains or pilots. These are the men for whom Congress is supposed to be appropriating millions of money annually on the Mississippi River for navigation purposes. Is their petition worth considering? Let me add the letter and petitions were not solicited. Upon being informed of conditions I stated that the matter could best be reached by petition from those using the river. Petitions are to their Representatives in Missouri and Illinois.

Letter was received while away from home and I am trying at this time to refer their communications to the proper department at Washington—Congress—which alone can get action. I trust their petition will get more attention than others sent to local officers, which have passed unrecognized, according to their report.

I assume these petitions have been transmitted in like manner to other Members, but in any event they speak for themselves.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

STRECKFUS STEAMBOAT LINE,
St. Louis, Mo., September 21, 1916.

Hon. J. A. FREAR, M. C.,
Hudson, Wis.

DEAR SIR: I, as secretary of the Steamboat Owners' Association, of St. Louis, Mo., who own, control, and run steamers upon the Mississippi River out of St. Louis, am handing you two copies (each different) of signed petitions (the originals of same are filed with this association) and await your wishes, when needed. They are also signed by many captains and pilots who have traversed this upper river.

These petitions, with your comments, should at once be referred by you to the proper department at Washington for immediate action.

We ask that you kindly furnish us with a copy of your letters to the department. The attention this river is getting, and has been getting this year, is unbearable.

I thank you, await your immediate reply, and beg to remain,
Yours, very truly,

JOS. STRECKFUS,
Secretary Steamboat Owners' Association of St. Louis, Mo.

PETITION 1.

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 21, 1916.

To the honorable Members of Congress States of Missouri and Illinois (on and along the Mississippi River from St. Louis, Mo., north), Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned steamboat men, have tried hard to make river navigation and transportation upon the Mississippi River north of St. Louis, Mo., a success, but it seems without avail.

Your Mr. A. E. Richards, assistant United States engineer, stationed at Hannibal, Mo., is, in our opinion, thoroughly incompetent and unreliable. He is apt and willing to cover up things he has failed to do, etc., but to actually aid us, one and all, he positively is the limit.

We respectfully ask for his transfer for this river and for the betterment of the service; his resignation, however, would be preferable.

We need action and attention on the Mississippi River during the early months of the year, not wait until September and October, when most all river traffic has ceased.

All this matter has been repeatedly called to the attention of Maj. Hoffman at Rock Island, Ill. He pays no attention to the same, has excuses, and has failed to ever notify us of any attention or investigation he or his office has ever given same. This data is needed by us.

The Mississippi River for navigation needs a competent set of men to manage same and to be on the job more of the time than off, as is apparent to people who have to and do run the river daily.

William Bush, pilot; Selby H. Crader, pilot; G. T. Williams, pilot; Jas. Phillips, pilot; J. E. Short, pilot; R. M. Streckfus, master Sidney; D. H. Dippel, pilot; J. H. Laycock, pilot and master; Eugene Sprinkle, pilot; H. Woodruff, pilot; B. A. Burns; Jos. Streckfus, master; Streckfus Steamboat Line, John Streckfus, president; Belle of Calhoun, O. W. Sebastian, owner; Jos. Streckfus, secretary; Capt. B. J. Winters; John W. Warren, master and pilot; John Streckfus, jr., master; John Streckfus, master.

A second petition is also submitted, which I find verifies the notes made on the trip down the Mississippi. Here are shown repeated evidences of neglect and arrogance that would not be permitted in any other department of the Government.

PETITION 2.

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 20, 1916.

To the honorable Members of Congress States of Missouri and Illinois (on and along the Mississippi River from St. Louis, Mo., north), Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned steamboat men, find the lighthouse service upon the Mississippi River from St. Louis north in a very bad, unsafe, and unsatisfactory condition.

We need more buoys, markings, lights, etc., and the attention given the river is inadequate and inexcusable. In fact, it is deplorable and dangerous, steamers grounding daily.

We ask that you proceed and have the lighthouse system on the Mississippi River north of Missouri River taken out of the United States Engineering Department (Maj. Hoffman, at Rock Island, Ill.) and placed back in the Lighthouse Department, where it formerly was, and furnish a lighthouse tender to do nothing else but attend to the lights and lighthouse duty, attending to same at all times, and not lay up on shore most of the time.

This needs immediate attention, and continual attention, not a few spurts now and then, but all the time, all the year navigation is on; and we want daily or trip reports of same. We haven't gotten a report of soundings and changes of channel, etc., for at least two years past. We want them and need them positively, the same as is furnished river men from St. Louis down by the Lighthouse Service steamer.

Wm. Bush, pilot; Selby H. Crader, pilot; G. T. Williams, pilot; Jas. Phillips, pilot; J. E. Short, pilot; R. M. Streckfus, master steamer Sidney; D. H. Dippel, pilot; J. H. Laycock, pilot and master; Eugene Sprinkle; H. Woodruff, pilot; B. A. Burns, pilot; John W. Warren, master and pilot; Jos. Streckfus, master; Streckfus Steamboat Line, by John Streckfus, president; Eagle Packet Co., by Henry W. Leyhe, manager; Belle of Calhoun, by O. W. Sebastian, owner; Steamboat Owners' Association of St. Louis, by Henry W. Leyhe, president; Steamboat Owners' Association of St. Louis, by Jos. Streckfus, secretary; Madison Coal Corporation (tugs), by Roy Parker, captain; Capt. B. J. Winters; John Streckfus, jr., master; John Streckfus, master.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER FROM THE MISSOURI TO THE OHIO—WHERE HAS EIGHTEEN MILLIONS GONE?

This stretch of 200 miles has received from the Government in appropriations $18,104,855, based on the recommendation of Government engineers. The pending bill carries $350,000, or $1,750 per mile for this short stretch of river.

Senator Burton is authority for the statement made in Congress that we have expended more money on this 200 miles of river than has been expended by the German Government on the Rhine. The commerce on the Rhine reaches many millions of tons annually. That shown on the middle section of the Mississippi River, according to St. Louis commercial reports, is insignificant.

Three sections of the river are presented briefly to show where our $130,000,000 of taxpayers' money spent on the Mississippi has been used under the recommendations of Government engineers and results achieved by that expenditure. Surely, it is a lesson in waste and mismanagement that calls for some better system and more economical administration.

ON THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI—PROFLIGATE WASTE RUN RIOT.

Over $100,000,000 has been spent by the Government on this project, including the Passes, of which amount $88,159,555 was appropriated from the Ohio River south to the Passes. After the enormous sum of money had been expended on the lower river, I quote from an address by the Chief of Engineers made before a waterway congress, December 7, 1916, a few weeks ago, wherein he says:

On the Mississippi River we have an improved waterway of ample depth and sufficient width and open the year round from St. Louis to New Orleans; but it is only just within the last year or two that that waterway began again to be used and used in a rational way.

In passing down the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans two weeks ago we left St. Louis one morning early. The same day a barge load of freight left St. Louis. All the way down the Mississippi River we saw that barge loaded at intervals. Finally we reached New Orleans, and the barge load of freight got there at exactly the same time. * * * Later I saw the manager of the barge line and he told me that, although this enterprise of theirs is but a new one and as yet is little known, it is to-day making money. [Applause.] Such a development when started is bound to go on.

PLAYING TAG WITH A BARGE.

After an expenditure by the Government of over $80,000,000 of taxpayers' money on this lower 1,000-mile stretch of the river, or at the rate of $80,000 per mile, we are informed that the lower Mississippi River is still in good shape for navigation. More than this, ocular demonstration of the fact was had that a boat was running on the river; it was seen. And according to the statement made before a rivers and harbors congress the engineers' boat kept up near the freight barge and saw it "all the way down the Mississippi."

In fact, the Government boat played tag all the way down the river with the only barge now running from St. Louis to New Orleans.

A boat has arrived. If the $6,000,000 given by the Government annually to reclaim private lands along this stretch of the river is wisely valued by landowners who are benefited, that barge will be kept going as an advertisement of the fact that after an expenditure of fabulous sums of public money, the river will still float boats as in days of yore when "improvements" were unknown. Hundreds of boats that once ran from St. Louis to New Orleans have vanished with the old oxen teams, but one barge has been discovered, and the Chief of Engineers kept his eye on that barge all the way down the Mississippi.

Can any greater exposition of the absurdity of the lower Mississippi River commerce be presented than a bare statement of facts offered by the Government official named, and can any greater evidence of waste of public funds be presented anywhere than that disclosed by appropriations aggregating over $88,000,000 for a stream which has lost its once great commerce, but thanks to Providence and an annual injection of from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 by the Government, a new barge has been constructed which floats and carries freight.

The lower Mississippi appropriation is not for navigation, but is used toward a 16,000,000-acre private-land reclamation project. project.

A HUGE LAND-RECLAMATION SCHEME.

Any man who desires confirmation of the purpose of the Mississippi land-reclamation scheme will find it fully expressed in the following statement from the 1912 report of the Mississippi River Commission, page 3724:

While the levees have a certain degree of utility in the improvement of the channel and are necessary to "promote the interests of commerce" by providing landing places for the interchange of traffic in times of flood and protecting the lines of railway behind them, their immediate and main value is the protection of the alluvial lands for the benefit of their owners.

What need be added to this unqualified admission by an official agent of the parties in interest?

Quoting from a comprehensive brief in the United States Supreme Court of Hon. B. E. Moses, of Memphis, he says in this connection:

This so-called protection of the alluvial lands along the Mississippi River is primarily and fundamentally a work of "reclamation," as that term is generally understood. * * * The history of the levee system along the Mississippi River is merely a repetition of the fight of mankind from time immemorial to reclaim for cultivation the fertile alluvial plains of the rivers of the world. The futility of the fight under the past method of "levees only" is apparent and real and has been impressed upon the people of the valley during the floods of the last two years by ruin, starvation, and death, incident to the breaks in the levee system.

The Government is reclaiming lands that were never before used, and for the benefit of private interests. This purpose is not disputed by any recognized authority, so far as I can ascertain.

It is cloaked under the title of "flood control," "navigation," and other delusive terms, but with the best channel in its history, without producing any commerce, this bill taxes the people for $6,000,000 profligate waste on the lower Mississippi.

WHAT HAS $28,012,091 BOUGHT FOR US?

On January 13, 1916, about a year ago, on pages 1125 and 1126 of the RECORD, I gave a statement of upper Mississippi traffic, which is based on the Chief of Engineer's Report for 1914. This same official in the 1916 report recommends $2,000,000 more for the 700-mile upper Mississippi River stretch, and asks that it be placed in the pending bill. He further reports on hand for this upper-river project on June 30, 1916, $1,589,832. Remembering that the Government had appropriated for this 700-mile stretch of Mississippi River above the mouth of the Missouri $28,012,091, or $4,000 per mile, the following statement based on official reports shows how that great sum of money has been wasted in order to carry out a theory and maintain a regiment of employees.

The opinions of river men, steamboat owners, captains, and pilots, together with petitions, have been presented in order to get the public view of engineering inefficiency and extravagance. Let us now read the confessions as disclosed from official reports. I here repeat that part of my remarks of January 13, 1916, which bear directly on the waste of money along the upper Mississippi.

"PROFLIGATE WASTE."

Keeping in mind that actual commerce on the river has probably decreased 95 per cent during the past few years, during which time over $25,000,000 of Government funds has been dumped into this 700-mile stretch of river, let us see how the Chief of Engineers excuses an allotment in 1915 of an even million in addition to the balance on hand and in addition to approximately $30,000 per mile already spent on this project. Examine his statement of commerce, taken from page 2437 of the Chief of Engineer's Report for 1914.

The report says the quantity of freight carried by all boats, including the rock and brush used in Government work and also including logs and lumber floated down the stream, is as follows, and then follows a table, of which 772,392 tons hauled 9,445,576 ton-miles, valued at $781,897, is for material used by the Government in improving the river.

A comparative statement of upper-river commerce is also offered by years, during which period $25,000,000 have been expended by the Government on the advice of Army engineers. While the 1913 commerce was only about 35 per cent of that floated in 1885, it will be ascertained upon analysis that over nine-tenths of the 35 per cent floated in 1913 is bogus commerce, or, assuming the 1885 commerce reported to have been legitimate, in 28 years river freight fell approximately 96 per cent.

Referring to the 1913 statement, let us briefly examine the items, which show some remarkable facts.

ENGINEERS' STATISTICS OF COMMERCE (?).

"Commerce" reached 2,145,315 tons in 1913, so the Chief of Engineers reports. Tons of what? Let us see:

	Tons.
Brush for river construction work	82,450
Gravel dredged from river	398,178
Rock for river work	708,000
Sand dredged from river	562,000
Logs that have floated for 50 years	98,268
Lumber and wood barged	64,408
Animals ferried across river	55,322
Automobiles ferried across river	6,034
	1,974,980

All could be floated in 2 or 3 feet of water, leaving 170,335 tons of questionable commerce remaining, which was hauled on an average of 26 miles or thereabouts.

What a legislative travesty when eleven-twelfths of the commerce for which $1,000,000 was allotted by the Chief of Engineers is of that character. Who weighed the brush? Who weighed the logs? Who weighed the rocks, gravel, sand, and so forth, used in the river work? Where was it carried and for what purpose? Was it floated 1 mile or 10 miles? Who knows? Why measure Government material for river work, anyway?

A WONDERFUL SYSTEM IN VALUING "COMMERCE."

The Chief of Engineers says that 26,609 tons of horses were carried a mile and a half across the river, and their value was $6,540,900, or one-fifth of the total. Other live stock carried across the river, he says, was valued at $5,218,730; and then, to cap the climax, this report adds that 6,034 tons of automobiles ferried across the river were valued at $9,545,950.

Nearly two-thirds of all the glowing commerce valuations on the upper Mississippi, including Government sand, rock, and gravel, turns out to be animals and automobiles ferried across the river.

Again, how much of the remaining 170,000 tons was repair material or Government supplies out of a total of 772,000 tons reported? How much was duplicated before it could boost a million-dollar allotment for the upper river?

QUADRUPLICATIONS OF SAME FREIGHT STATISTICS.

Last session Chairman SPARKMAN was asked by Mr. CALLAWAY in debate if river tonnage passing different places was not often included in the Chief of Engineers' reports, and if it was not duplicated, to which the chairman frankly responded: "Oh, yes; it is duplicated, triplicated, and quadruplicated in some cases." With that indefinite rule of estimate, if 170,000 tons, not of Government materials but of actual commerce, still remained, but was quadruplicated in computation, it would actually amount to less than 45,000 tons, for which $1,000,000 was given April 1 by the generous Chief of Engineers, with an additional $1,000,000 annual interest charge for past expenditures. Yet the little harbor of Ashland, in my own State, handled 5,623,000 tons during the same year, excluding 35,000 tons of logs, while the Superior-Duluth Harbor handled 46,875,416 tons, or about 1,000 tons to 1, if river estimates were quadrupled by our guardian of the Treasury, the Chief of Engineers.

What shall be said of an official who now demands $2,000,000 annually for traffic that has decreased to an insignificant fraction of what it was 30 or 40 years ago? Comparatively no expenditures were then made on the upper river; $2,000,000 annually now. What value can be attached to such flimsy statistics which serve as a basis for an expenditure of a million dollars annually?

From $6 to $16, depending on the basis of estimate, is the annual cost to the Government for every ton of actual commerce on the upper river, including river ferriage, and of that remaining "commerce" 22 per cent was shells and soft coal floated a few miles in barges. We could have built a permanent bridge in 1915 across the river with that million dollars or bought a hundred ferries, if need be, or could have built and stocked 50 miles of Government-owned railway, with something to show for the investment. Again, we could have built a fine highway from Minneapolis to St. Louis. Better still, and up to date, we could annually buy a half dozen Ford trucks to carry all the actual commerce on the river and turn a good part of the remaining nine hundred and ninety thousand-odd dollars back into the Treasury to help lighten war-tax burdens and save a depleted Treasury from bankruptcy. But scores of dredgers and contractors would have been without occupation. Reasonable channel work on the river is needed, but who can excuse this great waste?

In a public speech at St. Paul August 3, 1915, Senator Burton declared the present St. Paul to St. Louis stage of water of 4½ feet is greater than the Elbe's, and yet our river is without commerce. What has become of the $25,000,000 spent on the upper Mississippi River? Who divided the money and who is behind the lobby that is now wildly shouting for more? Where is the commerce? Twenty-five million in 40 years for dredgers while we were losing our commerce.

NO COMMERCE PRESENT OR PROSPECTIVE.

Last session the bogus river commerce on the upper Mississippi was exposed. I have been criticized by Representatives from St. Paul and Minneapolis because of assumed disloyalty to my own section of the country. In other words, it was proper to denounce worthless southern expenditures, providing we overlooked northern waste. When it was demonstrated that Mississippi River commerce is a myth, the House was gravely assured that an experimental trip was to be made in 1915, and commerce would be rejuvenated by Mr. Bernhard, a New Orleans barge owner, who figuratively, could make water run up hill. Two barge lines had proved disastrous failures in recent years, but another commercial Ajax had been discovered, and he proposed to revolutionize economic laws.

Picture the situation. The Twin Cities receive or ship, possibly, several hundred million tons of commerce annually. The Government contributes nothing toward the expense, but, on the contrary, the Interstate Commerce Commission and State railway commissions are authorized to prevent freight extortion by controlling railway charges. On the other hand, before one dollar was ever expended on the river, over 40 years ago, several hundred boat arrivals occurred annually at St. Paul, but after an expenditure by the Government of some $25,000,000 on the upper Mississippi River, commerce is comparatively non est, while nothing larger than a logger's batteau or an Indian canoe ever tried to get up to or go down river from Minneapolis.

The Chief of Engineers gives ridiculous commerce reports and rainbow promises to justify continuing extravagant expenditures; but this year St. Paul tried to enlist business men in furnishing freight for the Bernhard barge proposition, and I quote from a report to show how the mountain labored in order to bring forth a diminutive mouse. Ponder over this tremendous folly and ask yourselves what lunacy commission would report as of sound mind any business man guilty of the feeble judgment Congress has displayed with an annual investment of $1,000,000 in this upper Mississippi River project. Every year it nestles in the barrel recommended by the Chief of Engineers and his army of dredgers and contractors. Why? Is it to offset the $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 annual lower river grab? Remember the following report is of possible, not actual, guaranteed river commerce, in anticipation of which Representatives waxed eloquent on this floor when the bill was before the House last session. I quote from the St. Paul Dispatch of August 12, 1915, but have a fuller statement of the report, which only emphasizes the folly attending an expenditure of twenty-five millions on the upper Mississippi River:

[From the St. Paul Dispatch, Aug. 12, 1915.]

DEMAND IS SLIGHT FOR RIVER SHIPPING—ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE COMMITTEE FINDS 20 FIRMS USING WATER FREIGHT.

A report made to-day by a special committee of the Association of Commerce shows little demand at this time for river transportation. An estimated tonnage of 10,464 inbound and 2,472 outbound for one year was made to the committee by 20 out of 64 business firms.

THIRTY-SIX DO NO RIVER BUSINESS.

Thirty-six of the 64 firms said they could do no business by river transportation.

Eight shippers said they may be able to use the river, but were unable to make any definite statement. Several of the largest firms did not reply to the communication sent to them by the committee.

REPORT FOR A YEAR.

The tabulated report for a year showed from foreign ports by way of New Orleans 1,124 tons of freight would come in and only 7 tons go out. From Pacific and Atlantic ports, by way of New Orleans, 4,200 tons will come in and 1,715 go out.

Along the Mississippi River 2,704 tons could be picked up and 165 tons sent to the way points. From St. Louis to St. Paul the inbound is estimated at 606 tons and the outbound at 360. Pittsburgh and other points on the Ohio would send 1,830 and take 225 tons from St. Paul.

TOTAL TONNAGE 12,936.

The total tonnage is estimated by the 20 concerns at 12,936. This is the estimated amount of the business and not an estimate of all St. Paul firms.

For October 160 tons can be brought in by river and only 3 tons sent out.

The committee which made the investigation is composed of H. T. Quinlan, J. W. Cooper, C. E. Tuttle, C. H. Bigelow, C. J. McConville, Charles Patterson, H. S. Sommers, J. A. Seeger, J. A. Gregg, and J. Clair Stone.

Can anything be added to this tragic statement of a $25,000,000 expenditure for a waterway that will float about 12,000 tons of commerce for St. Paul annually out of a hundred million tons and over handled by the Twin Cities? Some open-river expenditures ought to be made to provide for the small existing local freight, but $40,000 per mile is a notorious waste of money directly chargeable to the Chief of Engineers.

COL. TOWNSEND'S CONFIRMATION—A REMARKABLE STATEMENT THAT COMMANDS ATTENTION.

Before presenting the Merchants' Exchange illuminating table of commerce I desire to quote briefly from a speech made by Col. C. McD. Townsend, Army engineer and president of the Mississippi River Commission. Incidentally, the address was delivered before the $50,000,000 annual river lobby that recently held its annual round-up in this city. He said, page 215, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-fourth Congress:

St. Louis for the past 50 years has been the principal origin or terminus of the traffic on our western rivers, and its records summarize their tendencies. Its river commerce attained its maximum of 2,120,000 tons in 1880, and has since steadily declined to 153,000 tons in 1914. In contrast it may be stated that the commerce at Sault Ste. Marie, the outlet to Lake Superior, in 1880 was 1,300,000 tons, and attained a maximum of 79,000,000 tons in 1913. The commerce of New York Harbor exceeds 125,000,000 tons.

FOUR MILLION WANTED FOR MORE LAND RECLAMATION.

To show what Missouri and Illinois Members are up against I quote briefly from proceedings of the Upper Mississippi Drainage Association as reported in the Globe Democrat of November 9 last:

The chief topic under discussion was a plan to obtain Government aid in completing levees between Rock Island and Cairo. This can be done, according to statements made at the meeting, with $4,000,000. It was pointed out that $60,000,000 has been appropriated by the Government for work south of Cairo and a very small amount for the river north of Cairo. It was decided to ask the next session of Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 a year for this work.

Sure. But why stop at $1,000,000 or $4,000,000, when the lower Mississippi has had more than $60,000,000 and nearer $100,000,000 from the Government, largely for land reclamation? Why not demand that for every dollar spent on the lower river reclamation work and every dollar spent on the Missouri River reclamation work an equal amount should be spent on the upper river? In short, why not throw open the Federal Treasury doors and take over every land reclamation and private water-power project in the country? If one gets a grab, why not all? Incidentally, this is the 780,000-acre reclamation project covered by the resolution just offered.

IS NOT COL. TOWNSEND'S JUDGMENT SOUND?—IT CALLS A HALT ON 58 RIVER PROJECTS. WHY NOT?

Again, I quote from Col. Townsend's remarkable address before the river and harbor lobby, which was extended in the RECORD of December 11, 1915. Therein he says:

Specifically the writer would not abandon any navigable stream in the Mississippi Valley that has been partially improved, but would leave 58 of them in their status quo, confining operations to snagging and the maintenance of existing works, and would concentrate appropriations on opening up a channel of the capacity of that existing on the lower and middle Mississippi to Chicago and Pittsburgh * * *.

If the facilities thus afforded by the Government are utilized, the upper Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers should then receive attention.

Col. Townsend calls a halt on the upper Mississippi and the Missouri River improvements until the $100,000,000 Ohio and $275,000,000 lower Mississippi projects are finished; and if these streams are ever utilized (?), then go on with the remaining 58 projects, including the Missouri and upper Mississippi. He is amply sustained in his demand for a halt on the 58 projects, but our rivers will not be "utilized" for reasons hereinbefore set forth.

ANOTHER SPECIFIC INDICTMENT—SILVER STIMULANTS FOR THE MISSISSIPPI NEAR ST. LOUIS.

About $17,223,000 of Government funds have been dumped into the 200-mile stretch of the Mississippi, reaching from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio. After spending over $86,000 per mile on this part of the river, Senator Burton, the greatest waterway authority in the country, says we had spent more money on this 200 miles of river than the Prussian Government had spent on the entire length of the River Rhine during all the centuries that have passed. Traffic on the Rhine ordinarily reaches 45,000,000 tons annually; or many hundred times the traffic reported on this 200 miles of the Mississippi. Yet the Chief of Engineers gave $300,000 on April 1, 1915, in addition to $297,260 balance on hand, or about $3,000 per mile in 1915 to keep dredgers busy on this notoriously wasteful project, and this bill calls for $350,000 more for that 200 miles of river.

From an unexpected source Senator Burton is corroborated in his statement of monumental waste along this part of the river. All the faith of waterway lobbyists and river enthusiasts in recent years has been pinned to J. H. Bernhard, the boat builder, who once predicted a rejuvenation of river traffic. Every citizen devoutly hopes Bernhard's prophecy will be realized, but in a discussion by Mr. Bernhard, found in the proceedings of the American Society of Engineers for 1915, occurs this remarkable statement, that is respectfully dedicated to the horn of plenty controlled by Chief Kingman:

To-day the Mississippi from St. Louis to its mouth affords a channel which is the best to be found in any stream in the world * * * and see its emptiness. An 8-foot channel is all that the most efficient service requires. The Government works unremittingly to develop waterways only to see the water-borne traffic grow less as the years go by. Still the average "river man" will insist the poor condition of the channels keeps our inland waters idle. This is preposterous; the Rhine could never compare with the Mississippi in its advantages for transportation; its channel is narrower and shallower, more changeable, the current is swifter, and ice is known in the winter over its entire navigable length, yet in 1913 more than 97,000 vessels passed the Dutch and German frontier on the Rhine.

Here is the opinion of Bernhard, the man who once ran a barge to St. Paul and then threw up the sponge. Every authority that deals in facts and not rainbow chasing reaches the same conclusions. What have we secured for $130,000,000 in round numbers in these three stretches of the river, and how are we to unload a Sinbad burden that grows like Jack's beanstalk? "Criminal waste" is the only proper term to describe a condition of affairs which the public is supporting by direct taxes and through the recommendations of engineers. The Government ought not to contribute more than a nominal amount for maintenance of this river, according to the opinion of Col. Townsend, until we ascertain whether or not any of these improved inland waterways will be used by the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to and including the mouth of the Missouri River: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $350,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has associated me with his opposition to the Mississippi River item. I recall having taken some steps with respect to the flood-control bill, because at the time the flood-control bill came in a provision had already been made for the Mississippi River in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, and my criticism at the time was based largely upon the fact that we were taking away from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a very important branch of its work and perhaps preferring one particular part of the river work of the country to others equally deserving and worthy of Government appropriation. I desire to ask the chairman of the Flood Committee at this time as to the status of the flood-control bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The bill has been reported by the Senate Commerce Committee without amendment, and, in view of the fact that the prayers of the righteous availeth much and in view of the further fact that, being righteous, I am continuously prayerful for the passage of the bill, I think the chances for its passage through the Senate are good.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill carries $45,000,000, if I recall it correctly, for the Mississippi?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. An authorization of $45,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; with a view of completing the work?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Completing the levee work. There will be about $30,000,000 for levees, $15,000,000 for revetment, and that will be supplemented by not less than $15,000,000 contributed by local interests toward levee construction, and that will complete the levees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When the flood-control bill was before the House gentlemen interested in the Mississippi, of course, did not relinquish their claims upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but sought the appropriations in the usual way last year. They have done the same this year, since the flood-control bill is still pending in the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The flood-control bill, as the gentleman will recall, put the Mississippi and the Sacramento Rivers under continuing contracts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the purpose of the flood-control bill, but we have made two appropriations in the river and harbor bill for work upon the Mississippi since the Flood Control Committee was established.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; the river and harbor bill passed last year before the flood-control bill did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, who, as I have said before, is entitled to most of the credit for the establishment of that committee, having attempted to segregate the Mississippi improvement from other river work in the country, is hopeful that the bill will pass in the Senate. He is wise enough still to come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for such annual appropriations as may be necessary to continue the work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So it seems to me it may be a fair question—because I am not opposing the improvement of the Mississippi; I think it ought to be improved—to inquire whether the $45,000,000 contemplated in the flood-control bill might be reduced by the amount of appropriations that are being made through the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the rivers and harbors bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly, I believe that will be done. If the gentleman understands, the flood-control bill is not an appropriation bill——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But it simply authorizes a certain amount of money to be expended, and the appropriation, if the bill had been finally passed, would have been carried in the sundry civil bill. As it is, it is carried in the rivers and harbors bill, but I assume if the bill does pass the Senate, that next year the amount which is estimated will be carried in the sudnry civil bill and certainly if this $6,000,000 bill should become a law I assume that the $45,000,000 would be reduced that much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for one more minute to finish the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for one minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I take it the Flood Control Committee will adhere to its desire to obtain $45,000,000 for completion, notwithstanding there may be a lessening of the amount actually needed for completion, by virtue of the appropriations made in the rivers and harbors bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; $45,000,000 is the estimate, and we hope it will pass just exactly as it passed the House and as it has been reported now in the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FESS. Are we to understand, then, that if the flood-control bill passes these items will not be in the next bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was my understanding of the statement made by the chairman of the Flood Control Committee when the bill was up, and which he now repeats, that just as soon as the Flood Control Committee is in funds or has the authorization, then requests on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will cease.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly; and that would then go on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is it not a fact that this appropriation is for the same purpose as the flood control?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is no difference in the world.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Then the gentleman is kind of getting a double crack——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, the gentleman does not understand it. The same kind of improvements that are being carried out under the rivers and harbors bill will be continued under the flood-control bill if it passes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The flood-control bill, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, carries only an authorization for an appropriation.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That is true; but the money will be provided, and if the bill passes these items cover the same purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi to let us have this clear here at this time, so nobody will misunderstand it in future. If the flood-control bill does not pass the Senate, the bill is going to come up the next time, and we are going to thrash this all out again. Now, if I understand the proposition, if the flood-control bill passes and this bill passes, then the appropriation made to the Flood Control Committee will be $6,000,000 less than it otherwise would be?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MEEKER. It is not the intention to duplicate this appropriation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say it is intended, if the flood-control bill passes in time, that this will be reduced by six millions, is it not?

Mr. GALLAGHER. It is intended, if this bill passes and the flood bill is defeated in the Senate, that the work will go on?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This work would go on, of course. But if the flood bill would pass in the Senate, this would be just $6,000,000 toward that appropriation that is authorized. It would not be duplicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $1,200,000.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I suppose this may be called my project. It flows along the border of the State past some of the counties in my district. The engineers recommended $2,000,000 for improvement this year. Before the committee—and I do not think there will be any objection to my stating this fact—when asked my judgment, I said that it ought to be cut in two, if not more than that. It was placed at $1,200,000 on the advice of the chairman without objection, and that is what appears in the bill.

I have been advised, Mr. Chairman, at different times that I knew little about the river that I have lived on all my life and have been on a great many miles practically every year. So I was interested last summer in taking a trip down the Mississippi River for the purpose of renewing old acquaintance. We left St. Paul, which, as well as Minneapolis, can send all of the commerce of that great city by water if she chooses, but does not, and we went on the largest boat on the river, the St. Paul, down to St. Louis.

In my extended remarks, which I intend to include here, I will relate some incidents to those who care to examine those remarks, of the opinions of rivermen and the captain of the boat, one of the best captains in the country, Capt. Day, of the largest boat on the river, the St. Paul.

We had an abundance of water. You will remember that for only three months in the year they have navigation for these boats. This boat made seven round trips last year, supported largely by excursion business.

Briefly, the first boat we passed was about 300 miles south of St. Paul, which met us carrying any commerce—a small towboat—with a barge loaded with sand.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I do not wish to be interrupted until I make this statement and then I will yield. We went down to Keokuk without any trouble from the stage of water. We passed two or three boats of the line carrying excursionists and we had 100 passengers. At Keokuk we dropped 30 feet in the locks. In the statement that I will print I will show the trouble that we found with wing dams and conditions which Capt. Day said made the river far worse than before a single dollar had been spent on the river. We have appropriated $28,000,000 for this river. How it has been wasted. We went on down below Keokuk and there we were stuck 17 hours at three different points on the river. Why? Because the Keokuk Dam to-day obstructs the river by holding back the water for a 30-foot head. Notwithstanding the St. Croix and the Rock River and Wisconsin, all great rivers flowed into the Mississippi after we left St. Paul, yet after we got below Keokuk Dam the navigation was worse than at any other place.

I heard the Chief of Engineers say before our committee the other day that below Rock Island the river is in splendid condition. I not only take issue with him, but present the best authority that can be found in the country, better than that of the Chief of Engineers, and I desire to read it. That may be a pretty large statement, but I think I will convince the House that the statement is true.

Now, I will read from a letter from the Strekfus Co., of St. Louis, the largest and practically only boat line on the upper river. I have the letter, which was sent to me with two petitions. I received the petitions after having told them to take the matter up with their local Representatives. I shall read a part of both, but I will print it all. It was dated St. Louis, September 21, 1916, and was sent to me. I did not ask for this, but am glad to present it, for it tells a tragic tale of inefficiency and worse:

To the honorable Members of Congress of the States of Mississippi and Illinois (on and along the Mississippi River, from St. Louis, Mo., north), Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned steamboat men, have tried hard to make river navigation and transportation upon the Mississippi River north of St. Louis, Mo., a success, but it seems without avail.

Your Mr. A. E. Richards, assistant United States engineer, stationed at Hannibal, Mo., is, in our opinion, thoroughly incompetent and unreliable. He is apt and willing to cover up things he has failed to do, etc., but to actually aid us, one and all, he positively is the limit.

We respectfully ask for his transfer, for this river and for the betterment of the service; his resignation, however, would be preferable.

They go on to say—

We need action and attention on the Mississippi River during the early months of the year; not wait until September and October when most all river traffic ceased.

This is signed by 12 pilots and 5 steamboat men from the Streckfus Steamboat Co. and other companies.

A second petition is also submitted, sent in the same way. This says—

We, the undersigned steamboat men, find the lighthouse service upon the Mississippi River, from St. Louis north, in a very bad, unsafe, and unsatisfactory condition.

Only by reading the extended statement which I have prepared can you understand fully what some of these difficulties are, which have not been obviated but which have been made greater by these so-called improvements that exist on the Mississippi River. The petition goes on to say—

We need more buoys, markings, lights, etc., and the attention given the river is inadequate and inexcusable. In fact, it is deplorable, dangerous, and steamers grounding daily.

Understand, they have over 4½ feet above the Keokuk Dam, but below the dam the power company controls all agencies. It has destroyed any possibility of navigation. The petition proceeds—

We ask that you proceed and have the lighthouse system on the Mississippi River north of Missouri River taken out of the United States Engineering Department (Maj. Hoffman at Rock Island, Ill.) and placed back in the lighthouse department (where is formerly was), and furnish a lighthouse tender to do nothing else but attend to the lights and lighthouse duty, attending to the same at all times and not lie up on shore most of the time.

This needs immediate attention and continual attention; not a few spurts now and then, but all the time, all the year navigation is on, and we want daily or trip reports of same. We have not gotten a report of soundings and changes of channel, etc., for at least two years past. We want them and need them positively, the same as is furnished river men from St. Louis down by the Lighthouse Service steamer.

This is signed by a long list of pilots and a long list of steamboat men; practically all the men on the upper Mississippi River have signed. It was sent voluntarily by them, and is presented to the House in my extended remarks, which I will print here in to-day's RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, we have spent about $28,000,000 on the upper river, and according to the statement of one of the oldest and most experienced captains on the river, running the largest boat on the river, the St. Paul, the river is not in as good condition as it was before a dollar of money was expended. He says before those dams were placed there he could carry a large traffic; that then they had 6 feet practically the whole way, and now, during the short navigation season, they have less than 3½ feet below the Keokuk dam, where we grounded on several occasions. That is the situation that has resulted after an investment of $28,000,000 in the upper river. On the entire river the Government has invested $159,000,000, and during that time the once large commerce of the river has disappeared. Even now the men who run on the upper river receive no protection from the Government. A power plant owns navigation for which we have paid $28,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is the gentleman surprised, in the face of those facts, that the traffic on the river has declined?

Mr. FREAR. The boats under favorable conditions could not compete with the railroads, because the people will not send freight by these boats. That will be more fully covered in my extended remarks. Mr. Bernhard went to St. Paul with his barge and they greeted him with bouquets and with a banquet, but when it came to tonnage there was no promise from the men above, because they wanted better, quicker service, which they got from the railroads. I am confident that the only way you can get commerce back on the river to any extent is by making minimum rates in favor of boat traffic that will prevent railroads from driving the boats off the river. This boat line, the largest on the river, which runs only three months in the year, is maintained almost entirely by passenger business and not by the freight business, because there is practically no freight carried. On the boat on which I went down there were not 20 tons of freight, and it is a 1,200-ton boat. Outside of the passengers and baggage there were not 20 tons of freight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. My time has expired, I am sorry to say.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in agreement with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. Conditions on the upper Mississippi River, so far as the obstructions caused by the Keokuk Dam are concerned, are exactly as the gentleman from Wisconsin has described them. In fact, he has not told the story as bad as it really is.

Ten or twelve years ago we gave to the Mississippi River Development Co. the right to dam the Mississippi River, and the franchise we gave them is not limited by its terms. They constructed at Keokuk, on the river, a great dam, representing to those in England and in Canada and in this country, whom they induced to invest in the stock, that it was possible to develop there over 200,000 horsepower of electrical energy. Upon that statement, absolutely false, they financed this enterprise. I have in my possession a letter from the engineers, dated not long ago, advising me that 75,000 horsepower was as much as they could develop at that point on the river without impounding the water. By impounding the water there in the nighttime, and that is permitted by the Secretary of War and by the engineers, they are able to develop there horsepower somewhat larger than 75,000, but not nearly as large as the amount they represented they could develop. They market most of this in the city of St. Louis. They control the distributing companies in St. Louis and the public-service corporations and the distributing companies at the present time throughout Illinois, and no living man has been benefited by the building of this dam across that river. The property is now part of the rapidly developing Water Power Trust in this country, and the dam is an obstruction to navigation and river steamers do ground below the dam. That is made possible by the fact that the engineers or the Secretary of War, or both of them, have issued permits to the company now owning the structure across the river to actually impound in the nighttime the water which flows in the Mississippi River.

I had a hearing before the Committee on Rules some time ago and made a record of the existing evidence, and it shows that these permits are granted, and that as a result of that vessels run aground below the dam. I know of no reason why we should expend millions and millions of dollars upon the upper Mississippi River and then permit a private corporation to dam it up, and then permit executive officers of this Government to authorize that company to stop the natural flow of the water in the Mississippi River and hold it back of their dam in the nighttime. I now offer to amend this section by inserting, after the figures "$1,200,000," in line 11, page 32, the following language:

Permits shall not be granted by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers, or either of them, allowing the impounding of waters above any dam in the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 32, by inserting, at the end of line 11, the following: "Permits shall not be granted by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers, or either of them, allowing the impounding of waters above any dam in the Mississippi River."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order. I did not know that the gentleman was going to offer an amendment, or else I would have followed more closely the speech that he made concerning the navigability of this stream and the difficulty encountered by the construction of the Keokuk Dam. I am not sufficiently advised to allow this amendment to go through without some further elucidation of the subject. The amendment is clearly not within the province of this committee to report. The jurisdiction of matters pertaining to dams on navigable streams is with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I will ask the gentleman who proposes the amendment whether the matter has ever been considered by that or any other committee, or whether it is just merely the opinion of the gentleman framed to meet the conditions as he believes them to be?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have stated the conditions as I know them to be. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] will corroborate me in what I have said.

Mr. FREAR. I gave the statement of all of the pilots and steamboat men on the upper river to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unfortunately I was out of the Chamber when the gentleman from Wisconsin was discussing this item, and for a part of the time while the gentleman from Illinois was discussing it.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the dam as operated by the company now operating it is a real obstruction to navigation in the Mississippi River. The company is permitted by the engineers and by the Secretary of War to close its gates in the nighttime to prevent the water from flowing over the dam and down the river, so as to impound the water back of the dam in order that during the remainder of the hours of the 24 they can generate hydroelectric energy in a quantity sufficiently large to yield the returns the company operating and owning that dam think they ought to have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this proposal ever been submitted for investigation to the War Department or to any bureau or branch of that department?

Mr. RAINEY. I will say that I have called the attention of the War Department to it frequently.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has there been any formal investigation or hearing upon the subject?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; there was a hearing before the Committee on Rules in the House on a resolution which I introduced myself. The hearing was had about a year ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no investigation of its merits by any committee of the House?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I do not know that such an investigation has been had.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the matter is too important to incorporate in the rivers and harbors bill that will affect the rights—I do not know how extensively—of some large hydro company. It may be the users of hydroelectric power. I do not think that it is good legislation to put on this bill an amendment of this character——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). Without further investigation by some duly constituted authority of Congress or of the War Department. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. DYER. My understanding is that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce sent a subcommittee there for the making of certain investigations; what it was or what their report is I do not know, but I do not think they have made any report. I do not think myself the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois ought to be permitted at this time without more complete information, and I should myself insist upon the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The statement of the gentleman from Missouri confirms the position I was about to take, and I make the point of order.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, suppose I make this request: That this matter go over until we have reached the end of the bill and then we can return to it and probably in the meantime we can thrash out something that might meet the situation. I want to say that I myself would be a little afraid that we might do unintentionally an injustice if we adopted this amendment. I do not know that any investigation has been made, certainly the engineers have made none as the result of any action taken by Congress on the subject, and I think if we are going to do anything at all some provision looking to an investigation by the engineers would be better than to legislate now in the dark.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that this paragraph and amendment may be passed over with the point of order pending until the close of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the request.

Mr. RAINEY. I have no objection to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the public-buildings bill that passed the other day, and I desire to insert in connection therewith a couple of editorials from the New York Sun.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The paragraph has been passed over, with the point of order pending.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then I will not make the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River between Brainerd and Grand Rapids, Minn.: For maintenance, $2,000.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the proposition advanced on this floor a few moments ago that this House create a commission which would divest this House of authority to control the expenditure of appropriations under a rivers and harbors bill. In other words, as I understand it, we are to appropriate a lump sum which we leave entirely to the War Department or a commission created by this Congress, and that this commission would have entire charge of all sums of money appropriated by Congress to be spent in its wisdom.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. In just a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I was going to say the gentleman misunderstood the proposition I made. There is no such proposition as that. It was simply that a commission should take charge of the water resources of this country, of course operating under the direction of Congress.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That we would vest them with authority to go ahead and in their time spend sums of money and make recommendations. If this Congress would find the same condition of affairs existing under the expenditures of the sums of money that would place in their power, if this Congress would find the same condition of affairs existing in the handling of the powers that we would give them that we find to-day in the War Department in the handling of our troops on the border, I want to say for one that I am unqualifiedly opposed to it, and I hope I shall never see any such legislation enacted. Answering the call of the President of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of War, we gave authority to that department to take charge of the boys that came to the colors, and they were sent to the border.

We understand that in the handling of these troops on the border there would be no discrimination. I understood they were to be recalled from the border with regard to the longevity of their service, and yet, Mr. Chairman, I find that in my own State there has been the grossest discrimination against the boys from our State, to the extent that I feel that I could not properly represent the people of my part of the State if I did not come on the floor of this House and protest against the outrageous treatment that has been accorded them by the Secretary of War. He seeks to excuse himself from this only on the ground that he has divested himself of the authority and put it in control of Gen. Funston on the border. Why, Mr. Chairman, when we empower the Secretary of War to take charge of our men on the border he can not excuse himself by saying that he has delegated that authority to anyone. I have been there in person. I have received letters and telegrams from widows and from people at home who needed their boys there. It is true that we have had remarkably few deaths among the men that have gone from my State, but, Mr. Chairman, when I go to the War Department and ask for information as to the time that these men will be brought back, I am met only with the information that they have no idea, but that I must go to Funston. Why, it is a most remarkable procedure that Members of Congress coming here clothed with the powers that we have, have to go to the War Department and ask for the simplest bits of information affecting the men that we now have on the border and are referred to a man a thousand miles away.

Where can we get the information that we are to give to our people? We get it from nowhere. Has it been right, this treatment of our boys? Take the letter I have just received and which I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD. Take the report given me here by the Secretary of War, which shows on the face the grossest injustice in dealing with these men. Here are States, among them the State of Rhode Island, every single troop of which has been brought home. Why are our troops still there, that have been there within a few days of the same period of time that the others have served, troops that have been home for 90 days and that were not 90 days in the service on the border? And yet, what are we told to-day as to the reason why they should stay there?

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. May not this be the reason, namely, that the troops from your State are kept down there, so that they may require more drill?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Oh, yes; that may be the reason, and it may be the reason that because the troops of your State were incapable of good service, and they needed good troops, that mine are kept there. We will take the record of South Carolina, and the flag has never yet suffered at her hands. I will not discuss with the gentleman the troops of his State, because I want to stay on friendly terms with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, no man ever yet came here and tried to be smart or funny at the expense of the bravery of the men from South Carolina. No brave man, who knows their record and knows the history of that State, would ever question it. In all of history, all of the glory, of this country, on every field of battle, whenever called upon to do yeomen service, they have never faltered, and in a way the gentleman has never yet done, as far as I know, and their record speaks against any such insinuation as he would make against them. When he has gone to the front himself, when he has done anything that would make him worthy of holding this flag aloft, then let him come here and impugn the integrity and bravery of the State I represent, but until then please do not ask me for further time.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No, Mr. Chairman; I will not yield further to a man who wants to ask that question.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Why, certainly. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. The Secretary of War comes from my State——

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. All the troops went down at one time from Ohio.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. And part of them have been released and part of them have met with what you call a discrimination.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am not here to represent the State of Ohio. The gentleman does it so well that I would not wish to succeed him. I am here to take care of the people of my State, and I say that in the handling of the troops from the different States of the Union and the handling of the troops from my State there is shown an unfair and unpardonable discrimination.

If the Secretary of War, if Maj. Gen. Funston, will give to this Congress or to me, as a Representative of that people, any legitimate excuse that justifies their retention on the border for a period of time beyond that of other troops, and the reason for the discrimination between them and other troops, I will not say a word. But when I go to him as the Secretary of War, when I go to the proper authority, as I conceive it here, in the War Department, and I am referred to Maj. Gen. Funston as to the time they will come back, then it seems to me I have a right to protest.

There is no war on the border to-day. I understand that there is some little trouble over in Mexico, but I understand we are withdrawing all of our troops from Mexico.

If, therefore, our troops are no longer needed in Mexico; if the war, whatever it may have been in Mexico, so far as we are concerned, is at an end; if the time has come when all the other troops can leave there, has not the time arrived when all the Federal soldiers, the Regular Army, down there can defend themselves from the puny little band of Villa, and these men allowed to return to civil life, where they belong? [Applause.]

I have no desire to interfere with the operations of the War Department. I have no desire to do anything that would reflect in any way upon the attitude that this Government should take in its foreign relations. But I do say that one of two things ought to occur—we either ought to use the troops that we have on that border or, as far as they have been drawn from civil life, when they have served for the period of time that those men have served there by way of comparison with other troops they ought to be allowed to return home; and I would like to know from the War Department why it is not permitted to them. [Applause.]

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 24, 1917.

Hon. J. WILLARD RAGSDALE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RAGSDALE: Referring to your request over the telephone on yesterday afternoon for a statement showing the dates of arrival on the Mexican border of organizations of the National Guard and the dates of departure therefrom of such organizations for home stations for muster out, I beg leave to inform you that no official statement setting forth the information that you are seeking has ever been issued by the department. However, there is inclosed herewith a copy of a schedule which has been prepared for use within the department only, which sets forth the information sought by you. It is presumed that the schedule is substantially correct, but still I would not like to have it used in a public way or given out for publication as an official document.

With reference to the selection of National Guard units to be sent home for muster out, it may be stated that the general rule under which the commanding general, Southern Department, has operated has been to return such units in the order of their dates of arrival on the border. Other considerations, such as the tactical situation surrounding border service and the necessity for a gradual reduction at critical points on the border, which would not involve the entire depletion in any one section, have at times required a modification of the general rule mentioned above.

Trusting that the inclosed unofficial schedule may serve your purpose fully, I remain,

Sincerely, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

(One inclosure.)

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Secretary of War needs any defense at my hands or at the hands of any gentleman who really knows the man well. He is an able and faithful Secretary of War. He has his duties and responsibilities, and he has performed those duties and met those responsibilities ably and well.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina, my good friend Mr. RAGSDALE, finds that this man does not treat him with proper and courteous treatment when he goes down there.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; I never said that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I got the wrong impression, then, from the gentleman's remarks, and I think the House did.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That is no fault of mine if you drew the wrong impression of it yourself.

Mr. HEFLIN. That may be; but I will leave that suggestion to the judgment of the House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Then you ought to submit it to the judgment of the House and leave it to them.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do now most respectfully submit that question to the judgment of the House. [Laughter.]

The Secretary of War, Mr. Chairman, has important and serious problems to deal with. The advisability of keeping the soldiers on the border is not a matter that rests entirely upon the broad and manly shoulders of the gentleman from South Carolina. [Laughter.]

The able Secretary of War, chosen by the able President of the United States, is handling that question as best he can and without the aid and advice of the gentleman from South Carolina, and I have no doubt he will be able to handle it to the end without his good offices. [Applause and laughter.] The President of the United States, with his multitudinous burdens, has not yet, so far as I know, invited the counsel of the gentleman from South Carolina in the determination of the question as to whether the soldiers should be withdrawn from the Mexican border. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. In a moment; and I regret that the gentleman from South Carolina feels called upon to bear this great burden all alone. I seriously regret it. [Laughter.] Now, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEEKER. Is the serious problem that the President with his Secretary of War meets that of backing out of Mexico and saving his face at the same time? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. The President and the Secretary of War will handle that matter in a manner entirely satisfactory to the American people. They may not be able to handle it to the satisfaction of my Republican friend the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from South Carolina, but nearly everybody else will be satisfied with what they do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I just want to say this in conclusion, Mr. Chairman: The President and the Secretary of War are handling all of these propositions well, better than I could handle them, and I feel that when they want my advice as to how they shall best conduct the business of the Army they will make it known to me, and when they do I will be ready to advise them. [Applause.] In the meantime I shall leave it to my good friend from South Carolina to offer advice as to how best they may conduct these matters. The Secretary of War, I repeat, needs no defense at my hands or at the hands of any gentleman here. He is the able and faithful representative of the United States Government in the War Department, and wherever he is known the people regard him as a perfect gentleman and as a man of superb intellectual power. [Applause.] And as to the man in the White House, his intellectual qualifications tower above ordinary situations like Pike's Peak above the ordinary hills of the gentleman's district. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAGSDALE. One of the easy things that some men do is not to represent their people, but by following around and lallygagging and swinging incense to the President of the United States seek cheap notoriety among the people by letting them know that they are always ready to bow to the President of the United States and lead the public to think that they have a good standing at the White House. [Laughter.] I have no desire to be a favorite here with anyone. I have not come here to try to pose as the favorite of anyone. [Applause on the Republican side.] Nor do I seek nor sit and watch and prepare myself, like the learned and able counselor from the State of Alabama, for the time when the President will send to me for advice. I only pray God that the South Carolina troops will not have to remain on the border until the President does send to him for advice. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I can not yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the gentleman will note that the applause is on the Republican side.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman is so pleased with the sound of his own voice that he can not sit still, even for a moment. He loves to get up and hear himself talk, because he would fain believe, and has taught himself to believe, that he sings a sweet song and does it very gracefully.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. But, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman tells me that the President of the United States may come to us for advice on foreign affairs, I would point to the fact that the President of the United States went the other day to that body that he thinks is qualified to hear him on foreign affairs, and I have no recollection of having read where at the wonderful delivery of the President's views on the foreign situation he sent a highly embellished and beautifully engraved invitation to the gentleman from Alabama to be on the floor of the Senate to hear him. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I have no doubt it was an oversight, and that in proper time he will make amends to the gentleman from Alabama; but up to this time no request has come to the gentleman whose towering hills are the watch towers of liberty, where men are raised and sent here to defend this administration, and to tell us what great and good men they have there, and that we ought to listen to them and disregard the physical conditions and the wishes of the men on the border, while the State of Alabama shines so much brighter than does the

State of South Carolina; but if the gentleman will consult with some of the Senators who represent the State of Alabama, from which he comes, he may find himself in absolute accord with the War Department and the White House, and yet not reflect singly the views of the people of Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to pose here to-day as reflecting in any degree upon this administration, nor have I even indirectly said that the Secretary of War was discourteous. I merely said that as I understood it the Secretary of War, who in our form of government has always had control of the men in the field, has refused to give me any reason why these men should remain on the border, and has refused to show me any condition that justifies their retention there, and has refused to give me any excuse for the discrimination that I charge now exists; and I shall maintain that position, believing I represent my people at home, even at the expense of receiving strictures from the distinguished gentleman from Alabama. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Just one word.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Just one word.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi calls for the regular order. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn——

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw that demand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will not withdraw it. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to reply briefly to the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina, and I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not insist on the regular order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Mississippi does not want me to have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen Members present, a quorum. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began reading.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has been made.

Mr. BENNET. I move to strike out the last six words.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Clerk finish the reading of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will finish the paragraph. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

The Clerk read as follows:

Osage River, Mo.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to suggest a remedy to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE]. He ought to move into some doubtful State. Why should the Secretary of War pay any attention to South Carolina? He is sure of that vote. North Dakota got her troops back from the border, and see what she did on election day. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. North Dakota troops are on the border now and are not making any cry about getting back.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say another word or two in response to the attack made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] upon the Democratic administration. The gentleman calls himself a Democrat and comes from a Democratic district in South Carolina, but the attack made by the gentleman upon the Democratic Secretary of War was applauded only by the Republican side of the House, and if the gentleman from South Carolina enjoys this Republican approval of his attacks upon the Democratic administration, why, he is more than welcome to it. [Laughter and applause.]

Twelve years, Mr. Chairman, I have served in this House, and I never yet made an attack on the constituted authority of my party since it has been in power. I think, in the main, it has performed its duty, and now it is doing it so well that it is entitled to praise, not only of the Democrats, but of Republicans, too. I do not like to hear a man who calls himself a Democrat seriously assail a Cabinet officer who has been as faithful and correct and right as Newton Baker, Secretary of War, and I thought it would not be inappropriate for some Democrat to rise and enter his protest against that performance coming from a Democrat. If my loyalty to one as faithful as the Secretary of War Baker has excited in the gentleman from South Carolina the impression that I am playing for favor at the White House, he is welcome to all that he gets out of it. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am used to your performances over there. I attended to you on the stump in 12 States in the last campaign. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Was not one of those States the State of Maine? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I was up in Maine in September, but that was before Mr. Hughes got out on the circuit much. After he did get out it was not necessary to go in any of the States of the Union.

Now, since it is all over, while you nominated your strongest man, you are really sorry at heart that you nominated him, all of you. You have been defeated, you are down and out, and we propose to keep you down and out. [Applause on the Republican side.] You have been repudiated by the American people, and we are going to keep those stripes of repudiation where they can be seen. The Republican Party usually makes it plain to see the stripes, and we propose to keep that up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no more to say. [Applause on the Republican side.] There is nothing that makes a Republican quite so happy as to hear a Democrat say he is going to quit talking, because whenever a Democrat talks he enlightens the masses, and wherever the masses are enlightened it reduces the number of Republicans in this House. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Missouri River: For maintenance, and continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, $1,000,000; for snagging and maintenance between Kansas City and Sioux City, $35,000; for maintenance between Sioux City and Fort Benton, $50,000; in all, $1,085,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 6, before the word "in" insert "for revetment work, improvement and maintenance near Williston, N. Dak., $60,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered provides for an appropriation of $60,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River at Williston, N. Dak. The Federal Government has already made some improvements of the river at this point and the appropriation now asked for is needed for revetment work to protect revetment which has already been placed at this point to confine the river to a definite and permanent channel. At Williston the Government has expended nearly a million dollars for the construction of a large irrigation plant. The water for the irrigation project is taken from the Missouri River. Pumping apparatus and water pipes are placed on barges near the north bank of the river and in the work of the irrigation project it has been found necessary to protect the river bank from being washed away and the channel of the river changed.

On the 16th of December of last year Col. McIndoe, of the Division of Engineers of the War Department, made an investigation of the conditions of the Missouri River at this point and stated that there was urgent and immediate need for placing about 5,000 feet of revetment work there to protect the work already in place and to prevent the river bank from being washed away and the channel of the river entirely changed. The bank at this point is now and has been during the past summer washing away quite noticeably. The estimate is that that revetment work will cost about $12 a foot, and as there is needed about 5,000 feet, it will amount to $60,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand, then, from the gentleman's statement, that this is not a navigation project at all, but is to protect that irrigation project?

Mr. NORTON. It is to protect the river bank at a point near where the pumps and intakes for the Government irrigation project are located and as well to confine the river to its present channel. In addition to improving navigation, the work proposed to be done is necessary to properly protect Government property on the river bank at that place.

Mr. BORLAND. As a matter of fact that irrigation project has not been so successful as was anticipated, and at the present time it amounts to no more than furnishing power for cheap lighting of the city of Williston?

Mr. NORTON. They have not operated the irrigation plant there during the past summer, but they expect to operate this year. About 8,000 acres are now under cultivation under this project.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not this true, that they expected to pump water for irrigation purposes, and used their plant for that purpose, but pumping water for irrigation purposes is too expensive to enable people to farm at a profit in that particular latitude?

Mr. NORTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. And, therefore, they have used their power plant to furnish light for the city of Williston?

Mr. NORTON. The statement of the gentleman is not correct. The fact is that during the past few years they have had more than the usual amount of rain in that particular section of the country, and they have not had the need they will have in ordinary years for irrigation.

Mr. BORLAND. So it is not even working as an irrigation plant?

Mr. NORTON. It is true that it did not operate as such last year.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman says it is not a navigation problem and it is not even an irrigation project.

Mr. NORTON. The proposed work is much needed to improve navigation and to protect property on the river bank belonging to the irrigation project and to protect and complete revetment work at this point that was put in there by the Federal Government a few years ago. The improvement already placed there has cost, as shown at page 451 of the hearings, $63,910.69, and of that amount the citizens of Williston and the Great Northern Railroad Co. contributed $42,962.63.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there has been no report upon this and it is perfectly clear that it is not for the purpose of navigation, the committee has no jurisdiction of it, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; I should like to be heard in opposition to the point of order, Mr. Chairman. Clearly the amendment is not subject to a point of order. It is an appropriation for the improvement of the river at the point named and is an amendment which is certainly germane to the bill and to the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the river and harbor bill is not an appropriation bill, and we have no jurisdiction over rivers except for the purpose of navigation. This is neither navigation nor improvement of the river.

Mr. NORTON. The work proposed to be done under the appropriation provided for by the amendment will improve the navigation of that section of the river just as any improvement along the banks of the Missouri River will. It is true that it will also protect the revetment already in place and that it will protect property belonging to and a part of the Government irrigation project at Williston.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is for the purpose of helping the irrigation plant, and we have nothing to do with that.

Mr. NORTON. The revetment work that is proposed to be done there is needed, according to the engineer who recently examined the condition of the river at this point, for the proper protection of the river bank and the revetment work that was done there through an appropriation in this bill six or seven years ago.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it necessary to irrigate the river before it can be navigated?

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman knows anything about the Missouri River he can probably answer that for himself.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have been at Williston.

Mr. NORTON. Then the gentleman should know that this proposed improvement is certainly more needed than an improvement of the Red River for which the gentleman is asking.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the amendment. The amendment provides for revetment work, improvement, and maintenance near Williston, N. Dak., in the sum of $60,000. The Chair knows nothing about the merits of the proposition, but on its face the amendment purports to be a proposition for the improvement of the river similar to all of the other clauses which appear in this paragraph. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that there have been no surveys and no report of the engineers upon this matter; besides, we are not accustomed to specify the places where work is to be done. But the main objection to it is that there is no report from the War Department, or any of the engineers, upon which to predicate this amendment and the appropriation which it embodies.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman mean to tell the committee that there are no appropriations in this bill for revetment work and work to protect the banks of rivers?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, in general terms; yes.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly, there are many such.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I say in a general way, but the point I make is we are not specifying the locality for the expenditure in many, if in any, cases.

Mr. NORTON. The committee is specifying between Sioux City and Fort Benton.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There have been several of these propositions presented to the committee, and they have been almost, if not uniformly, turned down by the committee. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. NORTON) there were—ayes 13, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I thought the Chair recognized me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 4, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000," and on page 33, line 6, strike out "$1,085,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$185,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make any statement in regard to this except to say that it is practically in conformity with the recommendations of Col. Deakyne and Col. Townsend, and I know it will give opportunity for the committee to hear an excellent talk from our friend from Kansas City [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I may disappoint my friend from Wisconsin. I do not think he has enough faith in his amendment to argue it, and I do not think I shall. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Missouri River near St. Joseph, Mo.: Completing improvement at Lake Contrary, $25,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word just to make one observation on the Missouri River here, and that is, after an expense of $3,234,000 has been had on that branch of the river the commerce, according to page 2763 of the Army Engineer's report, reached 101,822 tons, of which sand hauled 2 miles by the owners was 100,335 tons, or 1,487 tons of commerce hauled by the Government at an expense of $100 a mile for furnishing the waterway.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Apoon mouth of Yukon River, Alaska: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 991, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $45,000.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, would the chairman of the committee have any objection to rising at this point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 13, at the end of line 13, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Snake River Harbor, Nome, Alaska: Completing the improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1932, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, $105,000."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20079, the rivers and harbors bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of illness.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. SANFORD] may be excused indefinitely, on account of the very serious illness of his wife.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. SANFORD] may be excused indefinitely on account of the illness of his wife. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SCHALL, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George E. Day, no adverse report having been made thereon.

VISIT TO MONTICELLO.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read a communication from the Hon. FRANK CLARK, of Florida, concerning the trip to Monticello.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House will leave Washington at 9 o'clock a. m., on Sunday, January 28, 1917, on the Southern Railway to visit Monticello, the home of Jefferson. Any Members of the House who desire to go will be welcome. Ladies are also invited. Round-trip fare, including parlor car, $6 for each person. All who intend going will confer a favor on the committee by at once advising the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of such intention.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—SOCIETY OF SPONSORS OF NAVY.

The SPEAKER. There is a bill (H. R. 20252) to incorporate the National Society of Sponsors of the United States Navy which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but which should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 26, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Laura Long, widow of Silas Long, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1979); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Mason Covell v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1980); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Ellen L. Holmes, widow of Theodore J. Holmes, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1981); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William Jones v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1982); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Kate Hillier, widow of David Hillier, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1983); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statements of expenditures and allotment costs of arms, components of arms and appendages fabricated, altered, and repaired during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, at the Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., and at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill. (H. Doc. No. 1984); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the National Forest Reservation Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (S. Doc. No. 643); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports from the accounting officers of this department showing what officers of the Government were delinquent in rendering their accounts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, together with a list of such officers who, upon final settlements of their accounts, were found to be indebted to the Government, and who at the date of the report had failed to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1985); to the Committees on Expenditures in the Interior, Navy, War, State, Treasury, and Post Office Departments and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriations in the sum of $5,000,000 for Army and Navy pensions for the fiscal year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1986); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate in the sum of $4,500,000 for Army and Navy pensions for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1987); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting supplemental estimate in the sum of $150,000 for the examination and classification of lands for homesteads for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1988); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 26, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray that we may fully recognize the sacredness of our citizenship in a land built upon such boundless resources, such Divine ideals, such world-wide principles. Thou hast given to us to write the laws of a Christian Nation. We have not exhausted the treasure house of divine wisdom as Thou hast revealed to us Thy will in Thy word. In the fixing relation of these great principles to our national and social life we pray that we may be guided from day to day by Thy spirit, that the law of our land may be a transcript of the Divine mind. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Smoot
Beckham	Hardwick	Overman	Sterling
Borah	Hitchcock	Page	Thomas

Curtis	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise to announce the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] through illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on account of sickness, and that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of sickness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] on account of illness in his family. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was requested to announce that the following members of the Committee on Indian Affairs are detained in that committee, but if their presence is required for a quorum they will come into the Chamber:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr.

GRONNA], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Sallie Berry Ennes, widow (remarried) of Arthur Berry, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 691);

Elizabeth A. Jennings, daughter of Aaron Bunnell, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 690); and Edith M. Little, widow of Thomas J. Little, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 689).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the granting of Federal permits or licenses for the sale of liquor as a beverage in prohibition States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Parent-Teachers' Association of the Johnson and Powell Schools, of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide adequate appropriation for the support of the extension and development of the public library in the city of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Drug Trade Conference at its meeting held at Washington, D. C., January 16, 1917, favoring the adoption of certain changes in section 8 of the Harrison Antinarcotic Act, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of California and Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to exclude liquor advertisements from the mail, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association, praying for an appropriation for the equipment and maintenance of a sheep experiment station in Fremont County, Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the senate of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 8 (by Senator Kimball).

Whereas the people of Kansas have for many years enjoyed the great benefit and satisfaction resulting from the prohibition of the liquor traffic within the State of Kansas and strongly favor both State and National prohibition; and

Whereas the people of Kansas realize the good to humanity and to the people of the United States that will result from the adoption of national prohibition: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to fulfill its duty to the Nation by submitting to the people thereof at the earliest possible date an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic beverages in the United States, and to in the meantime enact such additional legislation as may be necessary to aid and assist the States having prohibitory laws to better enforce them; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States and to the Members of the United States Congress and Senate from the State of Kansas.

Mr. WATSON presented a petition of Black Creek Local Union, United Mine Workers of America, of Linton, Ind., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Thomas J. Clark Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying that the good offices of the United States be employed in the recognition of the independence of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of the congregation of the Free Baptist Church of Waterbury Center, Vt., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of the Nonpartisan League of Newburg, N. Dak., remonstrating against any change in second-class postal rates, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Nonpartisan League of Newburg, N. Dak., remonstrating against large appropriations being made for the Military and Naval Establishments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Nonpartisan League of Newburg, N. Dak., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Texas, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 4 (by Mr. Bailey).

Whereas the decision of the United States Supreme Court in what is known as the Shreveport rate case gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to strike down a State-made rate, notwithstanding the fact that the State rate may be just and reasonable within itself; and

Whereas, if such is to remain the law, the right of a sovereign State to regulate its lines of railway transportation will be seriously crippled if not destroyed; and

Whereas the platform of the Republican Party, recently adopted at Chicago, contains a plank which boldly declares for the abolition of State railroad commissions: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Texas (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Legislature of Texas, voicing the sentiment of the people of this State, is irrevocably in favor of the doctrine of the right of a State to regulate purely State commerce, and that we now here declare our steadfast opposition to any further encroachment by the Federal Government upon the rights of this State to regulate purely State commerce, and that our United States Senators and Representatives in Congress from Texas are earnestly requested to support and vote for any and every measure that has for its object the abridgment of the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to further encroach upon the rights of a State, and for its further object the perpetuation of the right of a State to regulate purely State commerce and to fix and establish freight rates charged by railroad companies operative entirely within this State.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Indorsed: January 18, 1917.

Read and adopted.

JOHN D. MCCALL,
Secretary of the Senate.

In the house, January 18, 1917.

Received from the senate.

Read and adopted.

BOB BARKER,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have introduced a bill intended to cure the situation referred to in that resolution. The bill is pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee. A hearing was held on the bill at my request during the last session of Congress. So far, the committee has not taken any action on the bill. At the hearing representatives of the National Association of State Railroad Commissioners, members of State railroad commissions, including Hon. Earl Mayfield, railroad commissioner of Texas, and secretaries of several chambers of commerce of Texas cities, appeared and spoke. The city of Shreveport and the State of Louisiana were represented in opposition to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILLITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7601) for the relief of Caleb T. Holland, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 984) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7433) for the relief of Winfield S. Solomon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 982) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7598) for the relief of John H. Kidd, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 983) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CATRON:

A bill (S. 8034) granting an increase of pension to John C. Daley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 8035) to amend section 4 of the act of September 6, 1916, entitled "An act to amend the Judicial Code, to fix the time when the annual terms of the Supreme Court shall commence, and, further, to define the jurisdiction of that court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 8036) to allow a pension of $30 per month to Edward Marvin Carter, of Savannah, Ga., for loss of eye at military camp, Macon, Ga., on July 13, 1916, while serving in the United States Army; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 8037) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Davis;

A bill (S. 8038) granting an increase of pension to George R. Ashley;

A bill (S. 8039) granting an increase of pension to Susan Soehner; and

A bill (S. 8040) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Fraley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 8041) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. McCoy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 8042) granting a pension to Mrs. Thomas Kelly (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 8043) granting a pension to Ellen H. Russell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917; to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment providing that drop or local letters shall pay postage at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or a fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrying offices and on rural routes, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the maintenance and education of children of lighthouse keepers for a period of three months in each year where there are no school facilities, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to be expended under the direction of the Department of the Interior and the supervision of the National Park Service for constructive and conservational work in the newly created Sieur de Monts National Monument or Park, located on Mount Desert Island off the coast of Maine, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill (H. R. 18994), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES.

Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7066) to provide for the investigation of controversies affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE TO SENATORS.

Mr. JONES. I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 330), as follows:

Resolved, That the Vice President be authorized and directed to appoint a committee of five Senators to consider what clerical help should be allowed Senators and Senate committees. Such committee is authorized to sit while the Senate is in session or in recess, and is instructed to consider and report to the Senate on or before December 15, 1917, what clerical assistance should be allowed Senators to do their individual official work and what help should be allowed the different Senate committees to do committee work, and the compensation which, in its judgment, should be paid such help, with a view to securing economy, efficiency, and fair treatment in the performance of the business of the Senate and the official work of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if there is any expense attached to the resolution?

Mr. JONES. There is not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on January 25, 1917, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 5718. An act to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona; and

S. 1093. An act to permit the Denison Coal Co. to relinquish certain lands embraced in its Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lease and to include within said lease other lands within the segregated coal area.

THE INAUGURATION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 5, 1917, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States, March 5, 1917, in accordance with such program as may be adopted by the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, appointed under a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, including the pay for extra police for three days, at $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available; payment to be made upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said joint committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator a question or two before giving consent for the consideration of the joint resolution.

I notice that there has been introduced a joint resolution referring to the protection of life and property of citizens during the inaugural. I did not hear it read; in fact, it was not read. I do not know whether this joint resolution refers to the protection of life or of property, but I wish to suggest to the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in a great many cities in this country on great occasions steps have been taken to prevent the public from being robbed.

The Senator is as well aware as I am that these inaugurals have been made the occasions to grossly rob the American people. It was not very long ago that I had a constituent wire me—I will not say it was for the inaugural—to get a room at a certain hotel. I phoned down to the hotel and I found that he could get that room for $200. Rates something similar to that have been the rates that have been charged the American people by hotels in the city of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator if it is his intention or the purpose of his committee to allow another inaugural to pass without some protection of the American people who are invited to come to Washington?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the joint resolution which I have introduced is to protect the Capitol Grounds, to erect stands, and to illuminate the Capitol, and as far as the grounds are concerned to the pay of policemen and officers to protect the public here. Of course, the joint resolution has nothing to do with the city outside of the Capitol Grounds. What the Senator refers to relates to the city and that is in charge of the city.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know, but, Mr. President, in a joint resolution or bill of this kind there could be well inserted an amendment that would take care of the visitors to the Capital and protect them against exorbitant charges.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is right about that and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has just introduced a joint resolution which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations to aid the District in keeping order. I suggest that that would be the place for the amendment, because that is under the supervision, I understand, of the police department of the city. This joint resolution is simply for the Capitol and Capitol Grounds, to erect stands.

Mr. McCUMBER. As all the principal committees are in charge of Members of the Senate on the other side of the Chamber I hope the appropriate committee will take this matter up and do something to protect the people who are invited to come to Washington to view the inaugural.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator, and if the Senator will suggest to the Committee on Appropriations what he thinks would be necessary to put that suggestion into law I would be glad to consider it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a simple little law that shall provide a penalty to be imposed upon any hotel keeper who shall make a greater charge for the use of his rooms during the inaugural than is his usual charge, or if they think that is not enough they can double it and treble it, and yet you would save the people millions of dollars.

Mr. BORAH. The law might be simple in its terms, but it would be very difficult to pass it, I should suppose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is a very difficult thing to handle, but it will have to be handled on another joint resolution that will come up hereafter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator from Idaho say it would be difficult to pass it?

Mr. BORAH. I am not quite ready for the Government of the United States to enter into the business of fixing hotel rates, at least I should want to reflect upon the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am quite ready for the Government of the United States to enter into the business of protecting its citizens from robbery wherever that robbery may occur.

Mr. BORAH. Well, we can pass a law if we want against robbery and arson or anything of that kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Or extortion, and this is extortion.

Mr. BORAH. But it can hardly be extortion in the ordinary when a man voluntarily goes into a hotel and registers. Whatever is done will have to be done by cooperation between the citizens and the hotel keepers here in Washington, but not without considerable opposition would I consent to passing a law of the Government of the United States establishing hotel rates. I do not want to see the Government assume the burden of establishing hotel rates. That would give rise to a few hundred more Government employees.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we can prohibit extortionate charges by the proprietors of hotels as well as by other people. The Senator might say that he would not support a measure that would fix a resonable rate of interest to be charged, but we do fix such rates, and we provide a penalty for extortionate interest charges.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I have watched, Mr. President, with great interest all that is being done here in the city of Washington to get a big crowd to attend the inaugural ceremonies. The people here get the use of the public streets and public buildings and secure aid to get visitors to come here from all over the country. That is well and good, but I have not noticed any efforts being made in the local press, by the local associations, or by any of the people of Washington to prevent the people of the United States from being robbed and plundered when they come here to attend the inauguration. I therefore suggest that before we afford them all of these accommodations and facilities we require from them something in the shape of protection for the American people who come here.

Mr. President, I have been here during several presidential inaugurations, and I have noticed the same thing to which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] refers—how the people are brought in here and how they are robbed by the proprietors of hotels and restaurants. It will be time enough for us to give the people here all these advantages and facilities when they show a disposition to properly regulate the rates to be charged here, and to prevent the visitors who come here to attend the inaugural ceremonies from being plundered and robbed.

Mr. OVERMAN. A discussion of that matter would be proper on a resolution pertaining to that subject; but this resolution only refers to the inaugural ceremonies. The Inaugural Committee has nothing whatever to do with the regulation of the city or the establishment of police regulations outside of the Capitol Grounds. This resolution is to enable the committee appointed by the Senate to arrange for the proper ceremonies at the Capitol. That is all it proposes to accomplish. There will probably be a resolution reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia to assist in keeping order in the city, but as to this resolution the Inaugural Committee has nothing whatever to do, except what is to be done right here at the Capitol.

Mr. WARREN. The Appropriations Committee is simply to appropriate the money to carry the laws into effect, and the matter to which the Senator from Minnesota refers will rest with some other committee. A resolution of that kind, it seems to me, should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or to some committee which might properly take jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. That matter can be discussed later, when a proper resolution is before the Senate. The passage of this resolution will merely enable your committee to erect stands and to provide for the ceremonies in the Senate and at the front of the Capitol. Our committee have no jurisdiction whatever over the city.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the present consideration of this resolution, but I want to enter my protest against any such expenditure of the public moneys as that for which it provides. The inaugural ceremonies in Washington are largely, almost entirely, a commercial enterprise, to which the Government should not make itself a party. I should like to see one President of the United States inaugurated with appropriate and dignified ceremonies suitable to a democracy. We are having in this country a coronation every four years. It is undemocratic; it is un-American; and I should like to see it abolished.

There is no reason why such ceremonies as these should be conducted upon the inauguration of the President of the United States, but there is every reason, to my mind, why it should not be done. I am not willing to make myself a party to any such proceedings as are going on now in the District of Columbia by which there will be spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to inaugurate the President of the United States. I should like to see the President himself declare against that sort of thing and protest against his inauguration being made the means of any such ceremony.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the contemplated ceremonies will be very simple, and a resolution providing for similar ceremonies is passed by Congress every four years. No matter what the President or anybody else says, there will be at least 100,000 people here on the Capitol Grounds. Would not the Senator from California comfortably provide for them, so far as he could, seating capacity?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, these 100,000 people are inveigled into coming to Washington through the instrumentality of the people of the District of Columbia, who are advertising this as a great show.

Mr. OVERMAN. This resolution has nothing to do with the ceremonies in the District of Columbia outside of the Capitol Grounds.

Mr. WORKS. It has a good deal to do with it. We are contributing our funds for the purpose of helping carry out this entire proceeding.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. WORKS. There is no occasion for the Government of the United States to expend $25,000 or any like sum for the purpose of providing a place for the mere inauguration of the President. It is absurd on the face of it, and I should like to see the Senate raise its voice against that sort of misappropriation of public funds and the violation, as I think, of the very principles of the Government under which we are living.

As I said in the beginning, I am not going to object to the present consideration of the resolution, because I know very well it will be adopted. We are doing what we have been doing for a good many years; this, of course, is not the first occasion on which it has been done; but I had hoped that the President, who has done something toward preventing the expenditure of moneys in this way in the past, would go a little further than he has already done, and would enter his protest—which would be entirely sufficient—against this great show that is going to be carried on in the District of Columbia, merely because he is to be inaugurated President of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the consideration of the resolution, although I largely sympathize with the views which have just been expressed by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I am gratified that the amount embodied in the resolution is not larger than it is. I am astonished, to paraphrase a familiar expression, at our own moderation under the circumstances. I am also in hearty sympathy with the suggestions made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I do not know that we can directly reach the evil to which he refers. It is not confined to Washington, but is characteristic of caterers wherever there is an unusual gathering of American citizens. The old Spanish buccaneer, who rode the Spanish Main, flew the black flag, and took his life in his hands when he attacked his prey, must, if there is such a thing as a future life, turn over in his grave whenever he thinks of his modern successor, disguised as the proprietor of a hotel or at the head of some institution furnishing the necessities of life, because of the impunity with which they carry on his old business sheltered under the forms of law.

I have observed, Mr. President, in this District that the people are largely a unit in their support of everything designed to get money out of the Federal Treasury when it is to be expended here. The amount which will be expended by the visitors to the inaugural ceremonies, unless something can be done to prevent it, will, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has suggested, probably be expressed by a million of dollars in the aggregate, and the greater portion of it will be extortion, pure and simple.

Some of us are trying to prevent an increase of appropriations by this Congress. In so doing we are obliged to resist an organized movement to increase the salaries of all employees. Instead of our receiving some little encouragement in the District, every newspaper and every organization is behind the movement, and some of them are ungenerous enough to criticize those of us who believe that this is not the time or the occasion for such increases. A morning paper in its issue of yesterday morning went so far as to assert that this proposed increase was an act of justice to an unorganized body of employees, when we know that they are not only organized, and thoroughly organized, but that they are affiliated with the greatest labor organization in the world and that they are carrying on an organized propaganda in the Capitol. As I have said, instead of receiving sympathetic support from the people of the District, or any part of them, in our efforts to economize, the entire trend of public sentiment and public effort is in favor of these increases. Of course the reason is obvious; the money is to be expended here, and the object of the business community of the District is to secure these added appropriations, because the great body of employees will merely be a conduit through which they will pass on the way to their own coffers.

Now, Mr. President, there should be some way of economizing so as to offset the consequences of this propaganda and in some degree make reparation for the extortions that are sure to be practiced upon the people of the United States who come to this inaugural. For instance, we can adopt a different system of taxation for the District.

Mr. President, I have been an advocate of what is called the half-and-half system. I have believed, all things considered, that it was fair both to the people and to the Government, and therefore I have voted against efforts to abolish it since I have been here; but I am about to pass the Rubicon. If the people of the District will manifest no disposition to assist those of us here who are trying to economize, if they band together on occasions like the inauguration to extort money from visitors—and they will do it—then let us require them to pay all the taxes essential for the support of the District Government; and if this propaganda of increases becomes successful, as it bids fair to be, then I must give notice that hereafter wherever it is possible to economize in the District I shall make the effort and join those committed to the abolition of the half-and-half system.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has suggested that the proposition of which I spoke could be considered in connection with another joint resolution which has been introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. The joint resolution which the Senator from Maryland has introduced reads, in part, as follows:

> Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance—

I think that we could leave the matter to which I have referred to the commissioners, and if we would add after the words "public conveyance" the words "hotels and restaurants," I think it would cover the matter.

I see no reason why we should throw the protecting arm of the Government around the citizen to save him from an extortion of $5 by a public conveyance and leave him unprotected when it comes to a hotel charging him $200 for a $5 room. I can see no great difference in principle unless it should be applied with a stronger arm where the extortion is the greater.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand this joint resolution is now before the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the one from which I have read has merely been introduced for reference to the appropriate committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the matter now, but I shall do so when the proper time comes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota how many people he thinks would come here to be robbed if the President were inaugurated in a quiet and dignified way, as I think the President of the United States should be inaugurated?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think, Mr. President, there would be very few of them; and I desire to say now that I agree with the views of the Senator in every respect in reference to the inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am just as much opposed to ostentatious display as are the Senators who have spoken, but no one will come here to the inauguration who has not some money to spend. People understand before they come here the conditions which will prevail, for these things have been going on for years and years, and they understand perfectly well that they are coming here to have a good time, to share in the occasion, in its display, and in its good time with the people of the District of Columbia, and they know before they come that they will have to share their money with the people of the District of Columbia. That is what it takes to make a "good time"; and so long as we have inaugurations conducted in this way thousands and thousands of people are coming, and I have not seen any petition or other request coming from those people asking us to protect them after they get here. Before they come they understand precisely the conditions, and they are perfectly capable of taking care of themselves.

Mr. WORKS. Does not the Senator think that people who come here under those circumstances deserve to be robbed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, people will come here, but they will have to pay their bills, and I hope that the information furnished the Senate this morning will be given wide publicity, so that a certain number of my constituents will not have to borrow money from me with which to get home. [Laughter.] I have a considerable sum invested in that way that I never expect to see again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment, offered by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], begins on page 62. It proposes to strike out all after line 18 down to and including the last line on page 65, striking out the Subtreasuries at Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the question of striking out the provision for the Subtreasuries, as provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, was considered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations; and the action of the committee was determined, I think, on a statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury. There were no detail reasons submitted by the Secretary why the Subtreasuries should not be abolished, but he did state to the committee, through the chairman of the committee and over the telephone, that he thought it would be very unwise to strike out the appropriations providing for the Subtreasuries.

The committee then prepared an amendment to the bill, as found on page 31, referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] yesterday, which reads as follows:

> The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the work performed by the Subtreasuries and report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries may be transferred to other offices of the Government or banks of the Federal Reserve System, and for the purpose of this investigation the representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency shall have access to all necessary books and other records of the Government.

After a discussion of this amendment, Mr. President, if the Senate of the United States decides to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, the Senate then can reconsider the amendment offered by the committee and disagree to it.

Mr. President, in the speech made yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in opposition to the amendment I notice this statement:

> What are these Federal reserve banks? We talk of them here in the Senate sometimes as though they were Government banks, owned, controlled, and managed by the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, the Federal reserve banks are private institutions, the stock of which is owned by the various national banks and the few State banks and trust companies that have joined the Federal Reserve System. The majority of the board of directors of every one of these Federal reserve banks is elected by the member banks, and every officer save one within the banks is appointed by the officers who are elected by the member banks. The proposition, therefore, is to turn over certain functions, powers, and duties of the Government to private institutions that are owned and controlled by the banks of the country. When we propose to enter into that sort of thing it would be well for us to pause and reflect and make certain that we are not committing a great error.

I think it is proper to call attention to the law and see whether the Federal reserve banks are privately owned banks and whether the Government of the United States has no control over them.

The Federal reserve act, in section 15, provides that the Federal reserve banks—

> When required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States.

The act further, in section 11, authorizes the Federal Reserve Board—

> To exercise general supervision over said Federal reserve banks.

Again—

> To suspend or remove any officer or director of any Federal reserve bank.

Again—

> To suspend for the violation of any of the provisions of this act the operations of any Federal reserve bank, to take possession thereof, administer the same during the period of suspension, and, when deemed advisable, to liquidate or reorganize such bank.

In view of these provisions there seems to be no more danger that a Federal reserve bank might refuse to perform the duties required of it by the Secretary of the Treasury as fiscal agent of the United States under the Federal reserve act than there is fear that the Secretary of the Treasury himself might neglect to perform the duties required of him by law. If any reserve bank should violate the law, it would be the duty of the Federal Reserve Board to remove its officers and assume charge of the bank. If the board failed to do this, it would be the duty of the President to remove the members of the board and appoint persons who would perform their duty.

However, there is no conceivable incentive for any Federal reserve bank to lay itself open to the penalties provided for refusal to comply with the law. The banks would redeem gold and silver certificates out of moneys deposited with them by the Secretary of the Treasury. They would normally use these deposits as directed by the depositor, just as they would use any other deposit. It would, of course, be incumbent on the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in every reserve bank a sufficient amount of gold deposited to redeem all certificates presented by the bank. If, however, he should fail to do so the reserve bank could still receive gold and silver certificates presented for redemption and issue certificates of deposit therefor. These certificates of deposit could then be exchanged for gold and silver dollars at the nearest mint at the New York Assay Office or at the Treasury here at Washington.

At present a very large percentage of the redemptions at the Subtreasuries are made in this manner and doubtless the majority of the large redemptions made through the Federal reserve banks would be effected in the same way. Even if it were conceivable that a Federal reserve bank should expose itself to the penalties of disobeying the law, such action would have no more serious effect than to inconvenience the person presenting gold certificates for redemption. If the Subtreasuries should be discontinued, the Treasurer should continue to redeem gold and silver certificates at Washington, and he should retain in the Treasury, the mints, and the assay offices the entire amount of gold and silver dollars that is necessary to redeem the outstanding gold and silver certificates. The Federal reserve banks should be required to make redemptions out of the general fund deposits placed with them, or else by means of order on the assay office at New York, the mints, or the Treasury at Washington. Ordinarily the certificates redeemed would be reissued if fit for circulation and replaced by new ones if unfit for circulation. If, however, a Federal reserve bank should need an addition to its supply of metallic gold, such gold would have to be shipped from the nearest mint or assay office, either as additional deposit or in exchange for certificates returned to Washington.

Mr. President, even if every dollar had to be transported by express and the cost of transportation paid by the Government, it would be a small amount compared to the expense of maintaining the Subtreasuries that now exist. I will frankly state that I thought at first it was not wise to abolish these Subtreasuries; but after going into the details and finding out just the workings of the Subtreasuries, I am convinced that they ought to be abolished and that no harm will come to the business of the country if they are abolished at the present time.

In the discussion upon this subject four questions have arisen, and there seems to be some misunderstanding about them. I want to discuss briefly the workings of the department and of the Subtreasuries as affecting these questions that have arisen in this debate.

The first is that the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to deposit in the Federal reserve banks the gold and the silver dollars held for the redemption of gold and silver certificates and United States notes; that is, the so-called trust fund.

This is true; but only a small part, 12.5 per cent, of the gold held to redeem gold certificates and United States notes is kept in the Subtreasuries. Out of a total of two billion and ninety-three millions of dollars in gold held by the Treasury Office, according to the reports received December 14, 1916, there is one billion seven hundred and forty millions in the mints and assay offices of the country. Of this one billion seven hundred and forty millions of dollars, about four hundred and fifty millions is in the Denver Mint, three hundred and fifty-seven millions in the San Francisco Mint, three hundred and twenty-five millions in the Philadelphia Mint, and six hundred and seven millions in the New York Assay Office. The remainder of all the gold held by the Government, amounting to only three hundred and fifty-three millions of dollars, is in the Treasury and Subtreasuries. Of this $353,000,000, more than $100,000,000 is in the general fund and can legally be deposited in Federal reserve banks. Four millions of dollars is in the Treasury at Washington. The balance of the gold trust fund in the Subtreasuries is, therefore, only about $250,000,000, out of a total of two billion and ninety-three millions of dollars.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator how many of these Subtreasuries are in the same cities that have reserve banks?

Mr. SMOOT. All of them with the exception of one, and that is at Baltimore. No; there may be two.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. Why, there are half a dozen.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. I do not think Baltimore is the only one.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; the city of Cincinnati has a Subtreasury and the Federal reserve bank of that district is located at Cleveland. There is no branch in Cincinnati.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are half a dozen of them; so the Senator is altogether wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I will name where they are, and then we will see.

One of the Subtreasuries is located at Baltimore, and, as I stated, there is no Federal reserve bank in Baltimore. Even if there is no Federal reserve bank there, Mr. President, there is no question but that the business of Baltimore can be taken care of just as well from Washington or the nearest Federal reserve bank as at present.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to say——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can in a few moments speak in his own time. Before I get through I will give my reasons for my statement. Then the Senator can criticize my reasons, if he so desires.

The next is at Chicago, one at Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco. Those are the places where the Subtreasuries are located.

Mr. POMERENE. The matter the Senator is discussing now is covered by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury himself, and, if I may read just three lines, the Secretary says:

> Federal reserve banks are located in the Subtreasury cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco. New Orleans has a branch of the Federal reserve bank of Atlanta, while neither Baltimore nor Cincinnati has a Federal reserve bank.

Neither has a branch.

Mr. SMOOT. I forgot Cincinnati. I did mention Baltimore, but I really had forgotten Cincinnati.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. There are two cities that have neither mints nor assay offices nor Federal reserve banks. Those are Baltimore and Cincinnati.

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the only two.

Mr. NELSON. Those are the only possible exceptions where anything can be urged in favor of retaining the Subtreasury.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee first agreed to strike out Baltimore from the bill, thinking that the Subtreasury there was unnecessary; but after a reconsideration, as I stated in my opening remarks, Baltimore was put back into the bill.

Mr. President, I desire to continue. A statement of the Federal reserve banks shows that they held on December 8, 1916, $427,000,000 in gold certificates; that is, they owned more of the gold in the Government custody than is kept in the Subtreasury. They could therefore, without authority of law, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, take over all the gold in all the Subtreasuries by simply presenting the gold certificates which they hold. These figures make it apparent that the Subtreasuries are not needed for the custody of the gold trust funds.

Of the silver dollars held by the Treasury officers, about $156,000,000 is now in the Treasury at Washington, $190,000,000 in the mints, and $148,000,000 in the Subtreasuries. Of this $148,000,000, about $18,000,000 is in the general fund and can be deposited in Federal reserve banks.

The balance of the silver trust fund held in Subtreasuries is therefore about $130,000,000. This amount could not be deposited in the reserve banks, but would have to be transferred to the custody of superintendents of the mints or assay offices or else shipped to Washington. That is all the trouble there would be. There is no question but that the Treasury of the United States could order it to-morrow to be done, even if the Subtreasuries continue.

The other statement made, or one of the others, was that it is necessary to keep large amounts of metallic gold at the port of New York, and perhaps at other ports, in order to settle our trade balances in gold. In the New York Subtreasury there is about $113,000,000 in gold coin and no gold bullion. The assay office at New York has $607,000,000 in gold bullion. Foreign balances are commonly settled in bullion, not in coin. This bullion comes not from the Subtreasury but from the assay office in the form of certificate bars.

Mr. OVERMAN. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a statement that was made by Mr. Brown on a request for the facts as to where the gold of the Government was located and just what the Subtreasuries, the mints, and assay offices of the country hold.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Brown wants to have the Subtreasuries abolished.

Mr. SMOOT. He does not make any recommendation.

Mr. President, foreign balances are commonly settled in bullion, not in coin. The purchasers of these bars—that is, gold bars—deposit their money in the Subtreasury and receive a certificate of deposit, which they present to the assay office as an order for the bars. The Federal reserve bank could with equal facility receive the purchase money and issue the certificate of deposit, which would be paid by the assay office. Therefore, while a Government office able to handle large amounts of gold is needed in New York to receive and furnish gold for the settlement of foreign balances, the Subtreasury is not needed for that purpose, as the assay office supplies the need.

The other statement was that the abolishment of the Subtreasuries would not save any money, because all the expense of more clerk hire, space, and transportation of currency that is now borne by the Government would have to be borne by the banks if the Subtreasuries were discontinued. In support of this contention it was stated that the transfer of the disbursing officers' accounts from the Subtreasuries to Washington in 1913, although proposed as a measure of economy, did not actually save any money.

The facts are, Mr. President, that the Federal reserve banks would undoubtedly have to assume the responsibility of transporting a large amount of currency to and from Washington if the Subtreasuries were discontinued. The estimate for 1918 for this purpose and other purposes amounts to $150,000.

To offset this expense the Federal reserve banks would necessarily receive, if the Subtreasuries were abolished to-day, gold deposits amounting to at least $70,000,000. These deposits would be interest free, as are the $30,000,000 of Government deposits the Federal reserve banks already hold. Interest on the total deposits of $100,000,000 at 2 per cent would exceed by about $1,400,000 a year the total amount of the clerical expense and transportation charges that the banks would incur by taking over the Subtreasuries' work.

The transfer of this business to Federal reserve banks would therefore not merely relieve the Government of a large amount of expense but would also provide the Federal reserve banks with increased opportunities for profits. There would be no offsetting loss to the United States, for the money in the Subtreasuries now earns no interest.

It should be noted also that the transfer of the disbursing officers' accounts to Washington in 1913 did not result in a saving of more than $50,000 a year, as is shown by a reduction in the estimates of the Treasurer's office as well as for the Subtreasuries.

The other statement was that the Federal reserve banks in some cities do not have adequate quarters, and particularly do they lack the vault space necessary to take over the Subtreasury business. If the Federal reserve banks had no other quarters with adequate vault facilities, there seems to be no reason why they should not be allowed for a moderate rental to use the quarters now occupied by the Subtreasuries. Such a plan would be convenient to the bank and profitable to the Government.

Mr. President, there is no question but that if the Subtreasuries are abolished the Government will save millions of dollars, and there is no question but that if the gold is deposited in the Federal reserve banks, and if they secure 2 per cent upon the amount of the deposit, there will be over a million dollars to the credit of these banks annually.

If we want to save in this bill money for the Government, and do no harm whatever to the business interests of the country, we can abolish the Subtreasuries now and allow the Federal reserve banks to do the business. They can do it now under the law as it exists, the very law that created them, as I have called attention to, section 15 and section 11 of the act itself.

Mr. President, I thought perhaps it would be better to make an investigation, as the committee thought, but after finding out just where the Government gold is deposited, how it is transferred from the credit of one Subtreasury to the other, I have become convinced there is no question but that it would be a proper thing to abolish all the Subtreasuries and allow the business to be done by the Federal reserve banks.

I therefore hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota will be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN Mr. President, I notice about five Democrats in their seats on this side of the Chamber. They ought to know what we are doing so as to be able to vote intelligently. Therefore, before beginning the few remarks I want to make, and it will be only a few, I feel compelled to suggest the absence of a quorum. I want to say that all during the consideration of this bill a number of the friends on this side have not been here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Catron	Husting	Oliver	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Sterling
Clapp	Jones	Page	Sutherland
Clark	Kenyon	Phelan	Thomas
Culberson	Kern	Pittman	Townsend
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Vardaman
Curtis	Lippitt	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Fall	McCumber	Shafroth	Watson
Fletcher	McLean	Sheppard	Works
Gallinger	Martine	Sherman

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] are absent engaged on important business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about the proposed abolishment of the Subtreasuries. The head of the great fiscal department of our Government is the Secretary of the Treasury. Who knows most about whether the Subtreasuries ought to be abolished or not; the man who administers the fiscal concerns of the Government, or a Senator who has investigated this matter in a cursory manner here while the appropriation bill is before us?

It is contended that to abolish these Subtreasuries would save a great deal of money; that it would save $300,000. That is impossible. If the Subtreasuries are abolished, the Secretary of the Treasury reports that all of the business which is now done by the Subtreasuries would have to be done somewhere. Therefor you will have to provide for the clerks that are now in the Subtreasuries if you abolish them. Instead of doing this and for the convenience of the people of the country at Boston, Cincinnati, and the other Subtreasury cities all the work will have to be done in Washington. The Secretary of the Treasury will be required to have a number of clerks to do the work that is being done now in these great cities. Therefore you might save the place of the superintendent of the Subtreasury, but the work which is done by all the other officers who perform the service that is done in the Subtreasuries will have to be done here in Washington, at a great inconvenience to the citizens of the country who have business with the Treasury Department.

Mr. President, the committee had this question before them for consideration. It has been time and again contended that the Subtreasuries ought to be abolished, and the committee think that is a question which ought to be investigated. We brought this matter to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury in order that we might have a report from him, and he has reported that it would be suicidal now to abolish these Subtreasuries. Your committee thinking that probably, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has stated, the Subtreasuries in time should be abolished have provided in the pending bill that a report on that subject be made to the next Congress with a view to their abolishment. Ought we now at once to abolish the Subtreasuries when we have a report from the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that the reserve system, which it is proposed to substitute for them, has only been in operation a little over a year and a half or two years? We shall probably abolish them in the future; they will be abolished, but they should not be abolished now, especially, I repeat, when we have made no provision in the pending bill for clerks in the Treasury Department to do the work which is now being done in the Subtreasuries in the great cities. Your committee thoroughly investigated the matter so far as we could, and we came to the conclusion that, instead of abolishing the Subtreasuries, we had better direct the Efficiency Board to go thoroughly into the matter and to report to us at the next session of Congress.

Mr. President, we could not abolish the Subtreasuries at this time. If this body should attempt to do it, or should adopt this amendment, it would not be sustained. There has been a fight in the House of Representatives on this subject. The committee in the other House did report to abolish the Subtreasury at Baltimore, and there is less necessity there for a Subtreasury than there is anywhere else, I will say with all deference to the Senator from Maryland, but on the floor of the House they reversed what the committee had done, because, as the House of Representatives think, and as our committee think, and as other Senators think, this is not the time to abolish the Subtreasuries.

Mr. President, I do not propose to read from the record, though a great many Senators have not heard this debate, but I am relying on what the Secretary of the Treasury says. I am going to read a few lines of his testimony, he being the head of this great service for the Treasury Department, being the man to whom we look, whose duty it is to report to us, and can we not rely on what he says about this matter?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to call the attention of the able acting chairman of the committee to the fact that I have understood, and I so reported to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that in support of the position taken by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the Federal Reserve Board say that if these Subtreasuries are abolished they not only will continue to require, as the Senator from North Carolina has said, the same amount of force, but they will have also to be located at the same places; that they will have to send them to the people and not bring the people here, and that in the end we should neither save money nor force, nor would such action make for convenience.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Illinois has brought out that point. Not only has the Secretary of the Treasury reported against the abolishment of the Subtreasuries now, but the Federal Reserve Board, which knows more about this matter than does any Senator upon this floor, has also done so.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stood with the committee here at first, but now he is upon the floor fighting their action, because, forsooth, he has received a little report from Mr. Brown, who has not investigated the matter thoroughly, as he should have done. I am surprised at the Senator from Utah. When this subject was before the committee we provided for a plan by which we could investigate it with a view to the abolishment of the Subtreasuries, but the Senator now comes in and advocates this amendment, when we had formerly voted that plan down in committee, and had even voted to restore the Baltimore Subtreasury. I am surprised at the Senator from Utah coming in here and doing that after we had considered the matter in committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. I always gladly yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have put a provision into the bill directing the Efficiency Board to investigate this matter and to report to Congress, does the Senator from North Carolina think it was a very proper thing for the head of that Efficiency Board to interfere in any way with the subject?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not. That is what I am referring to here and to the Senator from Utah now coming here with a report from Mr. Brown before Mr. Brown has been ordered to make this investigation. Does that indicate that Mr. Brown has prejudged the case?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether or not the Senator from North Carolina was in the Chamber when I made my opening statement, but from the remarks which he has just made I should judge he was not. If the Senator was present, however, I will say that what he says is uncalled for. I told the Senate plainly that I had agreed in committee to allow this provision to go into the bill, and I called attention to the provision on page 31 of the bill authorizing an investigation to be made by the Efficiency Bureau. I then stated why I had changed my mind on the subject.

I do not want any Senator to cast reflections upon Mr. Brown. As I stated in my opening remarks, I asked Mr. Brown to inform me where the gold which had been deposited with the Treasury of the United States had been placed; whether it was in the mint, whether in the assay offices, or whether it was in the Treasury here in Washington, and the amount that was in the Subtreasuries. Mr. Brown merely furnished me that information. He has made no report. I have not said that Mr. Brown has made a report upon this matter after a thorough investigation. He simply states exactly where the gold is and how the transfers have been made, as I have previously stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not reflecting on Mr. Brown. I think he is a very efficient officer. I desire to say that he has heretofore had duties placed upon him by provisions incorporated by the committee on appropriation bills, and I want to know why he has been investigating this matter without any authority? The only authority he has is that which we now propose to confer upon him. That he has been using his time in investigating this subject when he had no authority to do so seems to me apparent from the fact that the Senator from Utah comes here and reads a long statement which has been prepared for him by Mr. Brown, which occupied a half hour or an hour in its reading.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if anyone is to blame in the matter, it is not Mr. Brown. On the basis of statements made here, I asked for certain information of Mr. Brown, if he could obtain it for me. Mr. Brown prepared the figures which I have presented, and I believe they are perfectly correct. If there is anything wrong with the statement which I have made, then, of course, the statement should be criticized; but do not criticize Mr. Brown because of that fact, for I believe the figures are absolutely correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the committee had, and the Senator from Utah, as a member of it had, a report from the Secretary of the Treasury; we had also a report submitted by Mr. Warburg, of the Federal Reserve Board; and, instead of relying on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Federal Reserve Board, the Senator from Utah goes back on his committee, stands up in the Senate, and uses a statement made by a man who had no authority to make an investigation. He did, however, make it, and the Senator reads that statement upon the floor here as against the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and as against the desires of the Federal Reserve Board—12 good men, who are trying to do their duty and to inform Congress as to what it ought to do or not to do. The law has placed upon these officials the responsibility of reporting to this Congress what we should do and what we should not do in regard to such matters.

The Senator from Utah does not rely upon the Secretary of the Treasury or upon the Federal Reserve Board, but he comes here relying upon an ex parte statement made by a Government official. It is of that I complain. I am not criticizing Mr. Brown, for he is a good and faithful officer; he has done great work, and I hope he will do greater work when we confer authority upon him to investigate this matter. I have no doubt he will then give us the right kind of a report. When, however, has he had time to investigate this subject? The matter we have given him to investigate was not along these lines at all. Hereafter, if this bill passes, Mr. Brown will investigate the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Brown has not made an investigation. I had not the time to do so or I could have gathered the facts myself which Mr. Brown secured for me. Not having the time, I asked him to do it for me.

So far as my action is concerned in approving an amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] which is not in conformity with the action of the committee, I desire to say that I do not believe that I am bound by any action of any committee. I do not believe that I have to rely on whatever the Secretary of the Treasury says; and until to-day I have never heard of any report having been made by the Federal Reserve Board on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator was present and heard the debate on yesterday, and so I infer he heard the statement as to what Mr. Warburg had stated.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that it was not before the committee. I have not heard of a report until to-day, and it was never mentioned in the committee what the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board was. I desire to say now that whether or not this amendment carries—and I doubt whether it will carry—the Subtreasuries will be abolished, and I want to have particular notice taken of what I say on this day, that the Subtreasuries will be abolished. Why? Because they are a useless expense to the Government of the United States, and because the Federal reserve banks can do the same work and do it with less expense.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am of the opinion that the Subtreasuries will be abolished. As a member of the committee, I have been trying to do my duty, and I have not had time to investigate this matter as fully perhaps as has the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], but I want to say that, being a member of the committee, I would rather rely upon the sworn estimates sent to the committee than to go out and get an estimate from some man who is not informed on the subject, and who has not been given the authority to investigate. I will state further that this report was before the committee, and the Senator from Utah saw it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator has seen fit to extoll the Secretary of the Treasury, and he has just admitted that he thought this system ought to be abolished.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I said that in time it would be abolished. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. NELSON. That "in time it would be abolished," but he wants an investigation. I desire to say to the Senator that if the Secretary of the Treasury had done his duty he would have come before Congress with a scheme for abolishing this system and would have made recommendations to Congress accordingly; but he did not do that because it involved too many Democratic officeholders.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ah, Mr. President, my friend is bringing partisanship into this matter. My distinguished old friend from Minnesota, one of the best friends I have in the Chamber, now and then shows that he has a little yellow streak of Republicanism in him that will make itself manifest on occasions. This is no Democratic matter or Republican matter; it is a business matter. The Federal Reserve Board have reported that this is not the time to abolish the Subtreasuries.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I say to the able Senator from North Carolina that there are 11 officers in the Subtreasuries who have been appointed by the Democratic administration, but there are 153 others connected with the Subtreasuries appointed by preceding Republican administrations, who will likewise suffer if the mere question of politics is to be considered, being wholly Republican.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt that two-thirds of the employees of these Subtreasuries are Republicans, as is the case in every other department of the Government, but that does not make any difference to me. I consider this a pure matter of business, and I ask Senators to throw aside politics and let us look at this question from a business standpoint. The Federal Reserve System has only been in existence a short time, and is probably not now prepared to take over this work. When the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board say that the Subtreasuries ought not to be abolished at this time, not as Republicans or as Democrats, but as business men—when that opinion is given to us by the head of the department having supervision of all these matters—what are we going to do about it? Shall we vote according to our political sentiments, even if we destroy what has been considered heretofore a splendid system inaugurated for the benefit and convenience of the people who live away from Washington and who have business to transact with the Treasury? Shall we so vote as to make them come to Washington to transact their business?

Mr. President, let us see what the Secretary of the Treasury says on this subject. I want to read just a few words from his letter:

> I am of the opinion that it would be inadvisable at this time to abolish all, or any, of the Subtreasuries.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, from whom is the Senator quoting?

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Secretary of the Treasury. He continues:

> It is an important matter, and should be considered deliberately.

We have not now time to consider this matter deliberately, as we should do, and that is the reason why the committee asks for a board to investigate it.

The Secretary continues:

> With the test of further experience it may develop that the functions of the Subtreasuries, or some of them, may be transferred to Washington, or to some other agency, but action should not be taken hastily or inadvisedly.

In another part of his letter the Secretary of the Treasury says:

> Aside from New York, the cost of maintaining the other eight Subtreasuries is $347,416.88.

As the Senator from Minnesota has stated—

> Which is a comparatively small sum to pay for the service and convenience they provide. If these institutions were abolished, the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed.

Now, the Senator from Utah and other Senators want to abolish these Subtreasuries without providing a system in the Treasury to take their place.

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask the Senator a question, Mr. President. What does the argument which he has just read amount to? The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury amounts to this, that these institutions ought to be continued perpetually.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. NELSON. He does not recommend anything; he does not intimate that there ought to be a change. If he had done his duty, he would have looked into this matter and recommended the proper legislation for the abolition of the Subtreasuries.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury does say that it may be advisable to abolish them at some time in the future; but here comes the Senator again criticizing the Secretary of the Treasury, whose sworn duty it is to make these reports. I do not care what the Senator from Minnesota or any other Senator may say, the present Secretary of the Treasury, as almost everyone admits, has made a great Secretary of the Treasury, and has done a tremendous amount of work for the good of the people. He is trying to serve the people as best he can; and when we impose upon him the duty of telling us what should be done, and he performs that duty, the Senator from Minnesota rises, showing his politics and partisanship again, and criticizes the man who has been directed by law to send his report here. I am surprised that my very good friend should stand up here and criticize the Secretary of the Treasury simply because, in response to the law, he sends to Congress a letter in which he says that just at this time it would be very inadvisable to abolish the Subtreasuries.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to read one further extract, and then I shall take my seat.

Mr. OLIVER. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I quote further from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

> It has been suggested that the Subtreasuries are merely conveniences and not necessities, and that their duties might be performed entirely by the Treasury in Washington.

That is what Senators have said. Let us see:

> This is in a sense true, but the cost of handling all the business from a common center, in a country so extensive as the United States, might be greater than the expense of the Subtreasury system.

Think of handling the business of the people of San Francisco here in Washington, when now it is handled in their own city through the Subtreasury there! Why should not the people of Philadelphia transact their business in that city, with the Subtreasury there, instead of coming here to Washington to transact it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Utah does not say that the business of the Subtreasuries should or would be transacted at Washington. The Senator from Utah claims that the Federal reserve banks have the authority under the law to do nearly all of this work, and therefore there would not be very much more work in Washington if the Federal reserve banks should take over the business of the Subtreasuries and administer it, as I believe they will.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator does believe that, but the men who are best informed about it do not believe so; the men under whose administration this matter comes do not agree with the Senator from Utah. I know the Senator from Utah is very wise, but sometimes he is about as wrong as others are, and in this case he has gone off halfcocked in making an effort in the Senate to-day to defeat the committee. That is what he has done. It shows that he went off halfcocked when last night he obtained a report from a man here in Washington, when all the time he had before him the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, saying:

> Whereas the delays and inconveniences which the public would have to suffer might prove a very serious handicap upon business.

The Secretary of the Treasury expresses that as his opinion; the Federal Reserve Board concurs in that view; and I know that when the Senator investigates the matter thoroughly he will agree with them. That is the reason why I want to advise him hereafter not to take a position upon a mere ex parte statement. I do not blame him for fighting the committee if he desires to do so; he has a right to do that, and he has a right to change his mind; but I do criticize him for securing a paper and reading it this morning embodying a report from a man who was not authorized to make any investigation and putting that forward as against the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Reserve Board. That is what I criticize.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not care anything about the criticism, but I do want to say that if the report of the Secretary of the Treasury is right and it is going to be an inconvenience to the business interests of the United States to abolish the Subtreasuries, then they never ought to be abolished; it would be wrong to abolish them, and the mere expense that there is attached to maintaining the Subtreasuries should not be considered if their abolition is going to interfere with the business of the United States; and I want to say to the Senator that he ought to change his mind and I ought to change my mind, and the Subtreasuries never ought to be abolished.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; all the Secretary of the Treasury says is that at this time they ought not to be abolished, but he intimates that a system can be worked out by which they can be abolished. He says:

> It could with equal force be argued that internal-revenue offices throughout the United States could be abolished and all of the work done at Washington, and, in like manner, that many of the customs offices throughout the country could be abolished and all of the work done from Washington.

Why, Mr. President, all these things have been established for the benefit of the business men of this country, instead of requiring one central establishment here. This is a great, big country, and these conveniences ought to be furnished to the people.

I repeat that I think in time these Subtreasuries will be abolished; but let us not abolish them until we provide the necessary clerks to transact the business that is now being transacted by the Subtreasuries.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I confess that I have not had the time to make the personal investigation I should like to have made on this subject. I have relied largely upon the statements made by the Secretary of the Treasury and what I understand to be the position of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a moment ago referred to the city of Cincinnati and the Subtreasury in that city, and I address myself rather to the conditions there than to the situation generally throughout the country.

I am satisfied, from the information I have, that it would be a very great mistake for the Congress of the United States to discontinue the Subtreasury in Cincinnati. I think it will offend the entire business public in that section of the country. I know that the business people of that city are almost a unit in opposition to the attempt to abolish the Subtreasury. They have felt for a long time that they ought to have a branch of the Federal reserve bank, if not the Federal reserve bank itself, in that city. This position may be in part due to local pride; but there is a very large commercial business conducted from that city, and the Subtreasury there is serving a very large section of the country. I do not think I can place the situation before the Senate better than to read a paragraph or two from a letter I have received from Mr. Arthur Espy, the subtreasurer. He says, under date of November 17:

> The functions of the Treasuries, particularly that of redemption and exchange, do not seem to me to be such that it would be wise for any private or semiprivate institution to be permitted to discharge them.

Then, referring to the local conditions, he says:

> My office is located in the center of the large territory that it serves, and the business of the office has grown very much since I have been assistant treasurer.

I think he has been assistant treasurer for perhaps two years.

> For instance, yesterday I made more than 50 shipments of coin in the territory bounded by the Lakes, Tuscaloosa, Ala., the eastern part of West Virginia, and Terre Haute, Ind. I can not see how any substitute system could be devised that would accomplish these services at so small a cost as the Subtreasuries can accomplish them. Appropriations for my office are only $24,830 for salaries, and about $1,000 for contingent expenses. The functions of the Subtreasuries can not be made profitable; and if the Federal reserve banks should assume them, they would certainly have to be paid a larger sum than it now costs to maintain the Subtreasuries. It is well to have the Government's gold widely distributed and in its exclusive charge. I have more than twenty millions of gold in my vaults, against which, of course, there have been issued gold certificates which are in circulation, and to-order gold certificates under the act of 1900. My business amounts to nearly $1,000,000 per day.

If the Subtreasury at Cincinnati is to be abolished, then, in my judgment, there must be some other arrangement made to accommodate the business of that section. Possibly it could be done by a branch bank, but that branch bank has not been organized. It has not yet been demonstrated that this branch bank could be conducted with more satisfaction or with less expense to the Government than the Subtreasury. I think that the Senate has done wisely by adopting the provision they have in the bill directing the Efficiency Bureau to investigate this subject and make a report. I have so much confidence in the Secretary of the Treasury, and in the Federal reserve banks, and in Mr Brown, whom the Senator from Utah quotes, that I believe that if they have an opportunity to investigate this matter they can come before the Congress of the United States with some concrete suggestions which will perhaps be to the benefit of the country financially as well as to the business world, and for this reason I am very clearly of the opinion that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota ought not to prevail.

I realize that we sometimes like to inject a little politics into subjects of this character, and perhaps both sides of the Chamber are chargeable with that fault; but if it be pure politics, I think only one Democrat in the Subtreasury at Cincinnati would be displaced. I know the vast majority of the others, and I think all of them are Republicans. They are protected by the civil service. There has been no attempt by the Democrats to remove them; but if there had been a change of administration I think Senators on both sides will agree that there would have been an attempt to remove the subtreasurer.

Mr. REED. But not to abolish the Subtreasury.

Mr. POMERENE. But not to abolish the Subtreasury.

Of course, I do not think conditions have very materially changed in the last generation. All of these places were regarded as important and necessary to the public business during the Republican administrations. It may be that they have offended against business policy by retaining them; but if they have so offended for so many years, they ought not to object to a retention of this system for another year, until we shall have had a full opportunity to investigate and get full knowledge on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. PHELAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair begs pardon. Did the Senator from California address the Chair prior to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from California first addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania realize that such is the case? The Chair does not wish to seem——

Mr. OLIVER. I addressed the Chair first, and I do realize that; but I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. If that is the Senator's understanding, I shall be pleased to yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly willing to listen to the Senator from California, and I hope he will be allowed to take the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is now recognized.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that in San Francisco, Cal., there is a Subtreasury, I desire to bring such information as I have to the attention of the Senate, just as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] described the conditions in Cincinnati.

If the Subtreasuries were abolished, I do not know that it would be possible to transfer their functions to the Federal reserve bank, because the Federal reserve bank as I know it in California has not at the present time the facilities for doing the work of the Subtreasury. I will not advert to the fact that the Federal reserve banks are, like the national banks, private corporations, and therefore that they should not be wholly intrusted with the custody of the great reserves in coin and currency which belong to the United States; but I do know that the Federal reserve bank has no facilities whatever for the storage of coin. The Subtreasuries in all parts of the country have large storage facilities, vaults which give security; and within the last year and a half there has been erected in San Francisco a monumental Subtreasury building, costing for land and structure probably $500,000, and equipped with the best possible storage facilities. I do not know whether or not in this debate the question of storage has been raised, and yet it is one of the most important phases of this question.

I read but the day before yesterday that so large an accumulation of gold and silver had been piled up in the assay office and Subtreasury at New York that permission had been asked of the Government to transfer the major portion of it to the Philadelphia Mint for mere purposes of storage. Now, the Federal reserve banks not having facilities for storage, it would be utterly impossible, if this amendment prevailed—the amendment proposing the abolition of the Subtreasuries—for them to handle and hold the funds of the United States.

The Senator from North Carolina calls my attention to the table. In New York there is accumulated $320,000,000. In San Francisco I know there is approximately $100,000,000 in storage. The transactions there approximate $300,000,000; and, in passing, I may say that this enormous volume of business has been handled for $25,000. If the transfer were made in the interest of economy, I do not believe it would be possible for the Federal reserve banks to take care of this business of the Government at any such comparatively insignificant cost, for the reason that the Government would have to make arrangements with the Federal reserve banks in the first instance as to taking over this enormous business, and I do not believe that bankers would undertake that enormous responsibility at any such cost, because we all know that private banks pay very much more for the services of their assistants and their employees than does the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator inform us as to what it would probably cost the Government to furnish adequate storage facilities if this Subtreasury system were done away with and this gold were to be turned over to the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. PHELAN. I am not in possession of that information; but it stands to reason that it would cost the Government—or more properly cost the banks who are conducting that business for their stockholders for profit—a sum so large that they would have to make a very considerable charge to the Government for increasing their facilities. In the second place, it is a matter of time. It could not possibly be done, should this motion prevail, before there would be a need to make the transfer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. There is only a certain amount of the gold in the United States Treasury that could be deposited in the banks, as suggested by the Senator, amounting to about $70,000,000. Now, does the Senator know that there is $1,740,000,000 of gold at the present time deposited in the mints and assay offices—not in the Subtreasuries, but in the mints and assay offices? You have in the San Francisco Mint, not in the Subtreasury, $357,000,000. So all that the reserve banks would be called upon to do would be to recive $70,000,000; and I do not know of a bank in all the world that does not want to receive deposits. The Federal reserve banks will not be permitted to receive the money that is in assay offices or in mints. That is not intended. That would not be the case if the Subtreasuries were abolished. But the Federal reserve banks could receive the $70,000,000 in the general fund, and that could be used just the same as any other deposits.

Mr. PHELAN. I will say in answer to the Senator that these mints, wherever they may be located—there is a mint in Philadelphia, in Denver, and in San Francisco—could doubtless be used for storage purposes; but there is a question there of divided responsibility. Should the Federal reserve banks receive $70,000,000, they would in that event have to provide increased storage facilities, let us grant; and in the second place they would have to obligate themselves to hold that money in storage. It is not true that by depositing this money, this coin, silver and gold, in the Federal reserve banks it will get into circulation—a thing highly desirable in most instances—but this money is held as a trust fund for the payment of gold and silver certificates and of greenbacks, and hence it is not desirable for the Federal reserve banks as such either to seek or to acquire it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know the Senator from California wants to be absolutely correct. The gold that is in the mints and the assay offices is held to redeem the gold certificates, just as the Senator says; but I was speaking of gold in the general fund. It is not held for the redemption of gold certificates. It will be deposited just the same as the Senator himself deposits money. It would be in circulation just the same as the deposits of the Senator go into circulation. I admit that the gold that is in the mints and the assay offices—the $1,740,000,000—is held for the redemption of gold certificates, and the silver that is held is held for the redemption of the silver certificates; and I called attention in my remarks to where the silver bullion was located.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] calls my attention to a comment of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, which I will read before I quote the subtreasurer at San Francisco on the same subject. The Secretary of the Treasury says:

> The gold coin and bullion held against gold certificates, amounting at present to more than $2,000,000,000, a considerable part of which is deposited in the Subtreasuries, should not, in my opinion, be committed to the custody of any private corporations (and the Federal reserve banks are private corporations), but should be in the physical control of the Government itself. This applies with equal force to the $152,979,025 of gold reserve held against United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890 and the silver dollars held against silver certificates.

The subtreasurer at San Francisco, who, by the way, is a very competent subtreasurer, and who is the only Democrat, if I may refer to partisan politics, which has been raised here, in the Subtreasury, so far as I am advised, because the entire staff is under the civil service, has prepared a statement with his full and intimate knowledge of his own Subtreasury, in which he says——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend until the Chair announces that, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived the unfinished business must be laid before the Senate? It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is temporarily recognized for the purpose for which he rises.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being heard by the Chair, it is so granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield for the purpose of a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 18542.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair now lays before the Senate House bill 18542, and upon the request of the Senator from Utah for unanimous consent, there being no objection, it is so granted and the bill is before the Senate. The Senator from California is now recognized.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in the statement of the subtreasurer at San Francisco he says:

> In addition to the foregoing duties and functions of the Subtreasuries, they have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; much vault space is required for the deposit of these trust funds, especially the silver dollars; the new San Francisco Subtreasury Building, which has only been completed a year and a half, cost approximately a half million of dollars, and its vaults, among the largest and best in the country, cost $130,000; besides the large amount of gold coin stored in these vaults, they contain over $25,000,000 in silver dollars, nearly all of which are held as trust funds against outstanding silver certificates.

He goes on:

> A large portion of the money in the Subtreasuries are trust funds which really do not belong to the Government and can not be used by the Government because they are held as security for the payment of gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; hence it is a fallacy to argue that this money should be put in circulation through the medium of the Federal reserve banks. Any agency that holds this trust fund must hold it as a trust fund, or, in other words, must hold it in storage.

I make the point that, inasmuch as we have not got in all parts of the country storage facilities connected with Federal reserve banks, it will be impracticable at this time to make the transfer.

I am not arguing against the abolition of Subtreasuries. Possibly there will be a way found when we receive the report of the Bureau of Efficiency, when the Secretary of the Treasury, under a resolution adopted last year by the House, makes his final report on the means by which a transfer can be made and the necessary provision made for storage and for the additional assistance; but at this time, if we put the money accumulated in such vast quantities in the hands of Federal reserve banks, there will not be sufficient facility, in the first place, nor would there be sufficient expert help, unless we took over the staff of the Subtreasuries, and there would not be fixed and bonded responsibility.

My recollection is that the subtreasurer at San Francisco receives $4,500 a year, but out of that he pays $500 to an insurance indemnity company for the enormous bond which is required of him; and instead of that office being one desirable for deserving or other Democrats, it is an office which seeks the man. Very few have the combined ability and responsibility to assume duties of that kind. In this instance I know that in seeking a man for that position who would be worthy of it there was very considerable difficulty encountered.

So there is nothing before us now but a mere business question, which is certainly not a political question, and I am sure we are united in the desire to accomplish for the Government the very best results.

It stands practically uncontradicted that the Federal reserve banks are not at this time capable of assuming the work of the Subtreasuries. In the second place, there is no demand from any part of the country that such a transfer be made, except the general demand, which is incessant all the time, to conduct the Government on business principles and with economy. There can be no economy now in making this transfer, possibly no economy at any time. It will only tend to a greater centralization if the money, as has been suggested, be transferred to Washington. The very purpose of the Federal Reserve System was to decentralize, to give to the different sections of the country facilities for doing their business without coming with hat in hand to Wall Street or with hat in hand to Washington.

On the Pacific coast we have a great territory which is served by our institutions, notably by the Subtreasury there. We have the Panama Canal, and the merchants have been accustomed, under authority of the Treasury Department, to deposit the tolls in the Subtreasury at San Francisco for the payment of their vessels passing through that waterway. That is an enormous advantage to the shipping of that port. Our port of San Francisco is a great commercial port. For transactions in the Orient it is necessary to ship gold to it and to ship gold in the course of business of full weight. The Subtreasury has served that purpose by giving full-weight gold in exchange for worn or abraised or depreciated currency or coin. We are in receipt constantly of great shipments of coin and metal from Australia.

So I think if on a fair consideration of this matter it were determined to abolish any Subtreasury, it would be necessary, on account of the peculiar character of the business of the port of San Francisco and the distance from the central Government, to maintain it there as an arm of the Treasury. The Treasury has provided for itself, as I told the Senate, a monumental building, a matter of pride to the Federal Government and the people, and in that building has installed great vaults for the storing of the coin and bullion.

I am merely making my contribution to this discussion as one having knowledge of that particular Subtreasury. I am willing, however, when the time comes and when we are advised by the Treasury Department and by the Efficiency Bureau, probably at the next session, to seek a consolidation, if such a thing were practicable, in order that there may be a decrease of cost and an increase of efficiency. But unless that can be proven, which I am disposed to doubt, so far as San Francisco is concerned, it would be futile for this body to take up a matter which would lead nowhere. There is no complaint whatever as to the administration of the Treasury Department; there is no political question involved; there is no petition either from the head of the Treasury Department or from the Federal reserve bank to make the transfer at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. To the contrary, they protest against it.

Mr. PHELAN. To the contrary, the Senator from Maryland reminds me, both the Department of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have asked the National Legislature not at this time to interfere, and I submit it would be an interference with the orderly conduct of their great department to make a violent change at this time.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have no doubt from the information which has come to me and from what I have gathered during this discussion that eventually these Subtreasuries will have to go, and in some way or other the duties now performed by them, with the possible exception of San Francisco, where the Subtreasury might be maintained on account of its great distance from the center, will be merged with the duties of the Federal reserve banks. I think this is all the more probable from the fact that in some places at least the regional Federal reserve banks maintain very expensive quarters and have a very expensive organization with very little to do, and it would be somewhat of a charity to give them additional reasons for existence by consolidating them with the Subtreasuries in the immediate neighborhood.

A Subtresury is not necessary to the existence of a place. There is no Subtreasury in the great city of Pittsburgh, where I live, and still that city and that district conduct a banking and monetary business far exceeding that of Baltimore or Cincinnati or San Francisco. On account of the great size of the pay rolls handed out week by week in that section the demand for coin and for currency is greater there than it is in almost any other city in the country.

But, Mr. President, I think that before we tear down this old system we ought to have something in view with regard to building up the new, and as there is nothing proposed except the mere abolition of these Subtreasuries now the duty would be cast upon the Treasury Department to legislate to a certain extent with regard to the method of transferring their duties.

The Bureau of Efficiency is at work upon this very question, and inasmuch as they are now in existence and going along doing the work, and doing the work at a very reasonable cost, I think Congress ought to be rather slow about abolishing them and should give the Bureau of Efficiency a chance to recommend a system upon which the substitution can be made.

I therefore am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote for the continuance of these institutions for the present at least.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I think it probably entirely unnecessary that I should have anything to say upon this subject after listening to the lucid explanation of the Senators who have preceded me, who have shown most conclusively the fact that it is unwise at this time to abolish the Subtreasuries of the United States; but inasmuch as the city of Baltimore was involved in the doing away with the Subtreasury of that city I feel that I want to say a few words in regard to Baltimore City.

This matter was brought up in the House and the Subtreasury of Baltimore City was abolished by the House committee without any knowledge whatever on the part of the representatives of Baltimore City. After learning that such had been the case a committee came from Baltimore in order that they might be heard. I attended that meeting. I attended the hearings with the gentlemen who went before the committee of the House and it was proven most conclusively to that committee that they had done wrong in abolishing the Subtreasury at Baltimore, and, as we are all aware, it was put back.

Now, the argument used here is that they are seeking to abolish the Subtreasuries in order to save money. So far as the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and so far as recommendations and the report of the reserve banks are concerned, I have come to the conclusion that there will be very little money saved.

Mr. President, aside from saving money it seems to me the convenience of the people of the United States should be considered to some extent. So far as Baltimore City is concerned, we felt that we were entitled to a reserve bank in Baltimore City. We were unfortunate and it was not given to us.

Owing to our inability to secure a reserve bank we are obliged to fall back upon the Subtreasury in order to conduct the business of Baltimore. There is over $200,000,000 worth of business done through the Subtreasury. In the statement by the bankers and business men of Baltimore before the committee, men in whom I have the utmost confidence and who would not make a misstatement, it was stated that if the Subtreasury was abolished in Baltimore City the expense to the business people and bankers of Baltimore City would amount to over $200,000.

Now, it does seem to me that we should not take this action in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and the Federal Reserve Board have protested against the abolishment of these Subtreasuries, in view of the fact that they have stated that there would be very little saving if they were abolished, in view of the fact that the convenience to the people of the United States would be very greatly interfered with. I will state to my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, for whom I have the highest regard, when he says that it is a political matter, that so far as Baltimore is concerned, I think that every man in the Subtreasury is a Republican but one. Therefore no such purpose as that can be accomplished. I think he was mistaken entirely in his statement. I think from what the Senator from Illinois stated that such is not the case with a majority of the employees.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator I am very sorry I injected that matter into the debate. It came from the fact that I thought the Senator from North Carolina took an unusual and undue and untenable course in the matter. He rather provoked me into saying what I ought not to have said. Senators who have served with me here for many years know that in matters of legislation I have as a rule never been actuated by a partisan spirit.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not believe——

Mr. NELSON. I want to say further, if he will permit me——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is all right.

Mr. NELSON. I think myself that under present circumstances an exception should be made in respect to Baltimore and Cincinnati. It was my original purpose to offer the amendment in that form, but I thought perhaps that could be adjusted in conference. But I take it that the other side of the Chamber will be unanimous in voting down this proposition, so that it will not go to conference. If it could possibly pass and the matter go to conference, I should be very glad if an exception was made for the time being in favor of Baltimore and Cincinnati. I realize how both cities feel; that they feel they were slighted and discriminated against by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota there is no man in this body for whom I have a higher regard, and I am sure he would not have any political reason for the abolishment of the Subtreasury if he thought it was an improper thing to do, and I recognize that was not his intention.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me a word further, when I first took up this matter and made my first remarks on the subject and afterwards until I was somewhat provoked by the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina the thought of politics never entered into my head. I never had the least idea of looking at it from that standpoint.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Now, Mr. President, in regard to this matter it does seem to me that a matter of so great importance, that affects so many people throughout the country, that brings about so much convenience to so many citizens, it would be a most improper thing to take this action without due consideration and in the face of the protests of the Secretary of the Treasury, in face of the protests of the Federal Reserve Board, in face of the fact that there will be very little money saved, in face of the fact that there is in the bill to-day an efficiency commission provided for that has been authorized to investigate this matter and see whereby if it shall be abolished the machinery shall be instituted to replace the work that is being done now by the Subtreasuries.

I do hope that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota will not prevail.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there are seven Democrats on the floor and but six of the minority party. I do not think we ought to legislate with so small a number on the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Jones	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Kenyon	Page	Smith, S. C.
Catron	Kern	Phelan	Smoot
Chamberlain	Lane	Pittman	Thomas
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lewis	Ransdell	Walsh
Gallinger	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Warren
Gronna	McLean	Shafroth	Watson
Husting	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Weeks
James	Nelson	Sherman	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. FERNALD, Mr. STERLING, Mr. LODGE, Mr. FALL, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. BANKHEAD answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am not in the habit of basing my action in opposing or favoring legislation which has to do with public matters which are located in Massachusetts, on the fact that they are located there. Although I think there is a great deal of sound reason and sense in the statement which has been made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] relating to the Subtreasuries, I am convinced that Senators do not understand all the details of the work which is done by the Subtreasuries, and I am confident that there must be legislation passed which will enable the Federal reserve banks in cities where Subtreasuries are located to take over the functions which are now performed by the Subtreasuries. I have no doubt that an investigation, when it is made, will show that very many of the activities of the Subtreasury may be dispensed with, if they may not be entirely abolished. I hope such an investigation will be made, if this motion does not prevail; but it does seem to me that we ought to know more about the question than is contained in the information which has been thus far furnished to the Senate. Therefore I am opposed to action being taken at this time. Next winter I shall take a different position if the testimony which will be presented at that time convinces me that the Subtreasuries are no longer necessary.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has very generously conceded that it was a mistake to consider this matter from a partisan standpoint. In view of that concession, I should like to call his attention and the attention of others here to-day to another general, broad consideration that applies to this proposition to abolish the Substreasuries throughout the country.

Mr. President, the Subtreasuries are the direct fiscal agents of the United States Treasury throughout the land. Looking at the matter broadly, I can not help thinking that it is in the interest of the country to have these agents for this financial distribution, themselves holding Government cash, throughout the country in addition to the Federal reserve banks, because these agencies are direct agencies, subject to the direct policy of the Treasury Department. There is no board of directors, there are no stockholders with any kind of financial interest or policy that can intervene or affect or retard the action of the Subtreasury performing its functions under the orders of the Treasurer of the United States. Therefore, looking at this matter broadly, instead of abolishing these Subtreasuries I think every one of them should be preserved, and where necessary transferred to the cities of next size and importance so as to give to such cities the financial advantages which the functions of the Subtreasuries give wherever they may be located.

We have had rather a peculiar situation in Baltimore, the seventh city in the United States in size. Right down the line you may say the Federal reserve banks were given to the cities in proportion to their size and financial importance; but when it came to Baltimore there was a jump—a jump to the thirty-fifth city in the United States—namely, Richmond. Under other circumstances, if we had had a Federal reserve bank in Baltimore, we would not have been able to have our bankers come to Washington and tell the committee of the House how important the Subtreasury was. They would have simply said, "Go ahead; we will transact this business through the Federal reserve bank."

I have no objection, Mr. President, to giving Federal reserve banks, wherever they may be located, powers similar to those that the Subtreasuries now exercise, but I do say that, in addition to the Federal reserve banks, the Subtreasuries should be preserved and should be further distributed throughout the country.

In the hearing we had before the House Committee on Appropriations when it was proposed to single out Baltimore and, in addition to the disadvantage of not having given her a Federal reserve bank, to which she was entitled in view of her size, business, and the volume of the financial transactions of our great Maryland city, it was proposed to take away the subtreasuryship also. Under such circumstances, Mr. President, we had quite a rally of our bankers. They came over here and told the House committee that the expenditure of $40,000, which the Government makes in Baltimore to maintain the subtreasurer's office, saves the city a direct outlay, in the opinion of those bankers, $200,000 a year just as a cash cost, and that the advantage to Baltimore in other ways was very large, and not a matter of dollars and cents. I want to read very briefly, in conclusion, from the testimony of Mr. Ingle, who is the president of the Baltimore Trust Co., and who, as a banking man, would naturally lean to putting this power in the hands of a Federal reserve bank, if there were one in Baltimore; but there being none in Baltimore, he states very clearly how important this Subtreasury is to that city. Mr. Ingle says:

> We find in having no reserve bank but in having a Subtreasury we are greatly convenienced for the very reasons I have told you about. We have not only all these little currency exchanges and nickels and smaller currency cared for immediately on the premises; but we are a community of 700,000 people, and as a part of the population of the United States entitled to some little measure of consideration in the expense undertaken by the Government on behalf of the people as a whole; and that expense, mark you, is $40,000 in serving a community of 700,000 people. But, as a banking proposition, as a matter of convenience, we put our money down there and get the certificates of the Subtreasury which we use as clearing-house funds, in $10,000 certificates. We make all of our 5 per cent deposits in there in cash from day to day, deposits in the redemption of circulating notes, all the deposits for transfer of funds, and so on. That represents deposits made in cities like Norfolk or wherever there is a collector of internal revenue or what not, and where they want to transfer funds in any particular direction they will ask us to make the deposit for them; and I could give you a whole lot of reasons, most important to those immediately in touch, why we should not be deprived of this very small look-in on the beneficence of the Government.

Continuing, at another place, he said:

> That is only one instance of many other facilities which it furnishes the banks, and through the banks the community at large. As Mr. Homer—

The president of the Baltimore Clearing House—

> said, there is a great demand there for nickels. Baltimore is the seat of the principal packing industry in the country—I believe that is not an overstatement—in fruits and vegetables and oysters, and such matters as that. They will go to the Subtreasury and get $1,000 worth of nickels instead of having little tin tags, and so on, to pay a man every time he shucks a quart of oysters, and every time he shucks out a quart of oysters they pass him out a nickel. Now, as you say, that oyster packer could go to Mr. Homer's bank and ask for $500 worth of nickels, and Mr. Homer could go to the Subtreasury and get the nickels and pass them over to his customer; but it all comes from the Subtreasury. Our subtreasurer is altogether indifferent as to whether he pays it to Mr. Homer's messenger or to the messenger of the packer, but it saves the labor of one man in the premises to get them direct. Take the railway system of Baltimore. They deal directly, not because the banks unloaded it on the Government, but that is a very large corporation. It handles a very large quantity of small change of one kind and another. Ordinarily, it would have to go to the bank, and the bank would probably count it and it would go to the Subtreasury and be counted again. Under the practice of the Treasurer's office many large enterprises of that sort deal with the Subtreasury, and it is a very great convenience indeed.

Mr. President, there is one other feature about which I want to speak in connection with which, it has always seemed to me, the functions of the Subtreasury should be enlarged rather than decreased. I refer to the question of the sanitary cleanliness of money. I believe that the insanitary condition of the circulating medium in this country should be changed, as far as possible, and that one of the present functions of the Subtreasuries all over the country should be increased and additional power and facility given the public for keeping money clean from a sanitary standpoint. One of the great changes of the future, as science further fights disease, will be added care and expenditure by the National Government, especially in the great cities, to prevent the currency from circulating contagion. Under those circumstances, and viewing the question either as a financial proposition or as a health proposition, the Subtreasuries should not be abolished, but, on the contrary, they should be more wisely distributed and their functions should be increased.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I desire to add to the debate just a word. Since the statement was made that the Subtreasuries were maintained because of political conditions, it will be interesting to know what the real facts are. I have since inquired of one of the Congressmen from the Cincinnati district, and I find that the office force of the Subtreasury in Cincinnati consists of the assistant treasurer and 16 subordinates. The assistant treasurer is a Democrat; the 16 subordinates are all Republicans; and I dare say that those 16 Republicans are safer under a Democratic chief than 16 Democrats would be under a Republican chief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], but I understand that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote and vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In his absence I feel constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I understand that if present he would vote as I propose to vote. Therefore I record my vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but I am privileged to vote on this bill, and I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness, and I am paired with him for the day. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I desire to ask if the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CLARK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who, I understand, is absent from the city. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. STONE] has been called from the city on some important matters, and that it is absolutely impossible for him to be here.

Mr. BRADY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Borah	Gronna	Nelson	Sutherland
Brandegee	Kenyon	Norris	Watson
Cummins	Lippitt	Poindexter	Works

So Mr. NELSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 2, page 103, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made for the Bureau of Education, whether for salaries or expenses or any other purpose connected therewith, shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies; nor shall the Bureau of Education receive any moneys for salaries or any other purpose for the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies, except by act of Congress authorizing the same. Any person violating any or either of the terms of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, as the court may determine.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, my reason for presenting this amendment to the pending bill is because of the activities that have been indulged in through the Bureau of Education by agencies which seem to me to be inimical to the education of the youth of this country. A little over a year ago I introduced, and there was passed through the Senate, a resolution calling upon the secretaries of the different executive departments for information showing what funds were contributed by either the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation to the activities of the several bureaus of this Government. There was a reply from each one of the departments—from the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Labor, the Department of the Interior; in fact, from all the departments of the Government—and the reply in every case in answer to that resolution was, in substance, that there were no moneys being received from either the Carnegie Foundation or the Rockefeller Foundation for the work of those several departments or their bureaus.

Now, that reply from the Bureau of Education was measurably true. It stated a part of the truth, but it did not state all of the truth. Acting upon information that I have since received, I find that while it may be true that there is no money being received from either of these foundations directly, yet moneys are being paid in the way of salaries to individuals who are in the employ of these different corporate agencies, and they are at the same time nominally employees of the Government of the United States, because they are also on the pay roll of the United States at salaries of $1 per annum. In other words, the main salaries are paid by those who I claim ought not to have anything to do with the education of the children of this country. I know not from whence the money comes for these different salaries.

When my attention was directed to the fact that that resolution stated the truth only in part, I prepared another resolution, more searching and direct in its terms, and it, too, was passed by the Senate. A reply has just come from the Bureau of Education, to which the request was alone directed this time. The reply, Mr. President, shows a condition of things that this Government ought to crush now and put an end to methods that ought to be followed only by the Government of the United States. If any individual or corporation wants to contribute money to the Bureau of Education or to the Agricultural Department, or to any other department of the Government, there is no reason in the world why the consent of Congress should not be received as a condition precedent to the acceptance of these or any other gifts.

I presume the attention of the Senate has not been called to the report that just came in. It has been printed by the Appropriations Committee, to whom the report was referred.

Mr. OVERMAN. When was it referred to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations on the 19th of January. Probably it ought to have gone to the Committee on Education and Labor, but it went to the Appropriations Committee.

It will appear from this report, Mr. President, that there are innumerable persons on the pay roll of the Bureau of Education acting in different capacities where the salaries paid by the Government of the United States are $1 per annum and where the salaries paid by outside agencies run up as high as six, eight, and ten thousand dollars per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know, if the Senator can furnish me the information, why a man getting $10,000 is put on the Government pay roll at $1. Can the Senator give me any information as to that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am frank to say that I have not had the opportunity to give the subject the investigation to which it is entitled since the report came in, because I have been engaged all the time with the Military Affairs Committee; but my own impression is that the persons named in the report have, to some extent, the benefit of the franking laws through the Bureau of Education.

Let me illustrate what might well happen: Some great educator of this country, who may be ever so highly respected by our people, writes a thesis on some great educational subject that may be very near to the hearts of the American people, and yet he has no way of getting it before the people except as he may be able to pay to get his literature distributed, or in so far as he may be able to get the press to publish it; and yet one of these pets of the Bureau of Education, Mr. President, may get his answer to it, or his own view, before the American people through the franking privilege. This may not be done directly, but ways may be and are devised to accomplish it, as I shall hereafter show.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see how that can possibly be done—I mean, under the law now existing. There is no franking privilege granted to any individual in a bureau or a department, and the only things that can be distributed under the franking privilege are governmental documents, Senate documents, or House documents. Of course if they were made Senate documents or House documents or governmental documents, then of course they could go through the mails free; but in order to do that of course they would have to have the head of the bureau or the head of the department have them printed as department documents.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am going to call your attention now to what has already developed in connection with this matter, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina and the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that it is not done. I am only saying to the Senator that the only way that I can see how it could be done is as I have suggested. I do not say that is has not been done in that way.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. JONES. I was just going to suggest that they take that means of making it a public document or an official document of the bureau, and it not only goes out, possibly, under the Government frank, but also with the apparent stamp of approval of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it goes out from a Federal bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Then of course the department itself assumes that it is a Government document, and has it printed as such.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

When I introduced this resolution I began to get letters from all over this country in reference to it and commending my course. I received this morning a letter from an educational institution at River Falls, Wis., as to the methods that were being adopted to corrupt or change the educational methods in vogue, and that have been in vogue for a good many years, and directing them along channels that they ought not to go. Amongst other gentlemen who have written me letters on this subject is Mr. William H. Allen, director of the Institute for Public Service, City Hall Square, 51 Chambers Street, New York City.

As soon as this resolution was introduced he took up the matter with me. I do not know what relation he may have to any other institution so far as this subject is concerned, and I do not care, but I wrote to him and I wanted to know more, and I am apologizing to the Senate because I have not had time to get to the bottom of this thing. I received a letter from him on the 18th—that was the day before this report was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the letter was written before the report was printed—and I take the liberty of reading his reply to the Senate, in order to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this matter. Mr. Allen has had experience in work of this kind, and I am indebted to him for the information which his letter gives and for the suggestions he makes. He says amongst other things:

Very many thanks for your letter of January 12 referring to the resolution introduced by you re foundations and asking for information which I may have with respect to Rockefeller and Carnegie foundations, etc.

May I first make a suggestion or two with regard to the resolution itself, namely, that when reviewing the information furnished by the Department of the Interior you have in mind:

1. The franking privileges given to a number of agencies or individuals, as, for example, Prof. Judd, of the University of Chicago—

Now, nobody will ever charge that institution with being entirely free from the Rockefeller influence—ostensibly to conduct an investigation for the United States Bureau of Education. This has meant in several instances not merely that private individuals have sent out questionnaires without postage cost, but that their reports have been issued by the bureau at public expense, and—which is more important—in the name of the bureau.

So that you see pamphlets and documents eminating from the Chicago University go out with the stamp of approval, as the Senator from Washington says, of the Government on them. That is not right. It ought to be stopped, and it will be when the people understand it.

Mr. OVERMAN. With the Government frank?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. I am not questioning the integrity of its methods at all. I do not know anything about it; but in the very nature of things no single educational institution in this country ought to be permitted to send out its views with the stamp of approval of the Government of the United States when there are so many other institutions that might not approve of them at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that it shall be printed as a departmental document it must of necessity carry with it the indorsement of the department, or else it would not be a departmental document.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is just what I am complaining of—that whenever these pets of the Chief of the Bureau of Education come to him with a document, he can easily find a way to make it a Government publication and give it the franking privilege, whereas some man who happened not to be so well favored by the bureau might knock at the door until doomsday and not have his document receive any governmental recognition, so that it, too, could go out.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to assume, at least, if not to claim, that these men who receive $1 per annum compensation from the department are the pets of the department?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Some of them; yes. I make that charge here and now.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Is it not to be presumed that they all are?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it is to be presumed that they all are.

Mr. WORKS. I am a little in doubt, however, whether this——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator is going to call attention to the amendment itself, will he not wait until I get rid of this matter? Then I shall be glad to have any suggestions made with reference to the amendment. My purpose is to cut out these private activities, and to let the Government itself control the education of the youth of this country in its own way.

Secondly, Mr. Allen calls my attention to matters that I ought to consider and that the Senate ought to consider. He says further:

2. Persons whose salaries are paid from private funds, and whose work is really that of private agencies, have been attached to the United States Bureau, written letters in its name, etc. Personally, I believe this is an excellent thing, provided there is supervision by the bureau, which will prevent its being exploited.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the Senator knows whether the stationery that they use is furnished to these people by the Government? The stationery bills at this time are very large, and we have had to increase the appropriations for that purpose to a certain extent. Can the Senator tell me whether or not stationery is furnished these officers who get $1 per annum from the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know about that. I would not undertake to say. If I were to be permitted to express my personal opinion about this matter, I would say that the whole bureau and its methods ought to be investigated by the Congress of the United States. I think the people of this country ought to know, just as they did in the case of the Agricultural Department, just where these activities come from and who is putting up the money. The Government of the United States is big enough and able to put up all the money necessary to educate the children or to direct the educational institutions as the people may see fit.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. JONES. Does the report that the Senator has set out the names of the persons and the institutions from which their compensation really comes?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I wondered about that, because I had printed in the RECORD of the last session, at page 12028, a compilation that I got from the Department of Education which showed that there were 144 of these special officers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was not advised of that. I wish I had seen it.

Mr. JONES. This matter was called to my attention, and I wrote to all the departments of the Government asking them to send to me the number and list of names of those who were in their employ at nominal salaries, the balance of their compensation being paid by some one else. That is printed beginning at page 12027 of the RECORD of last session; and under the report of the Bureau of Education they give a list comprising 144 names, giving the names of the individuals and the agency that pays the real salary to them. I did not know whether this report furnished that or not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it does. I think it furnishes the whole business. I have not read it, but I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Let me say here that Mr. Allen had to do, if I mistake not, with the Industrial Commission, and investigated this branch of the subject. I have not had an opportunity to look into it, but I think the Senate will find that there is published in that some of the results of his investigation.

Mr. Allen says:

3. Another kind of service which can do much injury is free service by persons who have influence with the commissioner and who write opinions about educational work for incorporation in the commissioner's report.

Now, note this. This is a reputable man, I assume. I do not know him personally:

Last year I protested against one such case because an admirable piece of work which was nearly 100 per cent successful for eight normal schools in Wisconsin was disparagingly and almost casually disposed of by the United States commissioner, who partially shifted the responsibility by saying it was the opinion of Prof. Judd, of the University of Chicago.

The same professor who has the benefit of the franking privilege in order to send out his effusions to the people of this country. What show has an individual as against such influence as that—a man who is paid $6,000 a year, and the Government pays him one dollar.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One dollar a year?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; one dollar a year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the purpose of that one dollar?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suppose it is to give them standing as officials of the Government. I do not know what else it is given for. I want to call attention to the fact that this subject was gone into here a year or two ago in reference to the Agricultural Department. Here was this great branch of the public service honeycombed with these same influences that I am complaining about now. Congress very promptly took the matter in hand, the Senate will remember, and fixed it so that they could not do it unless they did it in some underhand way. To avoid the suggestion which came to us at that time that these particular foundations were doing the work, they have now split up into little subsidiary corporations and are operating in other ways, so that the original foundations do not appear to be doing the work.

I call attention here to this further remark of Mr. Allen:

Certain influences have been able to get free publication for doctors' theses and speeches. For instance, the United States bureau spent public funds to circulate broadcast a criticism of Charles W. Eliot, which was also circulated broadcast by the General Education Board as one of its occasional papers.

Is that a square deal for an eminent man like Dr. Eliot? He may differ with us all very radically in his theories of education and civic government and everything else; but we ought not to let an individual come in and at the expense of the Government circulate an answer to Dr. Eliot's suggestions published by him as a private citizen. Put them on the same footing. I have no objection to that. If President Judd or anyone else wants to criticize and analyze Dr. Eliot's views, however, he ought not to be permitted to do it as a Federal agent and in what purports to be a document issued under a bureau of this Government.

A great deal of literature is still current—that never ought to have been printed by the United States bureau and ought now to be scrapped; but it is notorious in school circles that a little clique of schoolmen can get anything printed by themselves or protegés which they will offer.

4. Another kind of influence which is perhaps even more serious is the influence of foundations which keeps the United States bureau from protesting against work that is shoddy and unfair. The Maryland survey of last year will, I fear, be highly commended in the next annual report of the commissioner. It has seldom been equaled for shoddy work. Partly because of foundation influence and partly because the United States bureau is living in a glass house. On surveys it is hamstrung when it comes to telling the truth about foundation surveys.

Whether there is any merit in that or not, I do not know. I do not pretend to draw any conclusions with reference to these various contentions; but what I am complaining of is that it is possible to do these things under a governmental bureau.

Mr. President, I shall not take time to read the whole letter, but in connection with the letter I am going to ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the "Memorandum re Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations" furnished me by Mr. Allen. Inquiries brought forth the following facts from the foundations themselves.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not read it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it ought to be read, but I dislike to take the time of the Senate to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum re Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations.]

INQUIRIES BROUGHT FORTH THE FOLLOWING FACTS FROM THE FOUNDATIONS THEMSELVES.

Professors of secondary education have been furnished southern universities—and the same men furnished State departments of education for supervising secondary schools "on the sole condition that the man selected shall be acceptable to us." One case with regard to which a copy of the letter was sent us from the files by the General Education Board is that of the University of Virginia. It was testified, however, that in most instances these men were looked over by the General Education Board. In the case of the States of Maine and New Hampshire a similar condition was made with respect to demonstration work by the Secretary of the Interior.

Other employees have been furnished to State departments of education in the South for elementary inspectors and negro school inspectors. Regarding this different opinions have been written us by southern educators, some of whom felt it restricted the freedom of public officers. Others felt that it had greatly strengthened State work. A western superintendent was offered some help from another private source, investigated among southern colleagues, and decided it would be better to do without the help than to suffer the restrictions that several superintendents reported.

The secretary of the General Education Board stated that he had found it necessary to refuse to settle questions for beneficiaries, i. e., to refuse the crown they wanted to give. In other words, the power of a great foundation is proportionate not to its money or to its giving but to our willingness to bend the knee for money.

The State of Maryland accepted a survey report from the General Education Board which would have been ridiculed and rejected if written by John Smith; in fact, much better summaries of the conditions in Maryland already existed in State records before the General Education Board gained prestige by doing that work. After the report was in a State-wide campaign was conducted that made it all anybody's life was worth to raise a question about the proposition. Then the New York newspapers and others throughout the country were flooded with statements that the survey report had been adopted with untold benefits, etc. Incidentally, among the reasons cited for passing the bill was that the new bill did not interfere with child labor of children 13 years old.

The rich State of Minnesota has been receiving funds from the General Education Board for studying certain phases of teacher-training work. Its university president has been a member of the General Education Board and is soon to come to the Rockefeller Foundation.

The Gary system is being investigated by the General Education Board under conditions which merit investigation. It is generally understood in educational circles that Prof. Cubberly, of California, who was first announced as secretary of the survey, found it necessary to retire because an assistant secretary of the General Education Board was to edit the findings of experts.

If the same kind of a report is made for the Gary system as is made for Maryland, the net result will cost this country hundreds of millions of dollars.

The overwhelming majority of influence in the board of education is exerted by a General Education Board member and paid officer. He circulated petitions, signed chiefly by other foundation members, which introduced a factional fight in the New York school board against an officer who was unanimously elected six months before. He and a paid employee of the Rockefeller Foundation and a principal officer of the Rockefeller Institute for Governmental Research buttonholed board members and fairly intimidated the town into a new presidency and a new policy. As everywhere else, the seriousness of the situation is not in the thing done but in the fact that newspapers, charitable societies, churches, and educators fall in line and applaud.

We think of picking a man as president who is persona non grata to the Rockefellers. So far as possible, they try to pick a man known to be persona particima. How could the situation be anything else, with the whole South under pension from the General Education Board and with lightning apt to strike any private college?

The Rockefeller publicity is very skilled. It announced its intention to give money conditionally. It keeps on announcing its intention until the college earns the money; it then announces that the college has earned the money. A few months later it announces the fact that the college was amongst the many that received money, and finally it announces it every year thereafter and carries the cumulative total, so that the same dollar given away or pledged is published as a new fact year after year. Since we called attention to this last year the publicity distinguishes former gifts from current gifts, but in such a way that most papers print the cumulative total first, and the public forgets the classifications. This same publicity credits Mr. Rockefeller not only with the amounts not given but with the amounts pledged and with the total toward which Rockefeller gifts are pledged. Thus, two years ago this month the General Education Board had headlines through the country "$119,000,000 given for education," and these headlines were supplied on its own releases. One of its secretaries repeated this in a national magazine. The fact was, up to that time it actually parted with $10,000,000, of which less than $6,000,000 had gone for other than colleges founded by Mr. Rockefeller.

In the summary of the General Education Board, 1902–1914, appeared numerous misstatements about its relation to the Department of Agriculture, e. g., that it had given money for the Department of Agriculture because the law did not permit the national authorities to spend money for such purposes. This was contrary to fact, because the department did have the right and did spend the money. In other words, would an investigation show that the General Education Board kept on spending money for farm demonstration work when the Government ought to have done it without its aid, because of the tremendous asset it would prove to the General Education Board to have all of the work in the South credited to the foundation?

A pathetically small amount of information was found at the offices of the General Education Board, which was not equipped to understand the great educational problems it was settling by its gifts of money. The financial and executive control of the foundation was on the part of a small group which had filled up the places vacated by men of national standing, who were first appointed to the General Education Board.

It was not customary for the executive committee to send information to the full board. For instance, the board never saw the summary of its first 13 years until the day when it finally approved the report as written and drafted resolutions commending this report as being scholarly, etc. Although it was stated that the executive board made no recommendations, the records showed that the group at headquarters practically determined the recommendations and allowances of the big-name members who have posed before the country as giving a great deal of time to these educational studies.

Incidentally, although established in the hope of making it a clearing house for givers to education, it was stated that no one else had left money in bequest to the General Education Board and that would-be testators had not sought information.

As to the Rockefeller Foundation, with its one hundred and odd million dollars, it is extensibly not going in for education. It has, however, decided to go in for medical education, with its large gift to Chicago. An investigation two years ago shows:

First. The foundation had only three or four clerks to spend $100,000,000.

Second. Whereas it had promised if given a national charter to keep a clearing house for information, it had actually forgotten all about the promise and the plan.

Third. The former dean of Columbia Law School declared that the Rockefeller charter was illegal because it did not agree with the constitutional requirement that the title state its purpose. The opinion was further expressed that two of its members, ex-President Eliot and Mr. Hepburn, had not been legally elected.

It was brought out clearly that there was nothing under the sun the foundation could not do under its present charter. There is no provision in its charter for public service.

Use of the union label was objected to by the secretary, and a charitable society therefore dropped the label.

One important interference with educational method by Rockefeller and General Education Board is well known, namely, a change of the municipal research program in New York and throughout the country. Certain public-school men wanted to get the scalp of a municipal research director. They got a General Education Board employee. He made a report which contained a number of charges against the educational methods of this New York bureau of municipal research. These charges the bureau's board, consisting of men like Robert Fulton Cutting, G. W. Wickersham, A. Shaw, V. Morawetz, declared and proved unsound, untrue, and biased. While the report was being read aloud by the thoroughgoing gentleman, Mr. Rockefeller, jr., telephoned to ask two officers of the bureau of municipal research to meet him at lunch. It was debated whether or not to even go to see him. A lunch meeting was held. Mr. Rockefeller offered $10,000 a year for five years, and later $20,000 a year, if the bureau of municipal research would discontinue the educational work in which its trustees declared their belief in answering charges by the General Education Board employee. Instead of resenting the offer, and instead of refusing to consider it until the General Education Board gave evidence that its report was unfair, the bureau of municipal research slunk away, and to this day has never had any acknowledgment of its proof that it has been blakguarded by the General Education Board. It accepted the money, and its whole program for citizen activity and for educating men for public service changed. As a direct offspring of this relation was the contention of the acting director of the bureau at the recent Springfield convention, that when public officers are in sympathy with a civic body it should publish no facts that would lead the public to criticize or to condemn.

Like the General Education Board, the Rockefeller Foundation is in no real sense a foundation, as the complete control of it is in the hands of a small group in Mr. Rockefeller's personal office. Incidentally, the publicity work for all the Rockefeller Foundation is done by a publicity man, Mr. Ivy Lee, who has no official relation to these foundations and whose publicity work is not submitted to the trustees before going to the publisher.

As to the Carnegie Foundations, there are several which affect college independence. "The gratitude which is a lively sense of favors to come" has given the Carnegie Institution at Washington a great deal of influence. It makes disbursements. Anybody who is not good can not expect to get disbursements.

Analysis will show that though there has been a vast amount of criticism of the institution none of it has been outspoken.

The Carnegie corporation is very quiet as yet. You will remember that it furnished funds for attacking the proposition of the Panama tolls. It represents an enormous influence and has operated very little in the open as yet. There is reason to fear that it has subsidized the publication and advertisement of books by Messrs. Root, Taft, and others which attack modern liberal tendencies in government, and have been rigorously pushed by the Educational Review, of which Mr. Nicholas Murray Butler is editor.

When advertising these reactional works Mr. Butler has not advertised the fact that he is also officer of several Carnegie Foundations. When attacking numerous educators and applauding the Carnegie Foundation's surveys Editor Butler did not advertise or admit his connection with the Carnegie Foundation.

It is now notorious that the Carnegie pension plan has overreached itself and broken down. Colleges have found their tongues and hearts for the first time in 10 years. A slight investigation shows that while under pension by the Carnegie Foundation the college world has supinely delegated to the foundation responsibilities for studying and settling college questions. By having representatives of State universities on its board the Carnegie Foundation (the same is true of the General Education Board) makes it impossible for these officers to represent their own public.

When a college wants a president almost the first thing it does is to ask the Carnegie Foundation to name somebody. Great public service would be rendered by bringing out this fact clearly.

ATTITUDE TOWARD NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Whereas every State university president has been committed in favor of a national university, there is almost a solid line-up of the big private universities against such a public institution. The State university men have done very little to further it; the foundations have not openly opposed; they certainly have not helped, and it is taken for granted that they do not favor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. This document, a copy of which I hold in my hand, No. 684, is a letter transmitted to the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, signed Franklin K. Lane. I find, in looking it over hurriedly, that there are 152 persons listed here—I think that is approximately accurate, perhaps substantially accurate—who are on the roll at $1 each per annum. That is the salary they are getting from the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. And then the salary that they are getting from other organizations is likewise stated in another column in most cases; not in all cases. So that the Senator's movement, I think, is very well warranted by the facts that have been developed, which show that something ought to be done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so, Mr. President, and that is the purpose of this resolution—to stop it. I do not know of any other way to do it except to limit the appropriations that have been made, or are being sought to be made, by this appropriation bill. I think it but fair to state that Mr. Claxton was appointed under a former administration as head of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the list contains at least 150 names, and that the private or corporate body by which the money is paid, over and above the dollar paid by the Government, is given in the list; and I do not find the Carnegie Foundation nor the Rockefeller Foundation in the list.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And you will not find it, because, as I said a while ago, that information came from the Agricultural Department on a resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and showed the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations. You do not see these names any more, or at least they are not so conspicuous.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations appropriate the money, say, to the Phillips Academy for the payment of Bernard M. Allen?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no means of knowing, and that was the reason why I said that if my personal views were asked I should say the whole bureau ought to be investigated, and I shall probably move an investigation later; but take this one case now. I suppose there are some cases where the gifts are made by perfectly worthy institutions; but I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are men there under the $1 annual salary paid by the Government of the United States that are on some of these Carnegie and other foundation boards.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice here Calvin N. Kendall. He receives a salary of $10,000, and he is the State commissioner of education of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I notice one man here who is a professor in a university in my State. He seems to be getting a salary from somebody here, $1 from the Government, and also a salary from the State. I was wondering whether that prevails all through here. A great many of them are from universities and colleges. Here is the State agent of rural schools for North Carolina. The General Education Board gives him $2,500. I notice, however, that one of the professors in my State gets $2,500, and I was wondering if he got a salary from the foundation fund, and another from the State, and then $1 from the Government, so that he was paid from three sources?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not undertake to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. Here is Fred N. Scott, professor of rhetoric in the University of Michigan. He seems to be getting a salary from the State, $4,000 from this fund, and $1 from the Government.

Here is a county superintendent of schools. Here is the president of the State Normal School of Kentucky. He is getting $3,600 from this fund. Here is a man from Miami University, and another one from Johns Hopkins. In the case of the University of Virginia, here is a man who is professor of agricultural education there, by the name of Abbey, marked "Z." I do not know what that means. Some of them seem to be getting two and three salaries here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is not the worst part of it. It is bad enough as it appears in this report, but that is not the worst influence. Here are men in educational life, striving to accomplish the payment to them of a pension after their terms have expired; so that we find them not only holding out their capacious paws to the youth of the land, controlling their education, but undertaking to reach the educators who are to be dependent upon them and their nefarious pensions in the future.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I was compelled to be out of the Chamber when this matter arose. I should like to ask the Senator how it arises now. Has he offered an amendment to this bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am proposing an amendment to the bill. I will send the Senator a copy of it.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator has done so, and I am glad this matter is being brought to light.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I ask the Senator from Oregon what privilege these gentlemen are entitled to enjoy by reason of thus being upon the salary list at $1 per annum? What is the reason why they are thus seeking official position, when as a matter of fact they are in the employment of some private individual?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator was here when I read, in the case of the Chicago University, where Prof. Judd of that university is named in the report as getting $1 per annum from the Government and $6,000 a year from the university, and some of his work has had the benefit of the franking privilege. That is one case that is reported to me as having had the benefit of the franking privilege. Not only that, but he is using the franking privilege to answer other educators, and getting his literature distributed at the cost of the Government, while the private individuals can not do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. And they are printing their own documents.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are printing at Government expense the document of Prof. Judd in reply to a communication or an article written by Dr. Eliot. Now, whether we agree with Dr. Eliot or not is aside from this question; but here is a president of a university using the franking privilege under authority of the Bureau of Education, to circulate his views all over the country at the expense of the Government, while Dr. Eliot, I assume, is compelled to do it at his own expense, if he is sufficiently interested in getting his views before the public.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is there not something still further—that in using the frank and sending the document through the country under the franking privilege, it carries, to a certain extent in the public mind at least, the indorsement by the Government of these peculiar or particular views?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It goes out as though it were actually an authoritative publication of the views of the Government. It is issued under the authority of the Government, apparently, as expressing the views of the Government officials themselves.

Mr. President, these institutions are like Providence. They "move in a mysterious way their wonders to perform." Now, I am going to call your attention to another activity along these same lines, to show you that they are moving with military precision all along the line, to get control of the education of the children of the land. I venture to say that if you put the educational system of this country in the hands of any particular class of individuals, in two generations they can practically change the form of our Government by educating the children along certain lines which the ideal of democracy would oppose, if the people thoroughly understood the situation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In that connection I should like to suggest that the framers of the Constitution apprehended some similar danger when they were so careful to legislate against any law establishing religion, and they followed it up by a statute most carefully excluding church control of the public schools of the country. The cult of Rockefeller, the cult of Carnegie, in the viewpoint which they represent in political economy and in government, is just as much to be guarded against in the educational system of the country as a particular religious sect.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think there is any question about it. I do not think any particular set of individuals, whether it be in industrial life, whether it be in railroad life, or whether it be in religious life, ought to have exclusive control of the education of children.

Mr. President, I confess to some feeling about this thing. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and I graduated from the same institution. It has the historical names of Washington and Lee attached to it. There have been efforts by some individuals, I am informed, to get money for that institution from these sources, and I am entirely opposed to its acceptance. As a matter of fact, I would rather educate my boy in a log schoolhouse built by the taxes imposed upon the people than have him receive an education in a marble palace built and maintained by these people.

Now, let us look at another activity of these distinguished financiers.

Mr. JONES. Before the Senator proceeds to another phase of it, I just want to ask him whether he has ascertained who constitutes the National Kindergarten Association?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am frank to say to the Senator, as I stated a while ago, that I did not have an opportunity to examine this report until the bill under consideration was on the heels of passage. It deserves careful consideration. What has this board got to do with immigration, I may ask?

Mr. JONES. Nothing at all. A large salary is paid by some organization of that kind. It would be very easy, of course, as the Senator suggested a moment ago, to have this foundation represented in organizations of that kind. Here is another organization, the National Kindergarten Association, and then the International Kindergarten Union. Their names are very similar. I should like to know whether any Senator here knows what these organizations are and how they are maintained and where they get their funds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the reason why I suggested there ought to be an investigation of the bureau, and I hope in considering it we may do it from a nonpartisan viewpoint, because I feel that there is no politics in it. It may be all right, but it does not look right to me. Now, they commence to take charge of kindergarten schools where little children go to kindergarten so that their mothers or fathers may work during a part of the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand that the effect of the Senator's amendment would be to abolish altogether this scheme of collaboration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It abolishes the expenditure of the Government appropriation in connection with appropriations coming from any of these foundations or from any other source than a public source like a State, county, or municipality.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I understand it would take off the roll of this bureau the names of all the people who are now listed at a dollar per annum?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That might be the effect of the amendment, and I think that would not be an unmixed evil.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know whether it would be or not. I am trying to ascertain, because the matter is entirely new to me.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I wish to state that it does not cut off the State officials, as I understand the amendment.

Mr. WORKS. That is just what I wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to—that it did not do that thing and I think it should. But I will pass that for the present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to pass up the question of getting the amendment in proper shape. I am frank to say I made it just as sweeping as I knew how.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator who was responsible for this scheme of collaboration at the beginning?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know. Insidious influences have got not only into the educational life of the United States, but it did get into the Agricultural Department, and I do not know how many other departments it has gotten into.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was, I suppose, inaugurated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator mean Secretary Lane?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whoever it was.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It started long ago. If you are going to make politics out of it, Mr. Claxton, I think, is a Republican, and was appointed under a former administration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is altogether too suspicious. I had not any thought of politics about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope not. It must have gotten in under some Secretary of the Interior, because the bureau comes under him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It came in under the Department of the Interior?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With the sanction of whoever happened to be Secretary at that time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He must have thought at the time it would serve some wise purpose.

Mr. LANE. Not necessarily so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not necessarily, but presumptively so; because I think most of our officials may be given credit for honesty of purpose. I should dislike very much to think that any other presumption ought to obtain.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will permit me, my recollection is that it started with the Department of Agriculture. I recollect some amendment which was introduced here on the Agricultural appropriation bill to stop the agents.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, I agree perfectly that we ought not to have in our public educational matters the predominating influence of private interests. The education of our children ought to be conducted under governmental and public auspices. I agree to that perfectly. But it seems to me that the Senator's amendment is too sweeping, if it destroys this scheme of collaboration altogether, because I can very well see that the influences in many respects might be for good.

Here are in this list over a hundred, somebody, I think, said 150, and on looking over it hastily I should say that the connection of a very large majority of the persons named in the Bureau of Education of the Government would be helpful.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to concede that. I am in accord with the Senator, but we do not know what these influences are or just where this money comes from, except on the surface. I will say to the Senator that some men are on it who are directly connected with the Carnegie Foundation and its boards.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, let those men be gotten rid of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It will take an investigation to find out the ramifications of these different agencies. For that reason my purpose was to restrict the whole business until that could be done. If these agencies are really what the Senator thinks they are, of benefit—and I agree to that in many cases—why can not the Government pay for them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Government should pay for them. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My purpose, I will say to the Senator frankly, was to stop the whole business, and then if any of these agencies are valuable—and I do not want anybody to infer that I am charging all these colleges with fraud and unfair dealing, but I do know that some of these people are tied up with these foundations and they ought not to have anything to do with the education of our youth in connection with the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A large majority of them are not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I feel reasonably sure about it. I would not vote upon the theory that they are tied up. Here are various State institutions—the Universities of Virginia and Kansas, the University of my State, the University of Montana, and the universities of these other States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One of the gentlemen connected with the University of Virginia is on one of the Carnegie boards. You do not know what the connections are unless you go to work and investigate it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would it not be better, before we undertake to deal with a question of this importance, to have an investigation and see what the facts are?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think a thorough investigation ought to come later. I will tell the Senator one of the reasons which actuates me, and this has come to me as the result of inquiring into this matter. It comes as a suggestion from Mr. Allen, the director of the Institute of Public Service in New York. I was not authorized by him to print his letter, but I am going to do it, at the possible risk of offense. It was not marked confidential and the public are vitally interested in it. In his letter to me he said:

> Apropos foundation influence you probably noticed that the General Education Board has appropriated funds for a test at and by the Teachers College of the Rockefeller board's idea of a "modern school." Will you consider the innumerable ways in which this venture with foundation funds is bound to affect educational standards?
> Teachers College—

That is the name of the institution—

> Teachers College is part of Columbia University. Yet this experiment is to be directed by a professor from the University of Chicago. On the board of trustees are to be several (four) foundation representatives, including an employee of the General Education Board, a paid employee, and one of its council.
>
> Teachers College is part of Columbia; Columbia wants more money.

That is the way with a lot of these institutions.

> Neither Columbia nor Teachers College is free to analyze impartially the proposal which it itself is conducting, even if it felt free to criticize a work of the Rockefeller Foundation. The power of life and death almost is held over school men of the country by the Teachers College and Columbia University. It is practically impossible to get anyone to criticize in the open a venture which starts there.
> People who want money from the various Rockefeller foundations consider that the line of quickest access and least resistance is that of applause; so we find overnight a world blindly applauding what many of them disapprove in the hope that their partisanship will find foundation support. Even this is done in a way where, if it fails, it will not be conclusive and the foundations themselves will be "out from under." The blunder can be laid at the door of the Teachers College.
> If Congress should pass a law making it impossible for foundations to subsidize other foundations, colleges, charitable agencies, etc., thus compelling foundations to walk in the open and assume responsibility for their own spending, there would be a different initial line up on a proposal like this and an attitude of impartial analysis during the experiment.

That is the reason why I put in the amendment a requirement that whenever these gifts are to be made to the Government of the United States by these institutions or others they must be accepted by an act of Congress. If a proposition came here to present the Government with $100,000 or $100,000,000, if it was all right the Congress of the United States would pass an act authorizing its acceptance. It has been done in the case of grants of land to the Government of the United States for military and other purposes where it was free from any question of fraud.

Mr. President, that is all I want. I am perfectly willing to have an investigation, but I want to have this thing stopped until an investigation can be had.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to this: In the Agricultural appropriation act of 1915 this question was discussed on an amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and the Senate concluded to stop the activities of these people. Then there came back from the Department of Agriculture substantially the same sort of report that now comes to us from the Bureau of Education, and after a consideration of the subject this proviso was added to the Agricultural appropriation act that year:

> Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

That amendment in its present form was not made by the Senator from Iowa. It goes too far. I think it has had the effect, however, of cutting out the activities of these people in the Agricultural Department; but it went too far, because these institutions do not deal in the open. They do it underground and through agencies it is hard to uncover. Just exactly as I said, some of the men on this roll are connected with prominent universities of the country. They are also on the Carnegie board or connected with it in some way and drawing pay.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Oregon has taken up this subject. I have been informed on authority, which I will gladly produce on an investigation of the whole relationship of the Rockefeller Foundation to the Government, which ought to be made, that there are certain colleges in this country that have sought endowments, and the agent of the Rockefeller Foundation or the educational board had gone out and examined the curriculum of these colleges and compelled certain changes to be made in the studies and in the curriculum.

It seems to me that it is one of the most dangerous things that can go on in a Republic to have an institution of this power apparently trying to shape and mold the thought of the young people of the country. The same question arose in the Agricultural appropriation bill. The agricultural colleges then seemed in certain States to be coming under the influence of this organization, and professors who did not teach along the line that they might decree had in some instances been compelled to give up their positions.

I know that great good has been done, of course, along agricultural lines by the Rockefeller Foundation agency in cooperation with the Government, but there is an insidious influence in this thing, there is an unconscious influence all the time in the method by which this work is being carried on, and there ought to be an investigation of the whole subject. Until that time I agree with the Senator from Oregon that it ought to stop. Let us have an investigation of the relationship and work of the Rockefeller Foundation with respect to the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Right along the line the Senator has just stated, I do not recall exactly the circumstances, but they had put down the rating of Washington and Lee University, for instance, a number of years ago, because it was not in the particular class that some of these people connected with the foundation preferred, and I registered a protest with Mr. Claxton. In other words, they can prefer certain of these institutions, giving them a standing before the country, whenever they feel disposed to do so, and can give a college a black eye by simply placing it in a lower category than some of the others.

I think I have said all I care to say about this. I frankly state my purpose is to put this thing entirely out of business, and then it can be investigated, and when we determine what the conditions are we can change it to suit the conditions.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Not having heard of this propaganda before, I am entirely unfamiliar with it. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he is familiar with any of the literature that is being circulated?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have glanced over it occasionally, but not for this purpose. As the Senator can see, I have had only two or three days to look into it, and I have not had an opportunity to get it together.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask whether or not, in obedience to the command or request or plea of any of these boards or organizations, of whatever character they may be, any textbooks have been introduced into any of the colleges as a result of their work?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not prepared to answer the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. In other words, I am trying to find out how far they have carried their work in the various colleges and what the result has been.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That would be involved in an investigation of the whole subject.

Mr. WATSON. I did not know but the Senator had investigated it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I have not.

Mr. President, I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks the resolution calling upon the Bureau of Education for information and the report thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, such will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 684, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.]

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION AND CARNEGIE FOUNDATION.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 18, 1917.

SIR: In accordance with Senate resolution 307, adopted by the Senate on January 4 (calendar day, January 5), 1917—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested and directed to furnish to the Senate the following information: The relation, if any, of the organizations known as the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Foundation, or any other private or corporate enterprise to the work of the Bureau of Education; a statement showing the names and positions of all employees, if any, of the Bureau of Education whose salaries are paid in whole or in part from funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Foundation, or from any other private or corporate funds or from funds derived from any source other than the Government of the United States; the names and positions of all administrative or other officers, if any, of the Bureau of Education who are in any way connected with the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Foundation, or any other private or corporate enterprise, and the salaries, if any, received by them from the said Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Foundation, or any other private or corporate or other source than the Government of the United States"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith the accompanying statement from the Commissioner of Education, which contains all of the data at hand in this department at the present time.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, January 13, 1917.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In reply to Senate resolution 307, adopted January 4 (calendar day, January 5), 1917, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

There is no relation whatsoever of the organizations known as the General Education Board, the Rockefeller Foundation, and the Carnegie Foundation to the work of the Bureau of Education. The Bureau of Education has entered into cooperative relations with the Phelps-Stokes Fund, New York City, for the purpose of making a study of negro education in the United States; with the National Kindergarten Association, New York City, and the International Kindergarten Union for the purpose of investigating and promoting kindergarten education; with the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations for the purpose of promoting education in the home; and with the Committee for Immigrants in America for the purpose of investigating and promoting the education of adult immigrants in the United States. No funds whatsoever are contributed to the Bureau of Education directly by any of the organizations above mentioned. The organizations with which cooperative arrangements have been made are now providing for the Bureau of Education the services of certain employees whose salaries, however, are paid directly to such persons by the several organizations. The persons whose services are thus furnished the Bureau of Education are under the direct supervision and control of the Commissioner of Education and do such work as is outlined for them by the commissioner.

There have been appointed also from time to time a considerable number of special collaborators throughout the United States who are employed in universities, colleges, and normal schools or who hold other educational positions, such as county superintendent of schools, etc. These persons perform only occasional service for the Bureau of Education, and no cooperative arrangements have been entered into by the institutions or other corporate bodies by which they are regularly employed.

The names of the persons employed by the Bureau of Education under the above-mentioned arrangements are appended hereto in two lists. The first list comprises the persons who have their headquarters in the Bureau of Education at Washington, and who devote practically all of their time to the work of this bureau. The one exception in this list is Dr. Willard S. Small, principal of the Eastern High School, Washington, D. C., who has a desk in the Bureau of Education, but gives to the work of the bureau only such time as can be spared from his regular duties. The second list includes the names of special collaborators employed by the Bureau of Education, who render only very occasional service to the bureau.

Cordially, yours,

P. P. CLAXTON, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. WORKS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that, in my judgment, he is not going to accomplish by this amendment all he desires to accomplish. I wish to suggest that the following be added to it at the appropriate place:

Nor shall any person, paid in whole or in part by any such corporation or individual for services rendered by him, be employed by the Government or become or remain an officer or employee of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to have that inserted.

Mr. WORKS. That phase of it, I think, is not covered by the amendment. It simply provides that the Board of Education shall not accept money from these outside sources, and it does not prevent the employment of people who may be paid wholly by the Rockefeller Foundation as some of the institutions of that sort are. I think the Government ought to be kept separate and apart entirely from any outside influence in the matter of education. I think it is a very dangerous thing to allow any of these private institutions to interfere or become influential in the educational work of the Government.

Since I came into the Senate there was a bill introduced providing for the incorporation of the Rockefeller Foundation, a new corporation, for educational purposes. Perhaps it has gone out of the mind of Senators. It was never discussed here except that in a speech I made myself I referred to its provisions, but it actually passed the House of Representatives. Let me call the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions that are contained in that proposed legislation. One of the sections is as follows:

That for the promotion of such objects the said corporation shall have power to establish, maintain, and endow, or to aid others, whether individuals, associations, or corporations, to establish, maintain, and endow institutions and other agencies for carrying on said objects, and any of them; to purchase, hold, sell, and convey real estate necessary for the said corporate objects, and to erect, improve, enlarge, and equip buildings or other structures necessary or convenient for said objects, or any of them, and to acquire, make, and furnish all necessary or convenient apparatus and other accessories; to employ and aid others to employ teachers, lecturers, assistants, and agents; to donate to any individual, association, or corporation engaged in similar work, money or property, real or personal, which shall at any time be held by the said corporation hereby constituted, subject to the terms of any gift, grant, bequest, or devise by which the said corporation shall have received the same.

And again it was provided—

That the total amount of property held at any one time, including that which is held absolutely as well as that which is held in trust, shall not exceed the value of $100,000,000, exclusive of increases in the value of property subsequent to its receipt by said corporation.

The bill was so broad in its terms that it provided a corporation that might enter into and control almost every educational institution of the country. It might aid in the employment of teachers, the payment of them, supplying the apparatus necessary to carry on the educational work, and at the time I undertook to say something about the bill before it reached the Senate in discussing another question. It never was taken up in the Senate. But it simply shows the tendency on the part of these people who are attempting to get control of the whole educational work of this country. I think it is a very dangerous tendency.

It is for that reason that I have suggested to the Senator from Oregon that there had better be a provision here preventing the employment by the Government of any people who are under the pay of any of these institutions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator indicate where it ought to go in and I will be very glad to accept the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. While the Senator from California is looking into this matter I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon for information whether it is the fact that any employee of the Bureau of Education is at liberty to prepare any kind of a pamphlet he sees fit and have it printed and circulated under frank. Is there any law which authorizes such a privilege?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know of any law that would authorize these people as agents here to use the franking privilege, but suppose one of them did?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no law to authorize it; but here comes a document from one of the agencies here. Here is the instance I gave a while ago, cited by Mr. Allen, who has had some experience in investigating these subjects. He says:

The franking privilege is given to a number of agencies or individuals, as, for example, Prof. Judd, of the University of Chicago, ostensibly to conduct an investigation for the United States Bureau of Education.

Suppose Mr. Claxton says: "I want you, Mr. Judd, to investigate a certain particular governmental function"—on immigration or anything that he may want to have investigated. He investigates it as an agent of the Government and Mr. Claxton puts it in——

Mr. WALSH. It then becomes a Government publication, and is issued and forwarded by the Bureau of Education.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; but it is the propaganda of an individual—of Mr. Judd.

Mr. OVERMAN. Some man wants to get his view promulgated, and at $1 a year he is employed to do it.

While I am on my feet I want to say that I spoke of the professor of a university and I inquired whether he was not getting three salaries—one from the foundation, one from the State, and one from the Government. I find that is not true, that he is getting a salary of $2,500 as professor at the university, and the Government then is putting him on the roll at $1 for some purpose. In almost all the colleges and universities of the country there is a roll, and they are getting $1.

I think the Senator from Oregon is doing a very valuable service to the country. I am sorry he did not bring this matter before our committee so that we could investigate it. We knew nothing in the world about it. I am going to accept the amendment; I shall not object to it, so that the conferees can investigate this matter and have Prof. Claxton before us and explain it. Then it will be in conference and we ought to take such action in conference as is proper. I am glad that the Senator brought it to our attention so that we can take some action. We will investigate it thoroughly if we have the time, and I expect the House conferees to agree with us to do it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this is so plain a proposition, to my mind, that it does not seem to call for additional investigation. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon the insertion of what I have already indicated after the word "same" and just before the penal clause in his amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfecly satisfied to accept that and make it a part of my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the word "same," just preceding the penalty clause, the following words:

Nor shall any person paid in whole or in part by any such corporation or individual for services rendered by him be employed by the Government or become or remain an officer or employee of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has made certain amendments to the bill, two of which have been reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. HUSTING. I reserve the right to offer an amendment to section 7.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that section 7 has been reserved for a separate vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole save those which have been reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The following amendment was reserved for a separate vote, and it will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] reserved for a separate vote the amendment on page 51, lines 6 and 7, after the words "draftsman $1,500," insert "private secretary for captain commandant, $1,400."

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that was reserved for a point of order to be made on it, and according to a ruling of the Chair yesterday it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Pending a disposition of that, I desire to inquire of the Chair whether House bill 408 was laid before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was laid down and temporarily laid aside. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] reserved a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment on page 117, beginning in line 6, and ending in line 18.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment to that amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 117, line 18, after the word "department," it is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

The office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a nonpolitical office, and shall be within the classified civil service, and appointments thereto shall be made in accordance with the civil-service rules and, so far as practicable, by promotion, or transfer, upon merit, without regard to politics, from the employees of the Post Office Department, subject to the permanent civil-service regulations and requirements.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that amendment is in accordance with the recommendation of the Postmaster General, which is found on page 40 of his annual report for 1916. The Postmaster General there states:

The classifying of the position of postmaster of the fourth class has proven so satisfactory that there is every service reason why the classified service should be extended to include the position of postmaster at offices of the first, second, and third classes, and that legislation looking to that end is recommended on page 54 of this report.

He there sets out a draft of legislation containing in substance the amendment which I have offered.

Some time ago I had the matter investigated by the expert of the Bureau of Efficiency as to its effect upon the service, and it was estimated by him and by officials of the Post Office Department, that if the same principles of merit and efficiency were applied to the selection of postmasters and determining their qualifications, as applied in the classified civil service of the Post Office Department, it would not only improve the service, it would not only tend toward a better conduct of the business of the various post offices, but that it would save directly between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 a year.

During the discussion of an amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], in charge of the bill, the other day, for an examination as to the duplication of work in the various bureaus and departments of the Government, he stated his desire to save $30,000,000, and so it occurred to me that an amendment upon this section of the bill, in line with the transfer there authorized, to save the small sum of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year would be very appropriate.

Of course, Mr. President, it would make some political difference in the conduct of the administration and of the changing administrations from term to term; but I imagine that it would be a great relief to the President of the United States. I know it would be a great relief to the Members of the House of Representatives, speaking of them not as Members of the House, however, officially, but as individual referees, to whom, under the custom of political patronage, is referred the selection of postmasters in their several districts. I know that it is frequently regarded as a political asset, though it is really a political liability. It is of no advantage politically or governmentally to any Member of Congress in either branch of Congress to have the duty and the power, if we choose to call it so, of selecting postmasters.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will accept the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print, in connection with my remarks upon the amendment I offered affecting postmasters, a portion of a message of President Taft of February 26, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REDUCTIONS BY ELIMINATION OF SINECURES.

With respect to the first class, I have already submitted recommendations to Congress in several messages transmitting reports in which it is estimated that the direct salary cost of the Government may be reduced not less than $4,500,000 a year—this to be done by placing a large proportion of presidential appointments in the classified service. The salaries of postmasters of the first and second classes amount to over $6,000,000, while the salaries of assistant postmasters of the same classes amount to $2,820,000. If the position of postmaster were placed in the classified service, and these officers were given salaries equal to 20 per cent more than the salaries now given to assistant postmasters, the latter positions being no longer required, there would be a saving of $4,512,000. Besides this direct reduction that might be immediately made in the estimates, there would also be very large indirect reductions of cost that might be availed of in future estimates—reductions that can not be realized so long as appointments are on a partisan basis. These unnecessary indirect costs are due to the fact that a considerable part of the services outside of Washington can not be properly brought within the discipline of administrative officers. So long as high salaried local officers owe their appointments to local influence it may be assumed that their tenures will be fairly secure, regardless of their efficiency. This is discouraging to those in equally responsible positions who are rendering efficient service, but who, by reason of the nonpartisan character of the appointment, receive not more than half the amount of salary; it tends to destroy the esprit de corps, especially with subordinates; it carries with it expenditures that in many instances are unwisely made. Altogether, in the opinion of those who are best acquainted with the service, the indirect saving to the Government amounts to more than the direct saving indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to; and without objection, the amendment made in Committee of the Whole as amended is concurred in.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think section 7 of the bill is the only remaining one which has been reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 7 has been reserved.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum, if we have reached section 7.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely want a vote; I do not desire any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Overman	Smoot
Bankhead	Hughes	Page	Sterling
Beckham	Husting	Pittman	Sutherland
Borah	James	Poindexter	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Thompson
Catron	Jones	Ransdell	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Clapp	Lane	Shafroth	Warren
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Watson
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Weeks
Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Works
du Pont	Norris	Smith, Md.
Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the amendments to section 7 as made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The question arises in this way: I understand that those who are in favor of the so-called Smoot amendment will vote "yea" and those who are opposed to it will vote "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the vote taken as it was taken originally. I move to strike out section 7 as amended, and get the vote in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from North Carolina move to strike out section 7?

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to strike out section 7.

Mr. SMOOT. As amended?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the original section, and then the vote to strike out will be "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think the question would be upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. What I suggest will amount to the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know; but the parliamentary situation is as I have stated it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not see how the Chair could change the rule of the Senate in putting the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, as I understand the Chair, the vote will be as to whether or not we shall strike out the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the reserved question for a vote in the Senate was whether or not the Senate would concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, as the Chair understands, to change the House text, and not to strike it out. If the Senate should refuse to concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, then the vote would come on striking out the original paragraph.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Smoot amendment has not been reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. OVERMAN. The question is whether or not the Senate will agree to section 7 as amended by the Smoot amendment, the committee having brought a report here to strike out the whole section. So if the Senate refuses to strike out the whole section, the Smoot amendment will remain in the bill. If the Senate agrees to strike it out, that strikes out the whole section. The question is whether or not the Senate will strike it out. The Smoot amendment is already agreed to; no Senator reserved it for a separate vote; but the question was reserved on striking out section 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] reserved it for a separate vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. No Senator reserved the Smoot amendment for a separate vote, and the question is whether or not we shall strike out section 7 as the committee reported it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not change his ruling, which was that nothing can occur in Committee of the Whole beyond reserving for a separate vote in the Senate whatever may have happened to be the vote in the Committee of the Whole. It happens to have been that the vote in the Committee of the Whole was on what is known as the Smoot amendment, which takes the place of the committee's suggestion, and that must be first voted on. If it is not concurred in in the Senate, then the vote recurs on the committee amendment to strike out the original text.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But suppose it is concurred in?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senate will have agreed to just what the Committee of the Whole agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But even after the Smoot amendment was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, the question then arose on the committee amendment, which struck out the entire section as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, Mr. President, if the Chair rules that it did not, I think I will have to appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I say that was the action taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows what took place, because the Chair was here. The Chair knows that the Senator from Utah submitted an amendment to the House text. That amendment was agreed to. Thereupon the Chair ruled that the question had to be put on the committee amendment to strike out. It was put and lost. So that the only thing that was reserved as in Committee of the Whole was what is known as the Smoot amendment. That was the only thing reserved for a vote in the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not reserve the Smoot amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] reserved it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I reserved the amendment of the committee striking out section 7. Of course if the Senator from Wisconsin reserved the other amendment, that is different; but I did not know that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not say that the Senator from North Carolina had reserved that amendment. This is clearly the parliamentary situation: The vote comes first on concurring in the Smoot amendment. If that is carried, that is the end of it; but if it is lost, then the vote recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, after it is concurred in and becomes a part of the House text, then surely we have the right in the Senate to vote upon the proposition to strike out the House text as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the Chair has stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the very thing I reserved—the amendment to strike out the original House provision. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted the Smoot amendment to the original text, and, the original text having been amended, then the question recurred upon the committee amendment to strike out section 7. If section 7 is stricken out in the Senate, then there is no need to vote on the Smoot amendment; but if it is not stricken out and the Smoot amendment was reserved we would have to vote on that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be entirely wrong, and the question can easily be settled by an appeal, but the Chair rules that the vote is on concurring in the amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole, which was the substitution of what is known as the Smoot amendment for the original House text. If the Chair is wrong about that, it is easy for the Senate to settle it. The Chair has no pride of opinion about the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Chair does not rule that we shall be deprived of an opportunity to vote on the committee amendment striking out section 7?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what section 7 does the Senator from North Carolina refer?

Mr. OVERMAN. The last section of the bill, which the committee reported an amendment to strike out. That is what we have been talking about for almost a week.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But what does the Senator from North Carolina mean—the House provision?

Mr. OVERMAN. I mean that section 7 came here from the House. If the Chair will examine the bill, he will see the lines stricken through the section. The committee recommended that that section be stricken from the bill. Before a vote was taken on that the Senator from Utah offered to amend the House text, and the House text was amended. Now, the amendment to strike out the whole section is still here.

Mr. SMOOT. That was disagreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was disagreed to, but I have reserved it for a separate vote in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator reserved it for a separate vote in the Senate, he is entitled to a vote; but the first vote comes on concurring in the Smoot amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all right. I understood the Chair to say that when the Smoot amendment was acted upon, that would be the end of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What the Chair was trying to make clear was that it is the Smoot amendment we are about to vote upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. WEEKS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. On yesterday I offered an additional section, against which a point of order was made, and I reserved the right to offer it as an amendment to the Smoot amendment if that were concurred in. If the procedure is followed in accordance with the decision which the Chair has just made, will the amendment which I desire to offer to the Smoot amendment be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the custom which has prevailed since the present occupant of the Chair has been here, at this point it would be proper to offer an amendment to the Smoot amendment. It can be offered now.

Mr. WEEKS. If I do not see fit to offer it now, will it be in order to offer it after action has been taken on the Smoot amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not answer that, because the Chair does not know the language of the amendment; but when the Smoot amendment has been once agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and then concurred in in the Senate, without a reconsideration of the vote whereby it was concurred in, the Chair is afraid the Senator's amendment would not be in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that if it is offered after the Smoot amendment is voted on I shall object.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think that the objection will stand; but I will take my chance on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be no doubt about what the ruling of the Chair is. So that no Senator may fall into a misapprehension, the Chair believes that if it is an amendment to the Smoot amendment it must be offered now, and that it can not be offered hereafter as an amendment to the Smoot amendment without a reconsideration of the vote whereby the Smoot amendment may be concurred in; but it may be offered as a separate amendment to the bill in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment to section 7 agreed to as in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it will not be necessary to have a yea-and-nay vote on that. I merely want a vote on the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. If that be so, I will withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not want a yea-and-nay vote on the Smoot amendment.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I had thought of offering an amendment to the Smoot amendment, but upon reflection I think perhaps that the matter that I wished to suggest can be taken care of better in conference than upon the floor of the Senate. I had in mind suggesting an increase of 20 per cent to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $500 or less, 10 per cent to those who receive salaries of more than $500 and not exceeding $900, and 5 per cent to those receiving salaries between $900 and $1,800. I know that such an amendment would involve a great deal of discussion, and I have no disposition to delay materially the vote upon this bill. I desire to say a few words, however, to indicate why I think the Smoot amendment, at least, should be adopted.

The only fault I find with that amendment is that it does not go far enough. I am aware that I am not entirely in harmony with most of my colleagues on this side; but I can not adopt their reasoning upon this matter. I do not think it is fair to say that because we are living beyond our means therefore our hired help should suffer. I do not think that we are any more justified in denying proper advancement and compensation to Government employees, if such is deserved and needed, than a householder would be justified in refusing to compensate his hired girl because his family was living beyond his income. There have been measures before the Senate and before the other branch of Congress in connection with which millions and millions of dollars could have been saved, and we would not have been obliged to enter the plea that we could not afford to pay our help what they are entitled to receive.

It is said, among other things, that a horizontal raise is unscientific. Well, I do not think it is any more unscientific than the original method of fixing compensation by classes. If we originally fixed a class that would receive a compensation of $500, another of $700, another of $900, another of $1,200, another of $1,400, and so on, why can we not horizontally raise the grades for the same reason that we originally fixed them? Not only that, but the manufacturing industries controlled and directed by men who know business, who are supposed to be and probably are the best business men we have in the country, have given their employees a horizontal raise. All the manufacturing establishments that have raised the wages or salaries of their employees have raised these wages or salaries horizontally 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, or 20 per cent; so that we are not out of harmony with the general practice, even in private business, in raising wages horizontally.

The plea that we can not afford to pay employees adequate wages does not come with good grace from a Government that can afford to pay its employees what they are worth. It is said that if you grant a horizontal increase you are giving some a raise who do not deserve it. I presume that all those receiving a thousand dollars a year in compensation do not give the same equivalent for their wage; yet as long as they are in the thousand-dollar class they are treated as though they gave the same equivalent. So if the compensation for the class is raised, even though there are some undeserving ones in the class, we would only be doing what we are already doing now in paying some more than they deserve who are in a certain class.

And why should we hesitate to give a raise to 90 per cent of the employees simply because 10 per cent might undeservedly get the raise? I do not think it is equity—to say that we must keep 90 per cent down because 10 per cent ought not to go up. I think we should give those who deserve it this raise, eliminate the others or put then in a lower class if we do not think they are earning the increased salary. Therefore I do not think that the argument that we should not raise the salaries of employees because a few are undeserving is sound.

Some make the plea that this Government should refuse to pay proper wages to its employees because we have already appropriated too much money. What does this mean? It is conceded that wages are too low. Anybody who lives in Washington knows that a thousand dollars a year does not go very far here. I had not been here very long until I discovered that. I am sure older Senators, who have been here considerably longer than I have, know how far they would get, or how far anyone can get, with a thousand dollars a year in the city of Washington. This is not the cheapest place in the world to live in, as I think everybody will acknowledge who has lived here for any length of time; and yet we have here people who are only getting three, four, or five hundred dollars a year, some who are drawing only six or seven hundred dollars a year—not enough to pay one month's rent for a house of any consequence. You can not rent a house of any consequence here in Washington for less than $200 or $250 a month, and the amount of rent ranges all the way up to a thousand dollars a month. So money is needed. It is needed just as badly by the employees of the United States as it is needed by the employees of great corporations throughout the country.

The employees need this increase, and they deserve it. They deserve to get a living wage. Shall the United States Government say that it knows these employees deserve this increase, that it knows they need it, but that the country can not afford to pay them? That would mean that we are withholding from a class of employees money to which they are entitled and which they deserve in order that we may put it into some other enterprise. In other words, we are saddling part of the burden of the Government upon those lower classes, and asking that they shall be deprived of a raise in their wages in order that we may spend the money to which they are justly entitled for other governmental purposes. In other words, we want to saddle the burdens of government upon our employees. I do not think that is generous, and I do not think that it is just.

This country is rich enough to pay its employees what they deserve. If we want economy, let us not economize at the bottom; let us economize at the top. There are bills coming in here for river and harbor improvements, for flood control, and other things of that kind that will carry appropriations running up into the hundreds of millions of dollars in the final analysis. Let us cut off a few millions from these bills if we are going to adopt them, or let us postpone these matters a few years if we do not want to abandon them, and let us pay the employees of the Government that which they are entitled to. Let us not appropriate all the money that we can, to the last dollar that we shall be able to raise here in this country, and then at the last moment say to our employees: "We have spent all the money we have, and therefore you will have to stand for it. This burden will have to rest on you alone."

I do not think the great Democratic Party ought to put itself in this attitude of withholding from the masses of the people a just wage. How can we, with consistency, call upon the great manufacturing establishments and transportation lines of this country to treat their employees justly, when we, by a poor and bad example, go the other way? Can we say with consistency to the railroads and the manufacturing establishments: "Here, you must not work your men more than eight hours a day; you must pay them a living wage, a minimum wage," when at the same time we are so preaching, we are practicing the other thing? If we deny a raise to these employees instead of going before the country with a good example, we can only go before the people with a good precept and a bad example.

The Democratic Party, especially, has been the champion of the working classes. I hope to see it continue to be such; but let it start at home. Let us treat these men and women justly who are working for the Government. Let us not talk about the flag, and tell them to love the flag, and love their country, when the country over which this flag flies treats them so niggardly. You can not get them to love a country if it does not show some love for them; and I say this Government, in dealing with its own employees, should set an example to the country of how employees should be treated, so that precept and example and practice will go hand in hand.

I hope sincerely that not only the Smoot amendment will be retained in this bill and be adopted but that the conferees of the House will insist upon the raise provided for in the House bill, so that the raise of wages will cover all those classes mentioned in the House bill. It is only just and fair, and I sincerely hope that the Senate will come to see the matter in this light.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the question recurs on the committee amendment to strike out, reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). As I have already stated, I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In his absence, I will withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. He is not in the Chamber, and I must therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay"; and I understand that if the Senator from Florida were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ashurst	Hughes	Randsdell	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	James	Reed	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Lewis	Saulsbury	Thomas
Bryan	Myers	Shafroth	Tillman
Culberson	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hardwick	Overman	Shields	Walsh

NAYS—33.

Borah	Clapp	Husting	Lodge
Brady	Cummins	Kenyon	McCumber
Broussard	Curtis	Lane	Martine, N. J.
Catron	du Pont	Lee, Md.	Nelson
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Lippitt	Norris

Oliver	Pomerene	Thompson	Works

Fernald	Jones	Phelan	Underwood
Fletcher	Kern	Robinson	Wadsworth
Goff	Kirby	Simmons	Williams
Gore	La Follette	Smith, Ariz.

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after section 7, the following:

Provided, That from the date of the approval of this act and during the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the increase of pay provided for in this section shall apply and be paid to the employees to whom the said section refers. The appropriation for this purpose shall be immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to make the same point of order that was made and sustained to this amendment when it was offered in Committee of the Whole. No estimate has been made for it; it adds a new item of appropriation; and it is an increase of an appropriation already made.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the proposition as it came from the House was general legislation. The point of order had been made against it in the House, and I understand it had stood. The proposition offered by the Senator from Utah, which has been adopted——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether he offers this as a separate amendment, or as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WEEKS. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment that has just been adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I must make the additional point of order that the right to do so was not reserved in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator is mistaken about that; I did reserve in Committee of the Whole the right to offer it in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled on that proposition—that if it was an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, the point of order would be sustained by the Chair. If it is offered as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, the point of order is now sustained.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, just one observation. I did not offer the amendment to the Smoot amendment before the vote which was just taken, because I did not care to take the responsibility of jeopardizing that amendment, which I think is extremely important to the people who are to be benefited by the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Utah. I think as a result my amendment is now in a hopeless parliamentary situation, which I greatly regret. I can not understand Senators who are willing to vote, as the majority did vote in this Chamber last fall, to increase the pay of men who are receiving twelve, fourteen, and sixteen hundred dollars a year and yet are willing in times like these, when these people must be suffering, to refuse to raise their pay to take care of the conditions as they exist to-day.

This failure to do so, it seems to me, is a reflection upon the humanity of the Senate. We must know, every Senator must know, that these people are underpaid, or at least many of them are. What kind of citizens can we have or expect to have who are paid only $480 under the living conditions of to-day? These are starvation wages; and the talk so frequently indulged in here about friendship for the laboring man is all leather and prunella when we refuse to raise the pay of people who are receiving starvation wages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a motion?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 18453.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he ask unanimous consent to again temporarily lay aside the unfinished business and take up the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is out of the Chamber.

Mr. ASHURST. I make that request, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has asked unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 7, after the words "Indian lands," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$105,000," and in line 17, after the date "nineteen hundred and fourteen," to insert "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate and report to Congress his conclusions on the merits of the claim of the Indians of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon to additional land arising from alleged erroneous surveys of the north and west boundaries of their reservation as defined in the treaty concluded June 25, 1855 (12 Stat. L., 963). For the purpose of conducting this investigation the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such surveys or resurveys as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act," so as to make the clause read:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey or allotment of Indian lands, $105,000, to be repaid proportionally out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes and to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, or allotment of any land in severalty on the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona, who was not residing upon the public domain prior to June 30, 1914: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, etc., on page 3, line 18, after the date "1910," to strike out "$235,000" and insert "$240,300," so as to read:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, or loss of water rights, including expenses of necessary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects and power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, $240,300, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, etc., on page 4, line 7, after the words "in all," to strike out "$244,700" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress; for pay of one chief inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $4,000; one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; for traveling and incidental expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters, $3,200; in all, $250,000.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill why the appropriation of $244,700 was increased by the committee to $250,000?

Mr. ASHURST. The increase is $5,300. The Committee on Indian Affairs believed from the statements made by the commissioner that that sum is adequate and proper and that the House did not appropriate a sufficient sum. It is $50,000 less than the estimate. That is the only statement I have to make.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator of course knows the estimates are always large enough to cover possible contingencies. The fact that the estimate was $300,000 on the face of it of course makes a prima facie case, but I think that the appropriation made by the House for the construction, repair, and maintenance of bridges, reservoirs, and dams is sufficient and the amendment of the committee increasing it to $250,000 is more than enough. I object, therefore, to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for a vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the Senate amendment be not concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after "$150,000," to insert:

Provided, That automobiles or any other vehicles or conveyances used in introducing intoxicants into the Indian country in violation of law, whether used by the owner thereof or other person, shall be subject to the seizure, libel, and forfeiture provided in section 2140 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

So as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $150,000: Provided, That automobiles or any other vehicles or conveyances used in introducing intoxicants into the Indian country in violation of law, whether used by the owner thereof or other person, shall be subject to the seizure, libel, and forfeiture provided in section 2140 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the relief and care of destitute Indians not provided for, etc., on page 4, line 24, after the word "sanatoria," to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$400,000"; so as to read:

For the relief and care of destitute Indians not otherwise provided for, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including transportation of patients to and from hospitals and sanatoria, $400,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this increase of $50,000 is due to an increase in the sick roll among the Indians or the development of conditions which show that in previous years there was not enough money appropriated to take care of them?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the Senator from New York, I will state that the estimate of the department was the sum of $400,000, and that within the past three or four years—I may say within the past six years—a very strenuous effort has been made to relieve the Indians from tuberculosis and trachoma, diseases with which they apparently seem to be peculiarly afflicted. In the judgment of the committee such excellent work has been done and so many of the tribes are being relieved from the ravages of these dread diseases that this seemed to be a most worthy and indeed a necessary appropriation, and we thought the whole sum of $400,000 is necessary. A system of small hospitals, sometimes accommodating 15 or 20 patients, has been constructed throughout various portions of the United States, and that system is meeting with great success, far superior to that met by the large hospitals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the item of appropriation for the relief and care of destitute Indians not provided for, etc., on page 5, line 8, before the word "herein," to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$400,000," and in line 16, after the name "Oklahoma," to strike out "$20,000; Fort Lapwai sanatorium, Idaho, $40,000; Laguna sanatorium, New Mexico, $17,000; Mescalero hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Navajo sanatorium, New Mexico, $10,000; Pima hospital, Arizona, $10,000; Phoenix sanatorium, Arizona, $40,000; Spokane hospital, Washington, $10,000; Sac and Fox sanatorium, Iowa, $30,000; Turtle Mountain hospital, North Dakota, $10,000; Winnebago hospital, Nebraska, $15,000; Crow Creek hospital, South Dakota, $10,000; Hoopa Valley hospital, California, $8,000; Jicarilla hospital, New Mexico, $8,000; Truxton Canyon camp hospital, Arizona, $8,000; Indian Oasis hospital, Arizona, $8,000," and insert "$30,000, $5,000 of which shall be immediately available; Fort Lapwai sanatorium, Idaho, $40,000; Laguna sanatorium, New Mexico, $17,000; Mescalero hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Navajo sanatorium, New Mexico, $10,000; Pima hospital, Arizona, $10,000; Phoenix sanatorium, Arizona, $40,000; Spokane hospital, Washington, $10,000; Sac and Fox sanatorium, Iowa, $30,000; Turtle Mountain hospital, North Dakota, $10,000; Winnebago hospital, Nebraska, $15,000; Crow Creek hospital, South Dakota, $10,000; Hoopa Valley hospital, California, $10,000; Jicarilla hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Truxton Canyon camp hospital, Arizona, $8,000; Indian Oasis hospital, Arizona, $10,000," so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That out of the appropriation of $400,000 herein authorized, there shall be available for the maintenance of the sanatoria and hospitals hereinafter named, and for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, equipment, and improvements, not to exceed the following amounts: Blackfeet hospital, Montana, $10,000; Carson hospital, Nevada, $10,000; Cheyenne and Arapahoe hospital, Oklahoma, $10,000; Choctaw and Chickasaw hospital, Oklahoma, $30,000, $5,000 of which shall be immediately available; Fort Lapwai sanatorium, Idaho, $40,000; Laguna sanatorium, New Mexico, $17,000; Mescalero hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Navajo sanatorium, New Mexico, $10,000; Pima hospital, Arizona, $10,000; Phoenix sanatorium, Arizona, $40,000; Spokane hospital, Washington, $10,000; Sac and Fox sanatorium, Iowa, $30,000; Turtle Mountain hospital, North Dakota, $10,000; Winnebago hospital, Nebraska, $15,000; Crow Creek hospital, South Dakota, $10,000; Hoopa Valley hospital, California, $10,000; Jicarilla hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Truxton Canyon camp hospital, Arizona, $8,000; Indian Oasis hospital, Arizona, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 17, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1,550,000" and insert "$1,650,000," so as to read.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,650,000: Provided, That not to exceed $40,000 of this amount may be used for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind Indian children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 8, to strike out:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $400,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service, who are furnished quarters, necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: Provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

And to insert:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $625,000, of which at least $200,000 shall be used for the construction of new schoolhouses: Provided, That of this amount $300 may be expended for the purchase of a perpetual water right and right of way across the lands of private individuals, for the purpose of running a pipe line from a certain spring or springs located near the Sisseton Indian Agency buildings, South Dakota, to said buildings, the purchase of such water right to include sufficient land for the construction of a small cement reservoir near such spring or springs for the purpose of storing the water so acquired: Provided further, That not to exceed $500 of the amount herein appropriated may be used for the acquisition on behalf of the United States, by purchase or otherwise, of land for a site for the Mesquakie Day School, Sac and Fox, Iowa: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons employed in the supervision of general construction work in the Indian Service, and that not to exceed two of such employees may be assigned to duty in the Indian Office from time to time when their services, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, are necessary: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service who are furnished quarters necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: And provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amount for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senate committee has agreed upon an increase of $225,000 over the appropriation made by the House for this purpose. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what the appropriation for this purpose was last year?

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation for this same purpose last year amounted to $400,000. I will try to explain as briefly as I may the origin and purpose of this raise.

During the discussion before the Committee on Indian Affairs it was developed that there are in the United States something over 17,000 Indian children without school facilities, there being in one State, to wit, the State of South Dakota, some 1,250, there being in the State of Arizona some 7,500 Indian children without school facilities, there being in the State of New Mexico some 3,500 without school facilities. This item and another item in the bill somewhat related to it were the subject of a vast deal of discussion, and the committee felt that the Government owed it, if not by treaty at least in morals, as an obligation to these various tribes, to give the Indian children the benefits of an education.

It would require an appropriation of about $15,000,000 to provide ample school facilities for those Indian children who are not now equipped with school facilities. Manifestly the committee could not add $15,000,000 in one bill and at one session of Congress, but the committee did think this would be a forward moving step, that it would be a very excellent starting point to make a gradual increase in the appropriations for school buildings.

Whether the state of the Public Treasury at this time will warrant the additional expenditure is a matter that must address itself to the sound discretion of each individual Senator, but nevertheless, the stubborn fact remains that there are some 17,000 Indian children at this time without adequate Government or other school facilities.

That explains the reason for this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator how many children of school age there are among the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. What is the question?

Mr. THOMAS. What is the approximate aggregate number of Indian children in the United States of school age?

Mr. ASHURST. Who are not provided for?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the total.

Mr. ASHURST. Who are in school?

Mr. CURTIS. There are about 40,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator how long this lack of provision for the 17,000 children has existed?

Mr. ASHURST. It has always existed; that is, there have always been, I presume, a large number, ranging from ten or twelve to fifteen or sixteen thousand children of school age without school facilities.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, there has always been a large number who had no school facilities.

Mr. THOMAS. I presume as long as we make appropriations there always will be, but I wish to ascertain whether this is an exigent situation or one which has been in existence for some time from year to year.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer by saying that in nearly every treaty the Government made a solemn agreement with the Indians that they would furnish these schools, and they have not done it. In some cases the treaty is probably 50 or 60 years old, and the Government has failed to keep its pledge.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, Indian treaties, generally speaking, are kept only when it is necessary to make large appropriations for the purpose. We have expended, I think, in the last 20 years nearly $250,000,000 from the Treasury for the purpose of educating and civilizing our Indian population, and they are hardly much more educated and civilized than when we began this system of appropriations. I believe that we should keep our treaty obligations, of course, and particularly with the helpless tribes of Indians; but as this does not seem to be a matter which has presented itself as an emergency between the time of the making of the last appropriation and the present time, I question the expediency of adding $225,000 to this item now.

The Senator having the bill in charge suggests that whether in view of the condition of the Treasury we should do it now is for the Senate to determine. I think it is not only for the Senate to determine but also for the committee to have determined. I do not believe that the condition of the Treasury has much to do with our actions in making appropriations anywhere. The situation of the Treasury is a matter of after consideration. Some time ago a reported leak from the State Department resulted in a great sensation consequent upon the loss on Wall Street and in the other exchanges of the country of large sums of money by a lot of gamblers. The House is now, I believe, in the throes of an investigation, the purpose being to determine the origin of that leak. We have so many leaks from the Treasury, however, and so many men and women armed with drills and hammers engaged in the delectable work of making as many more leaks as possible, it seems to be taken as a matter of course, it produces neither sensation nor an investigation. The leaks are so many and so numerous that the bottom of the Treasury now resembles a sieve or a watering pot more than anything else. I presume it will drop out very soon for lack of sufficient material in the bottom to hold the scattered pieces together.

Seriously, Mr. President, I do not believe at this time we should make these largely increased appropriations either in this or any other appropriation bill.

This bill as it comes to us from the House carries a total appropriation of $10,625,956.67. The total appropriations by the committee are $12,435,144.05, making a total increase of $1,809,187.38. The decrease by the Senate committee is $3,000, making a total net increase over the appropriations of the House of $1,806,187.38. Of course, Mr. President, we know that a million dollars is of but little consequence in a modern Government appropriation bill. However, these constant accumulations amount to a good deal for the taxpayers of the country to bear in the end.

I shall therefore move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out, beginning after the word "therewith," on line 3, page 8, "$625,000, of which at least $200,000 shall be used for the construction of new schoolhouses," and to insert in place thereof the figures "$400,000," being the amount the House appropriated.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, like the Senator from Colorado, I believe in economy, and I think that the people at this time expect and deserve careful consideration to be given to the moneys that we expend. I am going to give the Senator an opportunity to put into force his argument in favor of economy. If the Senator will change his amendment to one striking out about every other item in the bill but this one he will save about eight or nine million dollars, and will have done an act of personal kindness and justice to the Indians. This is one of the valuable items.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean to strike out all other appropriations in the bill, whether made by the House or by the Senate committee?

Mr. LANE. It makes no difference who made them—all these general appropriations.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to understand the Senator. Does he mean all the amendments?

Mr. LANE. No; all the bill, with its eight or nine million dollars, practically none of which is for the benefit of the Indians. I am going to offer a substitute to cut them off, and I will give the reasons when I do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to assure the Senator that I will join him in that most heartily, particularly in view of the assertion he has just made that all these items of appropriation are of no benefit to the Indians.

Mr. LANE. They are not. It has been proven that a majority of them—I will not say all, but 99 per cent of them—are of no benefit to them.

But I want to state to the Senator that when he made the statement that we have appropriated, say, $250,000,000 for the education of the Indians, a gratuity appropriation in the past, he forgot to mention that at the same time we have taken away from the Indians, absolutely deprived them of, probably $250,000,000 worth of property and we owe them a debt in regard to the schools and it is long overdue.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I think it is a great deal more than that. It began with the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock.

Mr. LANE. Likely enough, but whatever else we did in the past we solemnly agreed to educate and erect a schoolhouse and furnish teachers for every 30 Indian children. We have done nothing of the kind. I think the obligation of the Government to the Indian children is greater than any other. I believe that one item is worthy of support and should be supported and the money should be appropriated. You can take this bill as a whole, however, and go through it and strike out item after item, amounting in all to millions of dollars, without harming the Indians and you will also save the money to the people.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator from Oregon whether his wholesale criticism of the appropriations contained in the bill are due to his conviction that the moneys thus provided for are diverted to other purposes?

Mr. LANE. They are not for the benefit of the Indians, but for the payment of salaries to the whites who manage the affairs of the Indians, with no benefit to the Indians whatever, as a rule, and many times with the loss of millions of dollars to them.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, let me ask the Senator whether the same fate does not await the amendment to which my amendment is directed?

Mr. LANE. I think the amendment ought to be amended so as to put the management of the Indian schools and other affairs in the hands of the Indians themselves.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt they would learn quite as much as they have learned or would be likely to learn under the civilizing and uplifting influences of the Indian management.

Mr. LANE. I think if the Senator from Colorado fully understood the conditions and had gone through them carefully, he would agree with me in my opinion about these matters.

Mr. THOMAS. I do agree with the Senator there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, without reading, a list containing the names of teachers, compensation allowed, location of schools, and the average attendance of all the Indian schools in the United States. This is taken from House Document No. 1457.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "employment," to insert:

Provided further, That where practicable the transportation and expenses so paid shall be refunded and shall be returned to the appropriation from which paid and be available for reexpenditure.

So as to make the clause read:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training, $72,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment: Provided further, That where practicable the transportation and expenses so paid shall be refunded and shall be returned to the appropriation from which paid and be available for reexpenditure. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native Indian pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the item of appropriation for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, etc., on page 19, line 11, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$425,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to read:

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $500,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to make one more effort to reduce these appropriations. I trust that the Senate committee amendment which has just been stated will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment, as I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate. The amount of the estimates for this item was $500,000. This appropriation is for what might be called an industrial item. It is regarded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs as one of the worthy items to be used for the purpose of training and teaching an Indian how to make a white man of himself. If the Senator from Colorado, however, thinks that the sum of $500,000 is too much, I hope he will not object to a slight increase of the appropriation. If the Senator finds himself unable to vote for the whole sum, why not let us have an increase, say, to $450,000? I think this is a worthy item, and I think the hearings which were held before the committee disclosed that the sum proposed to be appropriated will not be frittered away, but that the present appropriation for the same purpose is being used rather jealously and in a proper way.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course I am not impugning the good faith of the chairman of the committee. I know he thinks that all of these are worthy items, or he would not have presented them here. I am also aware that the purpose of this increase is as stated. Let us read it and see what it is. It is as follows:

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons; and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. If the distinguished Senator will yield to me a moment, I desire to suggest that he will be able to see upon reading the hearings that this is supposed to be, that it is intended to be, and I wish to assert that it is, for the specific benefit of the Indians in training them for industrial life. I hope, therefore, the Senator will withdraw his opposition and will let the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt it will be agreed to, whether I withdraw my opposition or not.

Mr. ASHURST. Would the Senator be content to let the amendment be agreed to appropriating $450,000?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not care to split the difference, Mr. President. If my objection is sound, it should be sustained; and if it is not sound, it ought not to be compromised.

The Senator from Arizona suggests that the purpose of this appropriation is to make a white man out of an Indian. Well, Mr. President, if the surplus in the Treasury was equivalent to the threatened deficiency I do not believe it would accomplish that. This appropriation has a most familiar sound. It has been in all the appropriation bills for the past four years and the Indians seem to know no more about preserving living and growing timber on their reservations now than when these appropriations began, and I think that when it comes to educating Indians in the proper care of forests the probabilities are that they could teach their teachers much more capably than the teachers would be expected to educate them.

There is no question, Mr. President, about the humane purpose involved in this and in other similar appropriations. What I object to is their increase at this time when we are obliged, if we will exercise the commonest elements of business prudence, to live within our income. Instead of doing that, Mr. President, I observe no tendency in that direction upon either side of the Chamber. Senators talk in favor of economy and in favor of retrenchment, but, as I said the other day, it is impossible to pick the place to begin.

The thoughtless appropriations which we make here are the cause of our present financial embarrassment. We are going ahead, all oblivious of the time when pay day shall arrive and when we must either confess our inability to meet our obligations or go further into debt by the issuance of bonds. I am opposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, etc., on page 11, line 6, after the word "appropriated," to strike out "shall" and insert "may," and in line 10, after the word "stockmen," to strike out "herein provided for," so as to read:

And provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, cotton, grains, vegetables, and fruits: Provided, also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, and stockmen shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, before the word "warehouse," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of to exceed three warehouses in the Indian Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 15, after the word "exist," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of judges of Indian courts where tribal relations now exist, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 1, after "$135,000," to insert: "Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this amount shall me immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of not to exceed $3 in lieu of subsistence, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $135,000; Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this amount shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 22, after the word "crops," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$450,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $450,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 10, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to make the clause read:

That not to exceed $300,000 of applicable appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, we come to an increased appropriation of $100,000.

For the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service.

The House appropriated the sum of $200,000 for that purpose. Let me ask the chairman of the committee——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, this is not an appropriation; this is simply an authorization on the part of the department to use a certain sum already appropriated, or appropriated in this bill, for a specific purpose, to wit, the repair and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn vehicles. It authorizes the utilization of a certain appropriated sum for this purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, the fact is that the effect of the Senate committee amendment is to allow the expenditure of $100,000 more than the House provided "of applicable appropriations" for motor-propelled and other vehicles. Now, let me ask the Senator if that can not be dispensed with at present?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the very able Senator, I will read from page 8 of the report of the committee as to this item:

PURCHASE OF VEHICLES FOR INDIAN SERVICE.

No appropriation is carried in this paragraph, and it is necessary because section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for 1915 prohibited the bureaus of the Government from purchasing passenger-carrying vehicles without first obtaining permission and authority of Congress. (See 38 Stat. L., p. 508.) It is now more expensive to maintain vehicles and provide feed for animals than in former years, consequently $300,000 is allowed instead of $200,000, as was granted last year, and the Secretary is granted authority "to exchange automobiles in part payment for new machines used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged." A number of automobiles have been in service for a long time, and it is more expensive to keep them in operation than to exchange them and buy cheaper and lighter machines. In the current law $50,000 instead of $30,000 is allowed this year for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, as there are not a sufficient number of machines to provide for the physicians, matrons, and superintendents.

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, Mr. President, the superintendents, the farmers, the physicians, the field matrons, and the other paraphernalia of employees whose business it will be to expend these appropriations, are to be given $100,000 more this year for automobiles and other vehicles than was allowed last year, upon the theory that the cost of living is higher now than it was then.

This is the last objection that I am going to make to this bill. If the Senate sees fit to vote for this amendment under existing conditions, which I have reiterated here so often that I have no doubt it accounts largely for the empty seats that I see before me, I am through, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I think the Senate is entitled to the following information. I read from page 92 of the House hearings:

During the fiscal year 1915–16 the Indian Service, by reason of legislation by Congress, was prohibited from purchasing any form of passenger-carrying vehicles. There were on hand in the Indian Service at that time 118 automobiles and 739 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, as reported to Congress, for the use of approximately 6,000 employees. By the appropriation act for the present fiscal year we were permitted to expend not to exceed $30,000 of the total amount available in the act for the purchase of motor-propelled vehicles, and $15,000 for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles. With these sums there have been purchased 70 automobiles and 112 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles.

These vehicles are used in conveying children to and from school and in transporting physicians and matrons over the reservation. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say that this item has some merit in it. I think it could be trimmed; but there is actual need for the use of some of these vehicles. I think the Senator from Colorado will agree with me that a physician located in the middle of a reservation, perhaps 20 or 30 or 40 miles from its borders, when called to attend emergency cases and respond to calls coming at the same time from different directions, particularly in cases of childbirth, should have an automobile. Women have died for lack of proper medical attendance upon the reservations in such cases; some within the last year, I have been informed. It is cruel and wrong not to provide for a proper conveyance in such cases. The physician should be given a Ford or some cheap machine, and the matrons should also have some means of transportation. The superintendents are required to go over the reservations, and they are entitled to conveyances to take them about, though perhaps they would not make as much use of them for that purpose as they ought to do. The farmers do not need them so badly, but there is an actual need for these vehicles in some instances, and the item is a worthy expenditure to that extent.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I would not intrude into this discussion at all were it not for the threat just made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that unless some attention was paid to his objections as to this particular item he might retire from the Chamber altogether and leave this particular bill to the tender mercies of its friends.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was not aware that I had threatened the Senate at all; I did not intend to do that. I merely wished to express my conviction that further objections were useless, since it appears that, as the legislative bill was no place for economy to begin, neither is the Indian appropriation bill any place for economy to begin. So I concluded, after this amendment, that I would retire, not from the Senate Chamber but from the position of objector, and wait until the next appropriation bill came up, to see whether I could discover that mysterious thing that seems to be nonexistent—a place for economy to begin.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Jersey will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not leave the Chamber. I think his statements are very frank and manly, and I hope he will not desist from making objections merely because they happen to be overruled.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I will take the liberty of saying to the Senator from Colorado that if he is going to play the rôle of a saver of public money, he must not be so easily discouraged. I have acted in that capacity on a number of occasions and devoted a good deal of time to trying to save the public money. The Senator will encounter a great many disappointments and a great deal of discouragement; but one of the first things he must learn is to distinguish between authorizations and actual appropriations of money.

As I understand the facts with reference to this item, the money has already been appropriated; it is available; and every penny of it can be spent for horses and wagons.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I understand the distinction, of course, between appropriations and authorizations. I also fully understood the statement of the chairman of the committee that this was a provision for the expenditure of an appropriation previously made; but why should we increase an appropriation previously made beyond the amount which has been expended in past years, there being no emergency that I have yet been able to perceive for the increase?

Mr. HUGHES. I think I can explain that to the Senator. I did not think he understood it. As the law now stands, this money would have to be spent for horses and wagons. They could spend it all for horses and wagons, but there is a statute which prevents them from spending it for automobiles. They would rather have automobiles than horses and wagons. Automobiles are more economical than horses and wagons.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will look at the amendment, it provides for the expenditure of this money for horse-drawn vehicles as well as for motor-propelled vehicles; and, as I understand it, this amendment is necessary if any part of this money is to be expended either for horse-drawn vehicles or for automobiles.

Mr. HUGHES. I think not. It is only necessary——

Mr. THOMAS. Not to exceed $15,000 is to be used for the purchase of horse-drawn vehicles and not to exceed $50,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled vehicles.

Mr. HUGHES. There is a statute which would prevent them. As the law now stands they could not spend this money for motor-operated vehicles, because at one time in a spasm of virtue, of so-called economy, Congress rose in its wrath and said that certain gentlemen were riding around in automobiles who ought not to be riding around in automobiles, and solemnly enacted into law a restriction upon various officers of the Government and various departments of the Government which operated to prevent them from purchasing automobiles.

Mr. THOMAS. I fully agree with the Senator that if the expenditure is to be made, the automobile is the better vehicle.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the only thing we are deciding here. We are giving them authority which this official says he ought to have because of the cheaper operation of automobiles.

Mr. THOMAS. But while the money which is to be expended under this provision will be ostensibly used for the purposes recited in the amendment, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, like the other appropriations, the chances are that it will be diverted from its real purpose and expended in other directions.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope the Senator will stay and continue the scrutiny of these items, for if he is diligent and faithful in the performance of that duty, he will probably save the people of the United States $150,000 or $200,000 this afternoon. Surely that is worth while.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I doubt it. I do not believe that.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator refused to accept the compromise of $50,000 awhile ago, and I simply shuddered at the nonchalance with which he waved away the offer of the chairman.

Mr. THOMAS. I refused to accept it, but that did not prevent the chairman of the committee from suggesting to the Senate the substitution of the sum mentioned by him in place of that which the bill then contained.

Mr. HUGHES. The chairman will not do that now.

Mr. THOMAS. I still say that if my objection was good, it was good in toto. If it was not good, it should not have prevailed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was on page 14, line 18, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 may be used in the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $50,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and that such vehicles shall be used only for official service: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may hereafter exchange automobiles in part payment for new machines used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 6, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000, said amount to be immediately available and to remain available until expended," so as to make the clause read:

For reimbursing Indians for live stock which may be hereafter destroyed on account of being infected with dourine or other contagious diseases, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such diseases, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $100,000, said amount to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of this amount may be used in reimbursing Indians for horses killed previous to the passage of the act of May 18, 1916, for which they have not heretofore been reimbursed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 14, after the word "sold," to insert "to the highest bidder," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be sold, to the highest bidder, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, any tract or part of a tract of land purchased by the United States for day school or other Indian administrative uses, not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, when said land or a part thereof is no longer needed for the original purpose; the net proceeds therefrom in all cases to be paid into the Treasury of the United States; title to be evidenced by a patent in fee simple for such lands as can be described in terms of the legal survey, or by deed duly executed by the Secretary of the Interior containing such metes-and-bounds description as will identify the land so conveyed as the land which had been purchased: Provided, That where the purchase price was paid from tribal funds, such proceeds shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the respective tribes of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 4, to strike out:

That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power to authorize any superintendent, clerk, or other employee in the Indian field service to administer oaths and take acknowledgments in connection with matters pertaining to their official duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 9, to insert:

Hereafter, for the purpose of reducing the expense of enforcing and administering the several statutes conferring or imposing duties upon the Secretary of the Interior, he shall have authority from time to time to make designations of not to exceed five special agents employed by the Creek Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma to investigate cases brought or to be brought in behalf of said tribe, or members thereof, to administer oaths, of which designations the courts of the United States shall take judicial notice. Any such agent so designated is hereby empowered, in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him, to administer to, or take from, any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit whenever such oath, affirmation, or affidavit is for use in any prosecution or proceeding under investigation by such persons. Any such oath, affirmation, or affidavit administered or taken by or before such agent shall, when offered or used in any court of the United States, have like force and effect as if administered or taken by or before the clerk of such court, without further proof of the identity or authority of such agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 4, to strike out:

That the following provision of the act approved March 11, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 65), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights of way across Indian lands for the conveyance of oil and gas, to wit: "No such lines shall be constructed across Indian lands, as above mentioned, until authority therefor has first been obtained from, and the maps of definite location of said lines approved by, the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows: "No such lines shall be constructed across Indian lands, as above mentioned, until authority therefor has first been obtained from the Secretary of the Interior."

And insert:

That the following provision of the act approved March 11, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 65), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights of way across Indian lands for the conveyance of oil and gas, to wit: "No such lines shall be constructed across Indian lands, as above mentioned, until authority therefor has first been obtained from, and the maps of definite location of said lines approved by, the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Before title to rights of way applied for hereunder shall vest, maps of definite location shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That before such approval the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, grant temporary permits revocable in his discretion for the construction of such lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," in section 2, on page 19, line 16, after the word "purposes," to insert "and for the installation of pumping machinery"; in line 22, after the word "land," to insert "$25,000"; and in line 24, after the word "structures," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "in all $40,000"; so as to make the clause read:

For the construction and repair of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes and for the installation of pumping machinery on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 273), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land, $25,000; and for mainaining and operating the pumping plant, canals, and structures, in all, $40,000, reimbursable as provided in said act, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 20, after the word "Indians," to strike out "on the Navajo Reservation, $25,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo Indians, $30,000, to be immediately available, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 12, after "$175,000," to insert:

Provided, That the water diverted from the Gila River by said diversion dam shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior to the Indian lands of said reservation and to the private and public lands in said county in accordance with the respective rights and priorities of such lands to the beneficial use of said water as may be determined by agreement of the owners thereof with the Secretary of the Interior or by a court of competent jurisdiction: And provided further, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said diversion dam and other works and rights shall be divided equitably by the Secretary of the Interior between the Indian lands and the private and public lands in said county; and said cost as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522); but the construction charge as fixed for the private and public lands in said county shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of an act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, approved August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 686); And provided further, That said project shall only be undertaken if the Secretary of the Interior shall be able to make or provide for what he shall deem to be satisfactory adjustments of the rights to the water to be diverted by said diversion dam or carried in canals, and satisfactory arrangements for the inclusion of lands within said project and the purchase of property rights which he shall deem necessary to be acquired, and shall determine and declare said project to be feasible.

So as to make the clause read:

For completing the construction by the Indian Service of a diversion dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., $100,000, to remain available until expended, the total cost not to exceed $175,000, and for beginning the construction of the necessary canals and structures to carry the natural flow of the Gila River to the Indian lands of the Gila Indian Reservation and to public and private lands in Pinal County, as provided in the Indian appropriation act approved May 18, 1916, $75,000, to remain available until expended; in all, $175,000: Provided, That the water diverted from the Gila River by said diversion dam shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior to the Indian lands of said reservation and to the private and public lands in said county in accordance with the respective rights and priorities of such lands to the beneficial use of said water as may be determined by agreement of the owners thereof with the Secretary of the Interior or by a court of competent jurisdiction: And provided further, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said diversion dam and other works and rights shall be divided equitably by the Secretary of the Interior between the Indian lands and the private and public lands in said county; and said cost as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522); but the construction charge as fixed for the private and public lands in said county shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of an act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, approved August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 686): And provided further, That said project shall only be undertaken if the Secretary of the Interior shall be able to make or provide for what he shall deem to be satisfactory adjustments of the rights to the water to be diverted by said diversion dam or carried in canals, and satisfactory arrangements for the inclusion of lands within said project and the purchase of property rights which he shall deem necessary to be acquired, and shall determine and declare said project to be feasible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 16, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to purchase lands and water rights, with improvements, for the use of the Navajo Indians located on the public domain of Arizona, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 21, to insert:

For the construction of two bridges over the Little Colorado and Canyon Diablo Rivers near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., $42,500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 24, to insert:

That so much of article 2 of the agreement with the Indians of the San Carlos Indian Reservation concluded on February 25, 1896, accepted, ratified, and confirmed in the act approved June 10, 1896, reading "and that said money shall be paid to them in cash from time to time as the same shall become available, pro rata, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child of the tribes now living upon and entitled to the privileges of the said reservation," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read, "and that said money, as the same becomes available, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to or expended for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto in such manner and for such purposes as he may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "California," in section 3, page 24, line 17, after the word "employees," to strike out "$42,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 3. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 20, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $25,000, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the chairman in charge of the bill how many Indians in California are still homeless? My inquiry is prompted by the recitals on page 24, beginning with line 18, where $25,000 is appropriated for the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California.

Mr. ASHURST. I can furnish the Senator with that information, I think, in just a moment.

Mr. THOMAS. We have been appropriating money for homeless Indians in California ever since I have been here, and the more money we appropriate the more homeless they seem to be.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish first to say in a general statement that the California Indians have never been treated with that degree of legislative equity with which they ought to have been treated. Answering the Senator's question directly, there are now 2,782 homeless or landless Indians in the State of California.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator inform me how many there were a year ago or two years ago who were homeless? The amount named seems to be the equivalent of the Democratic majority out there. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Well, that is very substantial. With the permission of the Senate and the indulgence of the Senator, I will read from page 135 of the House hearings the figures regarding the purchase of lands for landless Indians in California.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the amount appropriated was $10,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Which year was that?

Mr. ASHURST. The fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. That is the year we are now in.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $10,000 was appropriated.

The following is an analysis of the expenditure:

Land purchased, $15,217.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield; yes.

Mr. CURTIS. The table at the top of page 136 gives the Senator the information he desires.

There were purchased prior to 1913, under the appropriations of 1906 and 1908, 6,420 acres for 38 bands of Indians. There were 3,291 members of those bands.

There were purchased subsequently thereto, under the acts of 1914, 1916, and the joint resolution of 1915, 1,317 acres for 14 bands, the members of the bands being 863 in number.

The next purchase was 685 acres for 9 bands, comprising 617 members.

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator for his information. I notice, however——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I am sure the Senator thinks these homeless Indians ought to have lands, and I am sure the Senator would much rather the Government would buy lands for them than to lease them some Government lands, would he not?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I do not object to giving the homeless Indians lands; but my curiosity is aroused, whenever these appropriations come in regular succession, as to how many Indians have been furnished homes and how many still remain homeless.

Mr. MYERS. But my idea is that the Senator would prefer a sale to leasing lands to them, would he not?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, certainly. I want to do anything at any time that will get title in the public lands out of the Government of the United States, even if the title is conferred upon Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this will do that. As I said before, there are now 2,782 homeless and landless Indians in the State of California.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think the Senator from Montana sees the purpose of my inquiry. What amazes me is that these Indians continue to be homeless; and I venture to predict that 10 years from now we will still be appropriating money for homeless Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator should bear in mind that when we entered upon the policy of purchasing lands for homeless Indians in the United States there were nearly 8,000 of them.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know anything about it except what the Senator tells me. I am glad some of them have been provided for.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas pointed out the number that have been supplied with lands in years gone by.

Mr. THOMAS. But as the Indians decrease in number the appropriations increase in amount.

Mr. ASHURST. I think this will be the last year that this appropriation will be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think that?

Mr. ASHURST. I think this will be the last appropriation that will be necessary to purchase lands for homeless Indians in California.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is a young man. I think his head will be as gray as mine before these appropriations cease to appear in the appropriation bills.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Arizona proposes to furnish them all homes by this appropriation. There will be no further homeless Indians in California.

Mr. THOMAS. As suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], when the last homeless Indian is provided with a home in California the probabilities are that we will begin to furnish homeless Indians with homes in New Jersey. [Laughter.] Now may I ask if the increase to $25,000 in this bill is also due to the high cost of living?

Mr. ASHURST. The high cost of land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 4, after the word "allotments," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments, $40,000, to remain available until expended and to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 12, after "$3,500," to strike out "in all, $21,700" and insert "for new school building, $12,000; in all, $33,700," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for new school building, $12,000; in all, $33,700.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask if the Indian children at the Fort Bidwell Indian schools are now in any kind of a school building, or are they being taught in any way?

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask the Senator to consider page 140 of the House committee's hearings, from which I am going to read. The commissioner stated as follows:

We are asking for a new school building, $12,000; dairy farm, $5,000; making the total $38,700. Last year we had an appropriation of $21,800. I offer for the record the following justification for that estimate:

Indian school, Fort Bidwell, Cal.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, amount appropriated	$18,200.00
Fiscal year ended June 30, 1916:
Amount appropriated	20,500.00
Amount expended	19,315.74
Unexpended balance	1,184.26
Analysis of expenditures:
Salaries and wages	10,878.78
Transportation of supplies	295.03
Telegraph and telephone service	7.88
Subsistence supplies	1,962.46
Dry goods, wearing apparel, etc	2,034.28
Forage	173.00
Fuel, illuminants, lubricants, etc	1,458.86
Educational, stationery, and office supplies	283.14
Medical supplies	155.95
Implements, vehicles, tools, etc	339.06
Sundry supplies, equipment, etc	1,649.76
Miscellaneous	77.54
Total	19,315.74

Mr. SMOOT. That does not answer my inquiry.

Mr. ASHURST. I will give the information.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate committee made an amendment to the provision appropriating $12,000 for the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, for a new school building. Can the Senator tell me why they want a new school building or——

Mr. ASHURST. The estimates of the department call for the same, and the statement made by the assistant commissioner was to the effect that such a building is necessary. I have not the printed hearings before me.

Mr. SMOOT. In the past they have had sufficient room for educating those Indian children, have they not?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me answer the question by reading what the assistant commissioner said, if the Senator please:

The new construction work required at this school will include a new school building. This is an urgent need, the one now in use being an old building used as a hospital when the United States troops were stationed there. A building large enough to provide two or three classrooms and an assembly hall is required.

That is the language of the assistant commissioner.

Mr. SMOOT. We have just passed the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Senator will notice that the Committee on Appropriations cut everything out of that bill that could be cut out. They allowed no increases, as appeared in the estimates for all the departments. As I said last night, if the Committee on Appropriations had yielded and granted what the gentlemen of the departments and bureaus had asked for, the bill would have been increased nearly $3,000,000.

Mr. ASHURST. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator from Arizona if he does not believe that under the conditions of the Treasury today, with, I understand, six hundred and odd million dollars to be raised by the issuing of bonds and the imposition of additional taxes upon the American people, the Indians at the Fort Bidwell School could not get along for another year with the buildings that they already have?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not believe it. The committee has taken care to eliminate buildings in every place. The committee has used the most scrupulous care, and in a dozen instances has declined to appropriate for new sanitary buildings. If I remember correctly, these buildings in California, the schools being isolated, were about the only ones the committee did allow; and they seemed to appeal to the committee with some force, because the appropriation was asked for last year and denied. It is an urgent necessity on these two reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. It was denied last year; and has any real harm come to the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. The necessity is greater.

Mr. SMOOT. Would any harm come to the Indians by a refusal to grant the request this year?

Mr. ASHURST. The necessity is greater this year. They are not given proper and adequate facilities for the housing and instruction of the school children. The necessity is very great.

Mr. SMOOT. This very question was presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. They pleaded with the House to put in this provision. The House did not think it was necessary, and therefore withheld it.

I recognize, Mr. President, that it is a very unfortunate item to begin to try to economize on when the question of education is involved, but I do not know where we are going to begin to economize. Every item we bring up it seems to me that that is not the proper place to begin.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I think we shall have to advertise for a place to begin. I do not know how else we will be able to discover it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the House had this proposition presented to them and presented in the very language that was read by the Senator having the bill in charge, and after considering it and holding hearings upon it decided that the Indians could get along another year. I believe the Senate ought to agree with the House, and I believe this item ought not to be allowed.

Mr. LANE. I would suggest one thing to the Senator which may have influenced the committee's action in regard to this particular school, a fact which was brought to the attention of the Senate committee and not the House committee. A short time ago, a few weeks ago, three or four little children—girls aged from 8 to 12—ran away from the school. One of them was found the next day, or a day or two afterwards, frozen to death, and one or two others had their feet frozen so badly they had to be amputated. It must be an awful place, or an awful management of children, and the fear of punishment dreadful, when little children 8 to 12 years old would go out on the hillside and prefer to die by freezing rather than to go back and face the tender mercies or comforts of such a home as that.

It may be possible that that had an influence. It does influence me. I did not vote for it, for I rather suspected perhaps it was the treatment which they received from their guardians, but the statement of the fact in an excerpt taken from the papers and publications might have influenced the committee to be a little overgenerous. The condition of the Indians all over the United States is miserable. I am going to offer a substitute to clean this business out if possible.

Mr. SMOOT. The very next paragraph provides for a new school building at Greenville Indian School. I wish further to say that I do not believe a school child, because of the character of the building, would go out and freeze to death. The treatment might be such that a child would rather die than go back.

Mr. THOMAS. The child may have run away, just as children do at times, for no particular reason.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to know if the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Utah agree about this matter.

Mr. THOMAS. We are holding an inquest.

Mr. LANE. I think the Senator is mistaken. I know he is mistaken, if he thinks that the surrounding conditions, with good sanitation, with pleasant surroundings and agreeable and comfortable rooms, when compared with moldy, damp, cold, and dreary ones, will not influence a normal child, Indian or white, either to stay or run away when the opportunity presents itself, and that it would go and perhaps even freeze to death rather than return. There are some of those buildings in bad condition, many of them throughout the country, some of which I have seen, and one could not blame the child. I do not say that there may have been a certain rule of discipline which the child dreaded so that until too late it would stay out rather than return. There is more in the bill than appears on the surface, and not to its credit.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the building occupied to-day for school purposes at Fort Bidwell, Cal., was a hospital used by the Government of the United States, and it does seem to me——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I was going to ask, inasmuch as apparently this is controverted, that it may go over until to-morrow, and that the reading of the bill be resumed.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to vote. I want to vote on it.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it go over until to-morrow, and it can be investigated further. I wish to go on with the other items in the bill for half an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Is that course agreeable?

Mr. SMOOT. All right; but I want the next item, for the Greenville Indian School, to go over.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, there is no reason why this item should go over. The committee considered it with a great deal of care. Many of these buildings have been condemned as insanitary and unfit. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that I objected to many of the proposed increases, but after I heard the statement from the Indian Office and from the men who are thoroughly acquainted with the conditions in this particular school I was satisfied that this increase should be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read all the testimony that was given to the committee in the House, but the testimony read by the Senator having the bill in charge said nothing in relation to the sanitary condition of the school.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator there was a great deal of discussion about this particular school. The Senate committee hearings have not yet been printed, or at least I have no copy.

Mr. ASHURST. The hearings will be available in the morning, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure the committee was justified in increasing this appropriation, and I am quite sure that when the Senate knows the facts it will not strike out the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if we take up the average rural school in the United States, it would hardly meet the approval of the United States Senate as a perfectly suitable school. I have not any question but that the Indian school at this place as it now stands is up at least to the average rural school.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. I think this is a time for us not to add anything that is not absolutely necessary. For myself, while I am here I expect to vote against these increases. I regret very much that the Committee on Indian Affairs has added a million or more dollars to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Nearly $2,000,000. The policy elsewhere has been to cut down our appropriations rather than increase them. If there is any reasonable way to get along without these increases, I think we ought to vote them down and in addition try to find a place to make some reduction in the House appropriations.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish simply to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that this is an old abandoned fort. There are about 20 buildings there, and many of them are in a very bad condition. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs informed the committee at the Senate committee hearings that many of them are in an unfit condition for use and urged that this building was needed perhaps more than any other in the service.

They are entitled to some credit. The committee will remember that we had this item up a year ago when it was costing two hundred and fifty-odd dollars per capita to educate the children at Fort Bidwell. Under the arrangement this year they propose to carry it on for $167. I think that makes a pretty good showing for the office. It is a reduction of nearly $100 per capita. I believe the showing that was made before the Senate committee justified an appropriation for this new building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the understanding that the Fort Bidwell and Greenville Indian Schools amendments shall go over?

Mr. ASHURST. Let them go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will go over.

Mr. THOMAS. It is the understanding that the paragraph, beginning in line 14 down to line 18, inclusive, goes over also?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that both may go over.

Mr. THOMAS. Let them both go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, they will go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the other was not read.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 17, after "$3,500," to strike out "in all, $21,700" and insert "for new school building, $9,000; in all, $30,700," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, including laundry equipment, $3,500; for new school building, $9,000; in all, $30,700.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 23, to insert:

For beginning the enlargement and improvement of the irrigation project upon the Torres Indian Reservation, Cal., for the irrigation of approximately 3,000 acres of Indian land, in accordance with the plans and estimates submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000, to remain available until expended and to be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the total cost of said irrigation project shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if this money is to be reimbursed to the Government?

Mr. ASHURST. It is. If the Senator will pardon me I will read from page 15 of the hearings, being the information the committee had on the subject:

Appropriation, $25,000; estimate, $25,000; not allowed by House. The Torres Indian Reservation is in the Coachella Valley, Cal., at the head of the Salton Sea, and some distance northwest therefrom. The locality is generally below sea level, on the eastern edge of the San Jacinto Mountain Range, in Riverside County, Cal. There has been no previous appropriation by Congress. The Indians, numbering about 210, are known as Cahuillas. The area of the contemplated project is 4,200 acres. The source of water supply is from wells and it is proposed to sink some large wells which will enable the Indians to compete with the whites who have taken up alternate sections, the reservation having been set aside after the railroad land-grant selections had been made.

This is reimbursable, and the total limited cost of the project will be $150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether the Indians have a fund at present in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. ASHURST. They have not at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. How is it to be reimbursed? By payment by the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. By payment from year to year as they earn money from the produce and crops they sell.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no provision here for that, but simply that it is to be reimbursed. It may be in 50 years or in 100 years.

Mr. ASHURST. That language is used invariably in the Indian appropriation bill. It really is to be done in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for this reason: Some tribes have repaid the whole sum in one year. Others do not repay with the same alacrity that they promised. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate rules and regulations as to when and in what manner and in what sum the money shall be repaid.

On the irrigation projects the white men have repaid in 20 years. I assume that the same time, say 20 years, will be given to the Indians. I do not wish to express a personal opinion, but I think this is a worthy appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator say that there are only 120 Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. There are about 210 of these Indians.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We are giving them in the proportion of about $700 to an Indian.

Mr. ASHURST. If the distinguished Senator from Georgia will pardon me, we are not giving it to them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We are appropriating it now, and we have got to raise it by taxation or by some sort of a revenue system. I do not know how we are going to raise it.

Mr. ASHURST. We are going to advance $25,000 this year and pledge the Government to advance the other $125,000 in the future. I am sure the Indians will repay this sum with the same promptness and with the same alacrity and with the same fidelity that the white men repay the sums they have had for similar projects out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to ask the Senator from Arizona what we are going to advance it from? From the deficit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand there is not anything in the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the deficit we will have next year?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, if we have any money left after we spend 40 times this sum for unnecessary battleships and armor plate I think we might as well give it to the Indians as anybody else. But I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator if this tribe of Indians have any money in the Treasury at all?

Mr. ASHURST. They have no money. They simply have a reservation and it is a checkerboard affair. Private parties own certain sections and the Indians own alternate sections. They are in a very warm climate and one which is very arid, but there is good land and good soil there which will produce crops in great abundance if the water is turned upon it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. This is a loan by the Government to those Indians for the purpose of irrigating and improving their land?

Mr. ASHURST. That is it exactly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have those Indians up to date been self-sustaining?

Mr. ASHURST. They have never within my knowledge had a dollar or a particle of assistance from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit that this proposition involves practically no expenditure on the part of the Government. The Indians are the wards of the Nation. The Nation now becomes the backer of the Indians. They have no other means by which they may develop the otherwise fertile land which, when water is applied to it, becomes highly productive This contemplates a loan practically of $25,000 this year for the beginning of the work, and that the Government shall be surely reimbursed as that land will be made fertile by the application of water.

I think we have a duty to our wards; in the chancery court it was regarded as the highest duty; and to abandon them to a State where they can not by their industry help themselves is an abandonment of a trust. I think that in the increased values by taxation this money will ultimately come back, even if there were no direct repayment, to the Government—not only to the Federal Government, but to the State government—by increasing the natural wealth, with the assistance of irrigation, of the whole country.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] talks of warships. The nations are involved in war for the purpose of acquiring territory, and here by peaceful methods we propose to acquire territory, for it is none the less the acquisition of territory when we reclaim it from the desert. So, from whatever point it is viewed, I think that this is a very wise appropriation even at a time when there is a deficit in the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to say that these Indian lands were in a kind of checkerboard situation, alternate sections being owned by private parties. Is there any water available for these lands in the hands of private parties?

Mr. PHELAN. Water in that region is derived from wells, as I understand.

Mr. ASHURST. This whole region is below sea level, being near the Salton Sea, and, as Senators know, many years ago land grants were made and the alternate sections have been acquired by the Indians.

Mr. JONES. Is it proposed to irrigate the Indian land by wells?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. About how deep do they have to go to get water sufficient for irrigating purposes?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me read from the report of the committee. I will give the Senator a statement in reference to that matter in a moment.

Mr. PHELAN. We have in California the lowest land in the United States, and we also have the highest land. In the neighborhood of this valley, I think the land is 120 feet below the level of the sea, and we have in Mount Whitney the highest mountain in continental United States outside of Alaska. Having that low land, the only means of getting water upon it, as it is a desert and there is no rainfall, is by the sinking of wells.

Mr. JONES. I suppose that private parties have irrigated the land, which, of course, would indicate about how deep they would have to go.

Mr. ASHURST. Reading from page 114 of the House committee hearings, I find the following:

> The irrigation work here proposed is to supply eventually about 4,200 acres of very fertile desert land in the so-called Coachilla Valley in southern California. The Indian reservation at this point consists of alternate sections of land caused by the fact that the reservation was set aside after the railroad land grant had been made. This has permitted white settlers to occupy the railway land and has caused extensive water development upon the white lands, reducing the flow of the small artesian wells drilled some years ago for the Indians to such a point that they are no longer of use for irrigation. It is proposed to drill large wells and install pumping plants of the same type which are very successfully used by the whites on the adjoining land and distribute the water through impervious pipe lines in order to preserve to the greatest extent possible the valuable water supply. The fact that the ground-water plane of the deep wells proposed will either be just about the surface of the ground, or even above it, makes the expense of pumping comparatively light, and the development which has already been made by the white people previous proves the value of the proposed work, which will permit the industrious Indians of this reservation to become entirely self-supporting.

Mr. JONES. Where do these Indians now live?

Mr. ASHURST. They live near by on the land, notwithstanding its extreme aridity.

Mr. JONES. I know these lands are desert lands, and I suppose if they were not irrigated the Indians could not live on them and that they were probably living somewhere else.

Mr. ASHURST. They are nomadic in a way; they roam about from place to place, but for a large part of the time they live on these lands, notwithstanding their extreme aridity and lack of water.

Mr. JONES. Does the department hope that these Indians will themselves cultivate the land or will the land be leased to white people for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. It is the hope and expectation of the department that the Indians themselves will raise crops on the land.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Arizona will pardon me, I will say to the Senator from Washington that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated that it was the intention of the department to divide the land into 10-acre lots and for the Indians themselves to cultivate the land.

Mr. JONES. How many acres do each one of these Indians have?

Mr. ASHURST. There are 4,200 acres in all.

Mr. JONES. How many acres does each Indian have as an allotment?

Mr. GRONNA. They have no allotments whatever.

Mr. JONES. Do they have no allotments at all?

Mr. GRONNA. No. This is simply land which has been bought for them; these Indians are on the land, and it has been divided.

Mr. JONES. Is it proposed to allot to each of these Indians a particular tract?

Mr. GRONNA. About 10 acres.

Mr. JONES. That would take up all the lands of the reservation, so that there would be no land left to sell to anybody.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course I have not very much hope of the Indians themselves cultivating this land, but I do know what irrigation does for land of this character. If the lands can be irrigated for the sum of money that is provided in this bill, as the Senator from California has said, it will be money well invested. I hope the Indians may be induced to cultivate the land to some extent at any rate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington that these Indians now have a reservation of 20,800 acres, 200 acres of which they are farming by irrigation, and this project will cover 4,200 acres more.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now nearly half past 5 o'clock. May I ask the Senator from Arizona if he would be willing to adjourn at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. If that is desired, and there is no objection, I will move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I withhold the motion.

Mr. MYERS. Before that motion is put, may I not be recognized to ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to know whether the amendment last discussed has been agreed to?

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That amendment has not been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I object for a moment. I thought I heard an expression to the effect that the item was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not been agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. That does not mean that it was disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; not at all. We simply have not acted on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, one of the assistant doorkeepers has just notified me that there is to be a resolution come over from the House, announcing the death of a Representative, and that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] desires to present resolutions. If that be the case, I hardly think that we ought to adjourn for a few moments, but that we should wait a while to see if the resolution comes over. I do not know whether it is desired to have an executive session or not.

Mr. ASHURST. We can proceed with the bill until the resolution comes over.

Mr. JONES. Why can we not proceed with the bill for half an hour?

Mr. MYERS. Then I withdraw my request that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

That section 3 of the act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 712), entitled "An act for the relief of Mission Indians in the State of California," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the President, in his discretion and whenever he shall deem it for the interests of the Indians affected thereby, to extend the trust period for such time as may be advisable on the lands held in trust for the use and benefit of the Mission Bands or villages of Indians in California: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause allotments to be made to the Indians belonging to and having tribal rights on the Mission Indian reservations in the State of California, in areas as provided in section 17 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 859), instead of as provided in section 4 of the act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 713): Provided, That this act shall not affect any allotments heretofore patented to these Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator please explain just what that means?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this legislation was incorporated at the request of the Interior Department, and the Interior Department submitted the following letter addressed to the chairman of the committee dated May 10, 1916:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 10, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On January 17, 1916, I invited attention to the urgent necessity of a law to authorize the extension of the trust period on lands patented to various Mission Indian bands in California. As a result Senate bill 4765 was introduced to amend the act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 712), so as to authorize the President to extend the trust period on lands patented to the Mission Bands or villages of Indians in California whenever he shall deem it for the interests of the Indians.

As the trust period on approximately 10,000 acres of these trust lands will expire in September, 1917, it would be desirable if we could obtain this legislation during the present session, rather than try to procure the required authority at the following short session—

This was asked for at the last session—

These are tribal lands, and the Indians should not be permitted to have unrestricted control over their disposal. I shall be pleased to see favorable action taken on Senate bill 4765.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

In other words, these trust patents are about to expire, and it is not believed wise, judicious, or proper to permit the Indians to alienate the land. That is the very thing that we want to avoid.

Mr. SMOOT. The lands have not yet been alienated by the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. No; they belong to the Indians in commonalty.

Mr. SMOOT. This is merely designed to extend the trust period to prevent alienation?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that ought to be done if the Indians are not capable of handling the lands themselves.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the situation, and I hope the proposed legislation will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not involve any appropriation, does it?

Mr. ASHURST. No appropriation is involved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, I ask that the Indian appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. The resolutions, as I understand, have not come over from the House as yet.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The resolutions are not here, and we can agree to the next amendment, as it is a reduction.

Mr. ASHURST. I thought the resolutions had come over and was about to be presented. That is why I asked that the bill be laid aside. I now ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 27, after line 5, to insert:

That the last proviso of the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892, reading: "Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said lands and their children," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read:

"Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands and for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements for their benefit."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I was not present when that amendment was considered in the committee, or I would have insisted on an amendment to it. I have asked the Assistant Secretary if that fund could not be paid per capita to the Indians to improve their allotments. I should like to have the amendment go over, and I will offer an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the desire of the Senator that this amendment be passed over?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Florida," in section 4, page 27, line 23, after the word "education," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$5,000"; so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 4. For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can not understand that amendment. It seems to be a reduction of $3,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; and it has been agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Startling as it may seem, that expresses the action of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask if there are any other such surprising things in the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to injure his health by shocking the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. This is the only oasis of decrease in a desert of increase.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 28, after line 22, to insert:

IOWA.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to expend for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto, the sum of $10,334.96, together with the interest which has or may hereafter accrue thereon, remaining in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sac and Fox of the Mississippi Tribe of Indians of the State of Iowa, from the sum of $42,893.25 transferred to the credit of those Indians under the provisions of the act of June 10, 1896.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That does not involve an appropriation, as I understand, but simply allows the Indians to use a part of their funds?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I have nothing further to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 29, line 17, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$2,000; in all, $16,860," and insert "$4,000; in all, $18,860," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Kickapoo Reservation, Kans., including pay of superintendent, $14,860; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $18,860.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think we ought to accept the amount for repairs at the Kickapoo Indian school provided by the House. They allowed $2,000, and I do not think we ought to double that amount. We ought not to go through this bill merely increasing the allowances the House has made. If the House has in this one instance been a little economical, I think we ought to follow it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the desire of the Senator that this amendment be passed over?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not ask that it go over, but I am opposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division.

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment. Before the division is had, I wish to say that the committee gave this matter careful consideration, and at all times the committee had in view the condition of the Treasury. This is one of the increases made by the committee that would seem to be worthy and necessary. This appropriation was not increased merely for the purpose of making an increase or suggesting an amendment. The hearings before House committee and the hearings before the Senate committee convinced the committee, and I think all the members thereof, that this item, an increase of $2,000, was proper, expedient, wise, and just.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if it is not true that a good deal of the work of the committee was done before they realized the fact that there was an absolute necessity for our spending for the fiscal year 1917–18 nothing that we were not obliged to spend and that the policy of economy and retrenchment was essential? I do not say that if we had a bulging Treasury, with all the money we needed, it would not be a good investment, but what I am objecting to is to spending any money anywhere that it is not absolutely necessary to expend during the fiscal year 1917–18.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, at least one member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs realized when that committee was in session that we were facing a very large deficit. I do not think the committee was oblivious of that fact, nor does it seem to me that a bulging Treasury would justify unwarrantable appropriations.

The Indian situation presents this condition, and I should like the Senator from Georgia to consider it: When we were doling out rations and annuities to a large number of Indian tribes it took very little money to administer Indian affairs. The Government finally adopted the policy of individualizing the Indian, taking him out from his tribal condition, and as far as possible and as fast as possible making the individual Indian a self-sustaining being. It has been no easy problem; it has been a problem beset with difficulty; it has been a problem accompanied by many, many mistakes; but it does involve, and it will involve from year to year for some time to come, an increased expenditure. It costs more. When you try to make the Indian self-sustaining, when you have to have a larger personnel for administration to help guide and lead the Indian, when you begin to irrigate his land for him, when you begin to buy feed and machinery and stock for him, it is bound to cost more.

The Indian Committee went over this bill, and went over it carefully. Of course it is within the province of Senators to criticize it. It is within the province of Senators to express surprise that the Indian Committee may have reduced, here and there, an item in this bill; but I do not feel that the attitude that is taken toward the committee is exactly fair. It is perfectly proper, and I am finding no fault with that on the part of any Senator or group of Senators, to reject these items. But to say, as I have heard on the floor this afternoon, "Let us strike this; let us go for this," without waiting one moment to hear a justification for an item, it does seem to me, if I may be pardoned for the expression, is hardly the proper way to deal with a question where we have taken a people without their consent and placed them in the attitude of wards, we assuming the attitude of their guardians.

It may be that some items here could be deferred, although I think every item that has been increased is justified upon the principle either that buildings have reached the point where decay has set in, and the continuance of decay is not economy, or that postponing additional help to the Indians is not economy, and falls short of our duty to them.

Whatever is done I do hope that the consideration of this bill will not be proceeded with in a spirit which does seem to me, if I may be pardoned the expression, to be hardly the spirit with which to approach the consideration of a bill which involves our attitude not toward our equals, not toward our constituents, but toward a people that we hold as wards, we occupying the position assumed by ourselves of guardians.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am quite sure that when the Senator from Georgia has the information as to why the increase is made, he will not object to it. The Senator from Georgia was one of the Members of this body who made it possible for the white child to get a vocational education. This amount is requested for the construction of a building to instruct the Indian boy in shopwork, and for physical training, indoor training, which is necessary in that climate on account of the inclement weather. I am quite sure that the Senator from Georgia will not object to it. It is absolutely necessary, as was shown to the committee by the Indian Office.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order to preserve the parliamentary status, I ask that the consideration of the Indian bill be discontinued at this time, and that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that will be done. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FINLEY, OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. DAVID EDWARD FINLEY, late a Representative from the State of South Carolina, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. DAVID EDWARD FINLEY, a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

In accordance with the foregoing resolutions the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. LEVER, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, Mr. WHALEY, Mr. RAGSDALE, Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina, Mr. MOON, Mr. LLOYD, Mr. BELL, Mr. BARNHART, Mr. BLACKMON, Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, Mr. MANN, Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. KAHN, Mr. BRITT, and Mr. WASON.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask that they be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 331) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. DAVID E. FINLEY, late a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, under the second resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. FERNALD.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 27, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 26, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou from whom all blessings flow, humbly and reverently we bow before Thee and acknowledge our indebtedness and most devoutly pray that our gratitude may blossom into a fuller service to Thee and our fellow men; that thus we may lift ourselves and those with whom we come in contact into a purer atmosphere; that our religious energy may not waste itself in hollow forms and ceremonies, but become a living, vitalizing force under the divine leadership of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. J. Res. 182. Joint resolution authorizing an exhibition of the various activities of the Government service; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the code of international law proposed to the American Institute, now in session, for the purpose of securing the freedom of the seas for neutrals in time of war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20079, the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this is pension day, and while we are willing that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] should use the greater part of the day, yet we do not want to lose any of the rights of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or of the Committee on Pensions. If it can be understood and agreed that at a later hour in the day, say 5 o'clock, the bills on the calendar may be taken up and considered, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock pension bills be taken up.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Or immediately after the conclusion of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MANN. Pension bills on the Private Calendar, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock pension bills on the Private Calendar shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. SPARKMAN. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The request is that at the conclusion of this bill, if it is concluded before 5 o'clock—that is, the river and harbor bill—these pension bills on the Private Calendar shall be taken up for consideration, and if the river and harbor bill is not passed at 5 o'clock, or up to 5 o'clock, that these pension bills shall be taken up at 5 o'clock and be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if he can not eliminate that restriction so as to take up the pension bills after the disposition of the river and harbor bill, no matter when that occurs?

The SPEAKER. That is the first half of the proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I do not believe there will be difficulty in passing the river and harbor bill before 5 o'clock. But even if that contingency should not happen there would be opportunity to pass the pension bills after that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have no objection to having the pension bills taken up after the passage of the river and harbor bill, with the understanding that they are the first thing in order after that bill is passed, if carried over until to-morrow——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman changes his request, and——

Mr. ASHBROOK. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Florida——

The SPEAKER. And asks that at the conclusion of the discussion of the river and harbor bill the private pension bills shall be in order and shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean that if the river and harbor bill is not concluded to-day he wants to take it up to-morrow?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is what I desire.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have an appropriation bill ready, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is an appropriation bill ready for consideration to-morrow the first thing.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if that can not be agreed upon, I renew my original request as to 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock the private pension bills shall be taken up for consideration and that they shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. I think we had better make an arrangement to take up these bills at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill. In any event, it will only take a few minutes. There is every probability that we can get into the fortification bill to-day, notwithstanding that agreement.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any trouble about it if we finish the river and harbor bill at 5 or 6 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We can not foresee just what may happen, and——

Mr. MANN. I think they will get through the river and harbor bill long before that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that we can stay here for the gentleman's bills, say, until 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. ASHBROOK. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be crowded out and lose our rights to-day, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Who is to understand?

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman make the request that at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill to-day it shall be in order to consider pension bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill to-day pension bills on the Private Calendar be in order, and be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill to-day pension bills on the Private Calendar shall be in order, and that they shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To-day?

The SPEAKER. To-day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. What will be the status of these bills if the river and harbor bill is not passed to-day?

Mr. MANN. The status will be that after the committee rises these bills will be in order.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is all right.

Mr. MANN. Whether the river and harbor bill is voted on to-day or not.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Now let us see what the request is.

Mr. MANN. That at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill to-day, whether it be by passage or by the committee rising, it shall be in order to take up pension bills on the Private Calendar, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The request is that when the discussion of the river and harbor bill to-day ceases these pension bills shall be in order, and that they shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not understand that to be the request.

The SPEAKER. The request is that whenever you quit debating this river and harbor bill to-day, no difference whether you are through with the bill or not, these pension bills come up.

Mr. KITCHIN. To come up to-day, immediately afterwards.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, there are pending a number of bills that have been reported out by the Committee on Printing. Unfortunately, during the latter part of the last session of Congress the chairman of the Committee on Printing and one other member of the committee were unavoidably absent. There are 25 or 30 of these bills that ought to be passed. It will probably take an hour's time. I know the bills are privileged, but I would like to make some arrangement whereby we can take up these bills, and I would like to do it to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That can not be done. The fortifications appropriation bill is ready, and it is necessary to consider appropriation bills as promptly as possible.

Mr. BARNHART. These printing bills are privileged.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So are the appropriation bills. If the gentleman wants to contest the question of considering printing bills against appropriation bills, he can do that. The failure of these printing bills will not interfere with the summer vacation of Congress, but the failure of appropriation bills will, and Members will bear that in mind.

Mr. MANN. The printing bills affect the convenience of every Member of the House. I think the chairman of the Committee on Printing ought to have his chance.

Mr. BARNHART. Some of these measures are concurrent resolutions, and they are as important as some of the appropriation bills in some respects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; but the gentleman will undoubtedly have his chance.

Mr. BARNHART. The chairman of the Printing Committee has not asked to interrupt the proceedings at any time. If we do not get these bills through now, the probability is that later the Senate will have so much other business that it can not take care of them, and we will be left for the entire season. I think it is but fair to this committee, inasmuch as it has asked for no time and has not interrupted the proceedings of the House, that it be given time to consider these measures.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might get a chance for a little while this afternoon.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think we will get through with the river and harbor bill by 3 o'clock.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WICKERSHAM: Page 39, line 13, after the end of line 13 insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Snake River Harbor, Nome, Alaska: Completing improvement in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 1932, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, $105,000."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the river and harbor bill in the Sixty-third Congress carried an authorization for the survey of the Nome Harbor project. That survey has been made by the War Department and report made thereon. It is a favorable report, but it reached the Committee on Rivers and Harbors after this bill had been prepared and, as I understand, after it had been reported to the House, so the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no opportunity to give consideration to the project, although it has been fully and favorably reported upon by the War Department, in accordance with the authorization contained in the bill passed in the last Congress.

I have moved to add to this bill the project as reported favorably by the War Department, and I appeal to the House to give favorable consideration to the matter and to hear me upon the importance of this project.

The Nome Harbor is a roadstead in front of the town of Nome. In other words, there is no harbor there. Vessels coming to the port of Nome are obliged to anchor a mile offshore, and all freight destined for Nome and the Seward Peninsula is sent ashore in lighters. The town of Nome is at the mouth of the Snake River, and in the mouth of that river there is a good small harbor, but unfortunately there is no approach to it across the beach. The appropriation asked for in the amendment proposed is to open a passage across the beach into this well-protected harbor for the small vessels frequenting that port and for the entrance of steam lighters carrying freight from the ocean-going vessels at anchor a mile offshore. Of course, the opening of this channel to a depth of only 8 or 10 feet will not admit the larger vessels, but will expedite the unloading of these with steam lighters, which can thus run into the harbor and unload, and save them from the expense and danger of unloading on the shallow beach by cranes or otherwise. It will also afford a safe harbor for small vessels in case of storms. But on account of the sand bars along the beach there is no opportunity for vessels to get into Nome Harbor until the sand is cleared away and a passage made for the entrance of vessels. We asked for a much larger appropriation than has been allowed by the War Department for this work. We went before the Board on Rivers and Harbors and tried to induce them to give us a larger amount, but in their wisdom the board limited us to $105,000.

The people of Alaska have no complaint to make in respect to the way the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has treated that Territory. Every time we have presented a project before that committee it has met the fairest consideration, and I think without exception we have received what we have asked for. I am satisfied that if the report of the War Department in this case had reached the committee in time it would have been favorably acted upon and the project would have been in the bill, but unfortunately the report was late.

However fairly the River and Harbor Committee has treated Alaska, Alaska has also treated the committee fairly, because we have never had but two projects and two small appropriations for river or harbor improvements in the Territory. Alaska, with its magnificent harbors and great waterways, has asked very little from Congress and has always received that little promptly and with the very fairest possible treatment.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Can the gentleman give the amount of traffic in Nome Harbor?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And also will the gentleman state how far this bar extends out?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The bar does not extend very far; it is a sand bar, but it extends far enough to close the opening into Snake River Harbor. It is easily removed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But it will need some revetment?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We need a jetty on each side.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is there any tide there, and if so, how much?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The tide is very small, only a few inches, but we have heavy storms along that shore.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is for the want of a tide to keep the bar out?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; to a great extent.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How deep is the channel there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We want an 8 or 10 foot channel; we only have light-draft vessels, and we only need a fair channel to enable steam lighters and smaller vessels to get in. When a storm arises now, the large vessels, as well as the small ones, have to run 15 miles beyond Nome to get behind Sledge Island for safety.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How large is the natural harbor at the mouth of Snake River?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is not very large, but sufficient for all small vessels that go to that port if the entrance could be cleaned out and protected by jetties.

Now, I am asked to state something about the trade of Nome. Nome was opened in 1898, when the gold strike was made on the Seward Peninsula. From that time to this large quantities of gold have been extracted from the sand, even on this beach, and also behind it on the ancient beaches now covered in the tundra. Many millions of dollars have been extracted from these sands, and large amounts of merchandise have gone to the port for that work. These shipments have had to be landed from vessels anchored a mile offshore by the use of lighters. In 1915 the merchandise landed at Nome amounted to $1,110,345. In the seven years, 1909 to 1915, inclusive, the merchandise to Nome, lightered to shore from vessels anchored in the sea, amounted to $8,448,522, or more than $1,200,000 per annum.

The gold output from Nome, going out over this same beach in lighters to vessels anchored a mile away, amounted last year to $2,900,000, and in the seven years from 1910 to 1916, both inclusive, it amounted to $20,623,335, or nearly $3,000,000 per annum.

The following table gives the value of the imports of merchandise to Nome alone for the seven years 1909 to 1915, both inclusive, and the export of gold from the Seward Peninsula for the years 1910 to 1916, both inclusive:

	Merchandise.	Gold.
1909	$1,701,623
1910	1,145,758	$3,699,674
1911	1,060,993	3,246,498
1912	1,279,396	3,138,881
1913	1,223,599	2,239,057
1914	926,808	2,602,273
1915	1,110,345	2,796,952
1916		2,900,000
Total	8,448,522	20,623,335

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The merchandise landed at Nome is not all of the merchandise shipped to the Seward Peninsula. But all of the Nome merchandise is lightered to shore at large expense. It costs $4 or $5 additional for lightering. That would not all be taken off if this project was completed, but very largely it would be; there would probably be a saving of $2 or $3 a ton on all merchandise going to the Seward Peninsula if this project was completed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If I remember correctly, the purpose of this improvement is not only for the benefit of commerce by greatly reducing the charges, but also it gives a safe place for the smaller vessels to enter in case of storm.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; to all that go up and down the coast. There is no harbor within 20 miles of Nome on each side. If a storm rises, a vessel has to run to Sledge Island, 15 miles away, to get in a zone of safety.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This improvement is to a large extent, then, for a harbor of refuge?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; many small vessels have been piled up on the beach in front of Nome, the value of which would more than build this harbor. Many vessels of that kind have gone ashore, large losses in property have occurred, and many lives have been lost for the want of this harbor.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How much of the year is the harbor free from ice?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. For five months.

I hold in my hand a report made by the Geological Survey on the Seward Peninsula. The report says:

> The value of the gold output of Seward Peninsula in 1916 was about $2,900,000, which is the same as that of 1915. In addition to this, stream tin and tungsten and antimony ore were produced to the value of about $100,000.
>
> Twenty-nine gold dredges were operated on the peninsula in 1916, seven in the Nome district, four in the Solomon River district, nine in the Council district, four in the Port Clarence district, three in the Fairhaven district, and two in the Kougarok district. In addition two tin dredges were worked in the York district. About 65 deep placer mines and 30 open-cut plants were operated on the peninsula during 1916. One of the notable events of the year was the development of the placers on Dime Creek, in the Koyuk district, in the southeastern part of the peninsula. The summer output of this new district has not yet been learned, but the product of the winter's mining, which was carried on by eight plants, was $100,000. These placers carry considerable platinum. The only other place on the peninsula where platinum has been reported is in the placers of Bear Creek, in the Fairhaven district.
> Besides the tin, tungsten, and antimony mining on Seward Peninsula, already described, there was considerable prospecting of copper and gold lodes. Some graphite was also mined and shipped from the Port Clarence district.

There is enough placer sands at and near Nome to employ thousands of miners with dredges and other machinery for an indefinite term—for a long period of years—if facilities for transportation and safe and cheap landings can be provided. This project is intended to be a permanent improvement, one of the best improvements that could possibly be made for the development of that mineral-bearing peninsula. Its miners have taken out in seven years more than $20,000,000, and much more prior to that time. I hope this committee will consider this project as an independent proposition and as one that is immediately necessary and of great benefit to our people. I am sure the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would have favorably reported this project if the report had been made in time, but, unfortunately for us, we could not get it before the committee until this bill had been reported. The whole trade of Alaska is much more with the United States than the trade of China. In the last three years the trade of Alaska with the United States has amounted to more than $70,000,000 per annum, whereas the trade with China is not nearly so much.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that trade with Alaska growing or decreasing?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is a growing trade, and would increase more rapidly at this point if this project can be secured.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I might suggest that the trade with China is constantly decreasing.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That may be true; but that with Alaska is rapidly increasing, as the following comparative statement will show.

The following table shows the total imports and exports of Alaska for the years 1913, 1914, and 1915, and also the total imports and exports for the same period between the United States and China and the Philippines:

Country.	Years.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
China	1913	$40,120,826	$25,299,802	$65,420,628
	1914	36,313,770	20,367,701	56,681,471
	1915	52,837,503	19,752,824	72,590,327
Total, 3 years		129,272,099	65,420,327	194,692,426
Philippine Islands	1913	26,676,261	16,434,018	43,110,279
	1914	24,020,395	24,427,710	48,448,105
	1915	26,381,069	23,653,211	50,034,280
Total, 3 years		77,077,725	64,514,939	141,592,664
Alaska	1913	26,761,848	40,767,677	67,529,525
	1914	25,849,944	44,655,924	70,505,868
	1915	28,017,307	54,856,815	82,874,122
Total, 3 years		80,629,099	140,280,416	220,909,515

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the population of Nome?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. About 5,000, and of the Seward Peninsula about 7,000. The miners of the Seward Peninsula take out more placer gold from these sands and produce more per capita than any other group of miners in American territory. It is a very rich gold country. In answer to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] permit me to say that the total trade of Alaska with United States merchants exceeds the total trade and commerce of the United States with China or the Philippines or any other country in Asia, excepting only British India and Japan. It exceeds that of every country in South America, excepting only Argentina and Brazil. It exceeds that in every country in North America, except Canada, Mexico, and Cuba.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman be able to conclude in those five minutes?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the trade of Alaska with the United States is greater than the total trade between the United States and all countries on the African continent. Its trade with the United States is constantly increasing and is national in character. Alaska is the best customer the United States has in four continents, for every dollar in the Alaskan trade, both imports and exports, is an American dollar. There is no balance of trade against the United States in either direction. Every dollar flowing into or out of the United States in the Alaskan trade helps to increase the trade in the labor products of the whole United States and in developing the great natural resources of our common country.

The total amount of merchandise purchased in Alaska from merchants of the United States since its acquisition in 1867 amounts to $331,072,778. In that period the people engaged in developing Alaska have paid into the United States Treasury for internal revenue, customs, public lands, and other public dues the sum of $17,787,153. Alaska has produced more than 47 per cent of all the canned or other fish marketed from the Pacific coast, including Canadian waters. The value of the Alaskan fish and fur trade since 1867 now amounts to some $326,083,246. Alaska's mineral products for the same period amounts to the sum of $351,000,000.

Credit Alaska with her cash trade value since 1867:
Merchandise imported from the United States	$331,072,778
Cash paid into the United States Treasury	17,787,153
Production of fish and furs	326,083,246
Mineral production	351,000,000
Total trade value of Alaska since 1867	1,025,943,177
Charge Alaska with all national expenditures:
Purchase price paid to Russia	$7,200,000
Treasury Department expenditures, 1867–1916	43,904,681
Commerce Department expenditures, 1867–1916	7,271,657
Interior Department expenditures, 1867–1916	8,127,810

Total national expenditures account of Alaska	101,355,193
Trade balance due Alaska	924,587,984

The trade of Alaska with the United States for 1915 exceeded $82,000,000; that for 1916 will exceed $100,000,000; if that for 1917 shall be as large, the total trade balance due Alaska on October 18, 1917, the date of the semicentennial of its purchase from Russia, will exceed $1,000,000,000 over and beyond all the national expenditures made in its purchase, government, and development.

In other words, Alaska has brought into the channels of trade in the United States in production and trade more than a billion dollars since we purchased it in 1867, and that trade is growing, it is increasing every year. We have received in those 50 years for river and harbor improvements less than $250,000, and we now appeal to this House and to the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors especially, to help this Territory by including this project with its small appropriation for the building of one of the most needed harbors in Alaska Territory. I hope the committee will give us this project, because it is so important to us, and it will not tend in any way to open the door to a flood of other projects, which the chairman of the committee is probably justly afraid of. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think there is no question but that this item would have been included in the bill if the report had been received in time. I do not think that time is the essence of putting these projects in the bill. As has been already pointed out to you, the purpose of this improvement is to get 6½ feet of water at Nome, not only for the purpose of commerce but in order to furnish a harbor of refuge for those small vessels that have no other place to go in that portion of the sea. It very frequently happens that there are a number of vessels in that vicinity. No one will object on the merits of the proposition, and I think that we ought to put it in, although it was not received by the committee in time. It lacked only a few days and it was not due to the negligence of any one. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] secured the report as soon as he could. I know that I would have gotten it at the very earliest moment myself. I do not think that we can afford to be niggardly with the people of Alaska. When we consider the fact that during this last year that great Territory that cost us $7,200,000 has produced in wealth over $100,000,000 we can well afford to give them a few dollars to improve this harbor.

Let me call your attention for a moment to the conditions at Nome. They have a town which during the summer time has a population of about 7,000 people, and it has been estimated by the great English engineer, Mr. Richardson, that in the sand of Nome, along that beach in front of Nome itself, will be found a billion dollars in gold. That little stretch of sand is about 25 miles long and from 2 to 3 miles wide. If it runs at the rate of 25 cents a cubic yard there will be more than a billion dollars, and so far it has averaged over 50 cents a cubic yard, so there is at Nome a permanent community which as long as any of us will live, and years afterwards, will be taking out gold. I do not think that the House ought to hesitate a moment because this report was late in being received in giving this appropriation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a friendly inquiry?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. As bearing upon the log proposition, which was debated at some considerable length in the House yesterday, will it be possible to so arrange that the Government might get the gold taken out of the Snake River in making the improvement——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How is that?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This improvement involves the removal of sand in the Snake River in making this harbor improvement?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Unfortunately, let me say, the gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of order.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In view of the great wealth of that sand there it might be that the Government might actually be a gainer on this proposition.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, it might be.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How much is proposed to be appropriated by this amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. One hundred and five thousand dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does that complete it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That completes the entire project. The Government engineers report says that it ought to be all appropriated at once, so it can be done economically and be hurried along. They have a short season, as the gentleman knows, there for doing work, and it ought to be appropriated at one time. That is also sufficient for the maintenance for an additional year.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the report also requires the people of Nome to give a certain amount—I think $12,500.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; it requires the cooperation on the part of the people there also.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Which they have agreed to do.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the only objection that I could possibly have to this amendment is that the committee has not had time to consider it thoroughly as we usually consider such matters. The report came in after the bill was reported, and, although its date is some five days before the introduction of this bill, it was not received until a few days after the introduction of the bill in the House. On its face it appears to be a good proposition, a meritorious recommendation, and if it had come to us in time I have no doubt but what we would have inserted it in this bill. One objection now to it is the one just stated by the gentleman from Alaska, that it might open the door to other similar amendments, and for that reason we have heretofore strenuously objected to accepting amendments of this kind on the floor. I am going to leave this matter, however, entirely to the committee, believing if it is voted in the committee can protect us against any other similar amendments. I wish, however, to read the last paragraph of the report of the Chief of Engineers which is quite favorable. He says:

After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports—

That is the reports of the district and division engineers and the Board of Engineers—

I concur in the views of the district office, the division engineer, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that the improvement by the United States of mouth of Snake River and Nome Harbor, Alaska, is deemed advisable to the extent of dredging a basin in Snake River, with a connecting channel to Norton Sound 75 feet wide on the bottom and 8 feet deep at mean lower low water, revetting the banks of the river and constructing two jetties at the mouth, approximately as shown on accompanying map, except that the distance between jetties be increased as suggested by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, all at an estimated cost of $95,000 for first construction, $13,500 for maintenance the first year, and $7,500 per annum thereafter, provided that the city of Nome will furnish evidence satisfactory to the Secretary of War that it will contribute $2,500 annually toward the maintenance of the improvement and furnish all lands or easements necessary to the proper execution of the work. The first appropriation should be $105,000, covering the entire cost of construction, and the Government's share of the first year's maintenance.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported again. I want to see if the conditions imposed by the report are included in it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is to be adopted at all it should be adopted subject to the conditions set forth in said report.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to add to the amendment which I have proposed these words, "And subject to the conditions set forth in said document."

Mr. MANN. Where is that?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is to be added to the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is to go before the amount, "subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $105,000." That is the way it should read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the addition to the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 13, page 39, the following as a new paragraph:
"Snake River Harbor, Nome, Alaska: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1932, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $105,000."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will be agreed to——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. There has been no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. My understanding was there was objection. I do not want to start anything by advocating the amendment. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pawtucket River, R. I., with a view to increasing the width of channel through the ledge near Pawtucket.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BURGESS: Page 41, after line 8, insert:
"Sterling Basin at Greenpoint, N. Y., with a view of securing adequate width."

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inland water route along the southern shore of Long Island, N. Y., from Jamaica Bay to Peconic Bay, with a view to providing a channel of adequate width and depth.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. BURGESS: Page 41, after line 11, insert:
"Flushing Bay, N. Y."

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Smith Creek, Pamlico County, N. C.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 12, change the word "Smith" to "Smiths."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a navigable waterway, of suitable depth and width to answer the needs of commerce, connecting the waters of the Flint and Ocmulgee Rivers in the State of Georgia.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. BURGESS: Amend, on page 42, after line 21, by inserting:
"Ashley River S. C., from the Standard Wharf to the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. to Lambs, with a view of improving the channel to a depth of not less than 8 feet."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Savannah River at and near Augusta, Ga., for the purpose of determining what additional improvement is necessary, if any, in the interest of flood protection; also the consideration of any proposition for co-operation on the part of local or State interests.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Some time ago we created what is called the Flood Control Committee, or something of that sort. There was considerable discussion in the House at that time, coming partly from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], who became chairman of that committee, and partly from the various members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of which he was then a member, in regard to what jurisdiction the Flood Control Committee would have. This bill, I think, for the first time carries a number of items in it in language in regard to flood control. Having created a new committee of the House for the purpose of studying protection against floods, thereupon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors inaugurates the policy of including the same character of items in the river and harbor bill. What is the use of the Flood Control Committee? I suppose every member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors asks that question. We carry in the item a provision for flood control on the Mississippi River without any contribution from the local interests.

The flood bill that passed the House provided for contributions from the local interests. That was seriously attacked by various gentlemen on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because they said it would not require sufficient contribution from such interests. So they bring in a bill requiring no contribution from the local interests. I wanted to inquire just how far it is the intention of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to go along the line of protection from flood, in the hope that I could at least get a statement either from the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee or the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is it the purpose of the two committees to simply overlap each other's jurisdiction, or is it the intention of either committee to make any pretense of remaining within the bounds of its own jurisdiction?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that amendment be reported again.

Mr. MANN. There was no amendment. I reserved the point of order on the paragraph providing for investigation relating to flood protection on the Savannah River. I shall not make the point of order, because I did not make a point of order on other items of a similar character in the bill, but I would like to know how far it is the intention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to go along the lines of flood protection?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to answer the question so far as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is concerned. The reason we insert the Savannah River item, and, if there are others, the reason for inserting them, is that it may be developed that an improvement of that kind is in the interest of navigation. But, independent of that, it seems that the Committee on Flood Protection has no authority to make appropriations and that about the only way these investigations can be made is to have some committee authorize the investigation which has the authority to make appropriations to have the work done. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, having that authority, having jurisdiction generally of the subject matter of the improvement of rivers, we thought that committee was a proper one, if not the only one, to make these authorizations.

Now, it is true that heretofore we have been very careful about inserting provisions in the river and harbor bill authorizing surveys for work in the interest of flood protection, but since the creation of the Committee on Flood Protection we have felt at liberty to go a little further than we had heretofore been going. Hence this provision regarding the Savannah River and perhaps some others may be found in that part of the bill containing surveys. That, I believe, is an answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question as to the jurisdiction of the two committees was thrashed out very fully at the time the Flood Control Committee was organized. I was interested in ascertaining what point of order the gentleman from Illinois made, but I do not propose to ask him now. I assume he would have made the point of order on the ground——

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be some others here that will make the point of order. It is still pending.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). That this matter was not properly before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I want to ask the gentleman this——

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield, but it is not my time.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it not true that the Flood Control Committee has only control over the Mississippi and the Sacramento Rivers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Up to date that is all——

Mr. BOOHER. Is not its action confined to those two rivers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think not, according to the understanding at the time the Flood Control Committee was formed.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no limit whatsoever.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only bill brought in by the Flood Control Committee and considered by the House was one pertaining to the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers.

What I want to ask the gentleman from Florida is this: The Flood Control Committee has not power to appropriate, it can only authorize an appropriation. It has not had an opportunity to pass upon this particular matter. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, therefore, has gone along in the usual way to provide for such rivers as it thinks it should provide for, in the matter of navigation, whether it involves the controlling of floods or not. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has simply performed the functions assigned to it and has exercised its jurisdiction in this instance, pending whatever may happen as to the Committee on Flood Control when it gets into action. As the Savannah River is a navigable stream, and the Flood Control Committee not being in the harness to meet the situation, as it were, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is meeting the emergency?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is it; and I would say further, Mr. Chairman, that if this survey should develop the fact that the only improvement needed there is flood protection and not for navigation, it would go to the Committee on Flood Control for authorization. I am quite sure the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would not claim jurisdiction under those circumstances.

Now, the item reads:

Savannah River at and near Augusta, Ga., for the purpose of determining what additional improvement is necessary, if any, in the interest of flood protection; also the consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local or State interests.

I think that this committee has jurisdiction of just such propositions as that under the circumstances. It might have been worded a little differently. For instance, it might have read, "necessary in the interest of navigation and flood protection," and I am perfectly willing to offer this amendment: After the word "of," on line 3, insert the words "navigation and," which I fancy will remove the trouble.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order is pending. The amendment can not be considered until the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is a point of order pending? I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a point of order and then withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. He reserved it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the point of order is still reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the reservation of the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin renews the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the point of order having been made, and discussion having ensued thereon, it is too late now to make a new point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the facts are these: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a reservation of the point of order. During the discussion on the reservation he said he did not intend to press the point of order, but he did not, up to that time, and not until a moment ago, withdraw the reservation. Of course, no one had a right to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois when he said he did not intend to press the point of order. It was still pending under the parliamentary procedure of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as I recall the facts, they are these: The gentleman from Illinois rose and reserved a point of order. There was discussion under the reservation of the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois took his seat, indicating that he did not intend to make the point of order. Then there was discussion. Then the Chairman's attention being called to the fact and the attention of the gentleman from Illinois being called to the fact, the gentleman from Illinois made the declaration that he had withdrawn the point of order. Then the gentleman from Wisconsin made his point, whereupon I contended he came too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order, and at the close of his remarks he withdrew the point of order, and the reservation was renewed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. There was no withdrawal of the point of order on this paragraph. The point of order is pending on this paragraph, and it will be reserved on the paragraph.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very clear that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of this matter, and they have never before undertaken to exercise that jurisdiction. The committee has, in fact, always refused to entertain amendments of this character up until now. The Senate Committee on Commerce, which has a broader jurisdiction than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has during the past two or three years incorporated in the bill when it got to the Senate amendments providing for surveys looking to the control of floods in the various streams of the country, and those amendments were agreed to in conference, and therefore carried in the river and harbor bill. But this is the first time that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, as I understand it, has ever undertaken itself to exercise this jurisdiction.

Now, the reason I, as chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, made no point against it is this: That committee, as you know, is a new committee. We undertook last year in the bill that we passed to create the machinery whereby flood problems throughout the country could be properly investigated. Under the law as it stands to-day when these investigations are made the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors must, in making their report, limit their recommendations to the question of navigation, and unless the project is considered worthy in view of navigation interests the report is unfavorable. This bill that we passed through the House from the Flood Control Committee would broaden the power and scope of the engineers in their investigations, and in making their recommendations to Congress they would not be limited to the sole question of the navigation interests, but any other Federal interest might be involved in it. But that bill has not yet become a law.

Now, with that bill pending in the Senate but never having been enacted into law, the Flood Control Committee was just in this attitude: We were unable to give any relief to gentlemen who sought surveys for the purpose of investigating flood problems. We were unable to do it ourselves, and, whereas the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no jurisdiction of the subject matter, if we made a point of order against it it meant simply that nothing would be done.

For that reason as chairman of the committee I did not raise the point. There can be, I think, no question but that the Flood Control Committee has exclusive jurisdiction of the subject matter and that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill carries two items heretofore carried for the relief of the Mississippi and the Sacramento Rivers. I realize the doubt as to the passage through the Senate of the flood-control bill. I did not make any point of order against either of these propositions, thinking they were matters that should be continued. Now here we have a new policy. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he thinks it proper, in view of the fact that his committee is charged with the full consideration of the subject, to have another committee single out one or two items relating to flood control, and whether it is conducive to good legislation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not think I would like to answer that question, except to say that I believe the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. But has the committee of which the gentleman is chairman given consideration to the question of surveys of various projects?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, we have. There are a number pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not this be a case of singling out some projects and barring others that are being considered by the Committee on Flood Control?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Committee on Flood Control has before it, I think, 10 reports on preliminary surveys that were ordered in the river and harbor bill, by virtue of amendments put on in the Senate two years ago; but as I say, we have no machinery in the War Department by which we can make these investigations until this flood-control bill passes the Senate. We have the jurisdiction but we have no organized court. We have no sheriff to execute our orders.

Mr. VINSON. I should like to ask the gentleman if this provision in the river and harbor bill to which the point of order has been made would not, by obtaining this survey, facilitate the work before the Flood Control Committee on this same subject.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly it would expedite it.

Mr. VINSON. Otherwise, as the flood-control bill is on a slow road to passage in the Senate, it means that these projects, which may be meritorious, must be held in abeyance, does it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think so. Nevertheless, it is a matter over which the Rivers and Harbors Committee have no jurisdiction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the committee of which the gentleman is chairman has given consideration to surveys of various flood-control projects?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. As I stated, we have a number before us. We have just been waiting until the Senate acts on the flood-control bill, to see whether they will pass the bill creating the machinery in the War Department whereby all these surveys can be made. We have just been waiting for the Senate to act. If the Senate acts, I think our committee is ready to act on the various propositions for surveys now pending in the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not within the province of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report items providing for flood control.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to have the Clerk report the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not an amendment; it is a paragraph in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. There was an amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. But a point of order was pending. It could not be offered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand no amendment is permissible until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. EDWARDS. An amendment could be offered by unanimous consent, could it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It could be offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee may be considered pending. I would like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that this is an important matter to the section affected. There is no conflict between the Committee on Flood Control and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The chairman of the Committee on Flood Control has explained the situation, and so has the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This item affects most largely the district represented by my colleague [Mr. VINSON]. He is on the Flood Control Committee. There is no desire on the part of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to appropriate any of the functions and powers of any other committee, and no particular objection has come from anybody on the Flood Control Committee. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the amendment offered by the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee be considered pending, which will obviate the point of order; and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will not interpose any objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would not obviate the point of order.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think it would.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman that it would not; but, reserving the point, I will ask the gentleman if he will yield to me, to allow me to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is another item in the bill subject to a like point of order, relating to some flood-control arrangements between the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, of the waters along the boundaries of those States. I wish to make an inquiry which is rather out of order, but my position will be guided somewhat by the purpose to be covered by that survey. Of course, there is no navigation connected with the proposal as found on page 45. It is purely a flood-control proposition.

Mr. SMALL. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will say that this is a proposition which has been pending for some time between those States. They wish to enter into a compact, and under the Constitution it requires the consent of Congress to do so. They wish to enter into a compact with a view of making an agreement relative to certain boundary streams, as well as their tributaries, which go through these States to some extent, with a view to their improvement for flood protection as well as navigation. They propose to cooperate in furnishing the money for the investigation and to pay the entire expense of the improvement if upon a survey such improvement shall be deemed advisable. The purpose of this is simply to authorize them to enter into a compact and to authorize the Secretary of War to make this investigation in order to determine its advisability.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire of the gentleman from Texas having charge of the committee amendments for surveys whether it is proposed to offer any committee amendment looking to a survey which embodies the policy of flood control?

Mr. BURGESS. I think not.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is inquiring about the Minnesota-North Dakota-South Dakota proposition?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. When that item is reached, we have a substitute to offer for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to play favorites, but I do wish to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction of committees. If these are the only two items I am ready, with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. I will say that there is to be no other amendment offered along that line.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 43, line 3, by inserting, after the word "of," the words "navigation and of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 42, line 16, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 42, line 16, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, let the amendment first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, after line 16, insert:
"Lynchs River, S. C."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Withlacoochee River, Fla., between Dunnellon and Lake Panasoffkee.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On yesterday I offered an amendment on page 32 in this bill, after line 11, in effect preventing the impounding of water above the Keokuk Dam in the Mississippi River. The situation there is simply intolerable. Boats are being held up for hours in order that this company may pay the dividends it thinks it ought to pay. I do not want to insist on that amendment at this time—the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would have jurisdiction of any resolution that I might submit on that question—if the chairman will assure me that if I introduce a resolution of that kind the committee will find some time during the session to consider it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has ample jurisdiction to make that investigation. After this bill is completed I probably shall not be here for the next two weeks, but there are other members of the committee who can and will be able to take the matter up and make the necessary investigation. I am authorized to say that.

Mr. RAINEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 32, line 11, for the purpose of withdrawing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 32, line 11, and withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hillsboro River, Fla., from Michigan Avenue to Lafayette Street Bridge, Tampa.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 19, page 43, after the word "Tampa," by inserting:
"Back Bay of Biloxi, Miss., with a view to removing shoals at Cranes Neck and Biloxi mud flats and securing a depth of 12 feet."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bayou Tigre, La.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, after line 20, insert:
"Bayou Tennebonne between Houma and Thibodaux."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 43, after line 20, insert:
"Bayou Dorcheat, La., through Lake Bistineau and Loggy Bayou."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Intracoastal waterway from Calcasieu River, La., to Sabine River, Tex. and La., with a view to securing such width and depth as will meet the demands of commerce.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of inquiring what an intracoastal waterway is, whether it is the same as would ordinarily be known as a canal? It seems to me that it is beyond the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee if it is a canal. I am not sure as to it, and therefore I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, it might or might not involve the construction of a canal, but according to my understanding the waterway in that particular locality does not and will not involve the construction of a canal.

Mr. TREADWAY. It does not involve the construction of a canal?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It does not is my understanding.

Mr. BURGESS. It does not involve the construction of a canal.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is merely an improvement of an intracoastal waterway already existing.

Mr. TREADWAY. The waterway is there, and the idea is to get a greater depth of natural waterway?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lake Bluff Harbor, Ill.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, after line 23, insert:
"Pentwater Harbor, Mich."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURGESS. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Lake Bluff Harbor, Ill.," in line 25, page 44, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Bar in Lake Michigan in front of United States Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill., with a view to dredging said bar so as to permit lake vessels to land at said station."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to make such preliminary examinations as can be made from available data without making field surveys, touching the creation of conditions in or paralleling the St. Lawrence River from its head to tidewater, suitable in all respects for navigation by ocean-going ships, including such approximate estimate of cost of improvement as can be predicated on such available data, and an approximation of the amount of power, if any, that would be incident thereto.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I would like to know what we have to do with the St. Lawrence River over on the Canadian side?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this item was presented to the committee by a member of the committee, Mr. GALLAGHER, of Chicago, and behind him were certain gentlemen of the same city who were reputed to be men of intelligence and affairs there.

Mr. MANN. But that has nothing to do with the item. What does it mean?

Mr. SMALL. And we were told that the business interests of the country would be subserved by securing this information. It requires no surveys. It requires only an examination of available data, and while the gentleman's observation that we have nothing to do with the St. Lawrence River is correct, yet that data, as it was represented to us, would be valuable in determining certain improvements within our own country and in the section of the Great Lakes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this requires an examination.

Touching the creation of conditions in or paralleling the St. Lawrence River from its head to tide water, suitable in all respects for navigation by ocean-going ships.

In the first place, it is exceedingly poor language; it is not grammatical. What it means the gentleman from North Carolina may know, but I can not understand without an explanation.

Mr. SMALL. The item was submitted to the Chief of Engineers and the final draft of it had the approval of the Board of Engineers.

Mr. MANN. They are not supposed to be expert grammarians like the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. Nor like the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. What have we to do with it? What is the purpose of it? To provide for a report upon a canal from Lake Erie paralleling the St. Lawrence River, to be constructed by the Government of the United States through Canadian territory?

Mr. SMALL. It was assumed that this information would have to be obtained from official records of the Dominion of Canada, from such information as was available to every one, or from such information as would be furnished upon application by our Government. I will be candid and say that the exact relationship to the waterways of our own country was not made entirely clear to us, but representations were made that the information which would be developed by the study and the coordination of the same would be of value to the United States. That is as clear as I can put it at this time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can understand the position of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] who believe that we ought to have an intracoastal waterway running from Boston down the Atlantic coast, going across Florida and running across the Gulf coast to the farther end of the Texas coast line, but do I understand the gentleman to think that it is necessary to supplement that by a canal paralleling the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. SMALL. If I were to answer the query of the gentleman I would say that so far as I know it has no reference or connection, direct or indirect, to or with any intracoastal waterway in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Is it necessary to have a canal paralleling the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. SMALL. That necessity would probably appear from the information which will be obtained as the result of this item.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may think so. I do not think it is the business of the United States to build a canal through Canadian territory paralleling the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. SMALL. I would remind the gentleman that this item had its inception in the city of Chicago, and, of course, he will not admit that anything wrong could proceed from that city.

Mr. MANN. That is the only argument the gentleman has yet offered in favor of it, and while a great many good things emanate from Chicago, some people think that everything there is not entirely pure. I make the point of order against the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the paragraph. The Chair does not think——

Mr. SMALL. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Oh, that it is not within the privilege of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report propositions of this kind in reference to constructing a canal nor in reference to improving the St. Lawrence River on Canadian soil.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not clear to my mind that the paragraph is subject to a point of order. A part of that river is in the United States and it is a navigable stream and to that extent this committee has jurisdiction of it. I care, myself, very little about the possession. As has been stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], it was inserted at the request of other parties, and it was not made very clear just why it was needed; but, as he also stated, the Chief of Engineers thought that the information called for and which is to be gathered from data already at hand without necessity for instrumental surveys, would be of use to the Congress and to the department; hence it was inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have sufficient jurisdiction to authorize the investigation of conditions on the St. Lawrence River elsewhere than in the territory of the United States. This paragraph is not limited to data that may be in existence now in the office of the Chief of Engineers, but authorizes the Secretary of War to compile available data without making any surveys, touching conditions in or parallel with the St. Lawrence River outside of the United States. The Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made of any river or rivers situated within or along the boundaries of the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, to be designated by the governors of each of said States, for the purpose of improving navigation or of preventing or controlling flood waters therein, and may accept contributions of local funds for use in making said investigations. If a favorable report shall be submitted with plans for such improvement and estimates of cost, the said States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota are hereby authorized to enter into an agreement or compact with each other for the purpose of providing the necessary funds in such proportions as may be agreed upon between said States for the purpose of executing such works of improvement, and when the necessary funds therefor shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, the Secretary of War is hereby directed, under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, to construct and complete such works of improvement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 12 to 25, both inclusive, on page 45, and lines 1 to 5, both inclusive, on page 46, and insert in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

"That the Congress consents that the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, or any two of them, may enter into any agreement or agreements or compacts with each other to improve navigation and to lessen and prevent floods on boundary waters of said States and the waters tributary thereto, and said States, or any two of them, are authorized to and may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, make such improvements.

"The Secretary of War is authorized to make a survey of any project proposed by the governors of said States, or any two of them, to determine the feasibility thereof and the expenses of carrying the same into effect, and what share of such expenses should be borne by the different States, local interests, or by the National Government; and he may accept contributions of local funds for use in making such investigations. If the Secretary of War approves any such project, and said States, or any two of them, consent thereto, he is hereby authorized to make such improvements under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, provided the necessary funds therefor are furnished by said States, or either of them, or from any other source."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the draft of the amendment proposed as a substitute was submitted by two gentlemen from Minnesota, Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. STEENERSON. Deeming the language in the substitute more appropriate than the language in the bill, and in deference to their judgment, the committee were entirely willing to adopt the substitute agreeable to the gentlemen from Minnesota, whom we understood also represent as to the approval of this substitute the gentlemen from North and South Dakota.

The committee has no objection to the substitute and I move that it be adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment has been read and I would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota make some explanation of the purpose of it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in order to establish a reason for this legislation it will be necessary to call attention to the fact that for 280 miles the boundary between Minnesota and the two States of North and South Dakota consists of lakes and rivers. The State of Minnesota being the oldest State early undertook a general system of drainage and reclamation of overflowed land and thousands of miles of ditches were constructed, especially in the valley of the Red River and in the vicinity of Lakes Big Stone and Traverse. Those two lakes are boundary waters about 30 miles in length each. The States of South Dakota and North Dakota also a little later, as soon as their lands were settled and the Indian titles extinguished, drained into these boundary waters.

In the last two or three years, however, owing probably to the fact that the rains have been heavy, large tracts of land which formerly had been rich agricultural lands and been under cultivation were overflowed in the vicinity of Lake Traverse, on both sides of the lake, both on the Minnesota and on the South Dakota and North Dakota sides, and large tracts along the Red River of the North were also overflowed. These lands were cultivated and were rich farming lands. Last summer the States of North Dakota and South Dakota brought two original actions or suits in the Supreme Court of the United States against Minnesota in which it is claimed that the State of Minnesota through its municipalities and through its direct authority had diverted the surface waters from their natural channels into Lake Traverse, one of the boundary waters, to the detriment of the lands in South Dakota and North Dakota. The three States are now considering how these difficulties may be arranged by mutual agreements and improvements.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand that what you want is for the Congress to consent that these States may make an agreement?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. And I want to explain the urgency for this authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman has proceeded far enough.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is a great urgency. They want authority to agree upon plans for the improvement of these waters, so as to not only improve navigation thereon but facilitate drainage and prevent floods, and incidentally develop water power. I hope that the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman has so completely convinced the House in the very few moments that we are ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has so thoroughly convinced the committee of the necessity for it that I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice the amendment provides that the Secretary of War shall make survey to determine the amount to be contributed by the General Government, and the feasibility, and so forth. I think that ought not to read "determine." I do not think the Secretary of War can determine the amount the Federal Government may be called upon to contribute. It might be "to report upon." The word "determine" ought to be changed. That is in the second paragraph.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that the expenses of this survey are to be borne by the local interests under the provision of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is not the point. The amendment reads:

The Secretary of War is authorized to make a survey of any project proposed by the governors of said States, or any two of them, to determine the feasibility thereof, and the expenses of carrying the same into effect, and what share of such expenses shall be borne by the different States, local interests, or by the National Government.

The Secretary of War can not "determine" the amount.

Mr. SMALL. What language would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. "Report upon."

Mr. SMALL. I suggest you accept that.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] heard.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] wants to be heard.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, in the third line of the second paragraph, the word "determine" and insert in lieu thereof "report upon."

Mr. SMALL. I hope the amendment will be adopted, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment, in the third line of the second paragraph, by striking out the word "determine" and inserting the words "report upon."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois? Did he intend that the word "determine" was to be displaced where it is and the words "report upon" put in its place?

Mr. MANN. Strike out "determine" and insert "report upon."

Mr. SMALL. In substitution for "determine"?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this item. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Controller Bay, Alaska.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. BURGESS: Page 44, after line 4, insert: "Galveston Bay, at Smiths Point, Tex."

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co., of Kansas, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and it is hereby, granted authority to maintain its wharf, known as "long wharf," in the harbor of San Diego, Cal., where the same extends across certain submerged lands of the United States, ceded to the United States by act of the Legislature of the State of California, approved March 9, 1897, which said submerged lands lie in front of certain upland property of the United States described as lots 1 to 19 of block 18 of the city of San Diego, upon the following conditions and limitations: That the United States shall have free use of the so-called "west wharf" of the said railway company, adjoining and connected with the said "long wharf" in the harbor of San Diego, under such rules and regulations as may from time to time be agreed upon between the local representatives of the railway company, and the commanding officer of Fort Rosecrans, Cal.: Provided, That if, at any time, the said parties shall fail to agree as to said rules and regulations, the then existing status of the occupancy and use of said wharf shall not be disturbed until the controversy shall be referred to the general manager of the railway company and the department commander, Western Department, United States Army, for decision, and an agreement shall have been reached by them in the matter: Provided further, That the United States shall have the right to make such improvements to the said "west wharf" at its own expense as may be necessary to give the United States adequate and reasonable accommodations, provided such improvements shall be made without unnecessary interference with the operation of the railway company in its relations to the public as a common carrier and in its use of the said wharf as such common carrier: And provided further, That the railway company shall not be required to add to or alter the said "west wharf" or to add to or alter the warehouse and storeroom accommodations connected therewith. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section just read. I would like to engage the attention of the chairman of the committee. I wish the chairman would direct my attention to the page in the report where this proposal is referred to. I have endeavored to locate it in this voluminous report of over 500 pages and have not been able to find any provision in reference to it whatever on any of the substantive provisions carried in the later sections of the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It does not seem to be in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the chairman further if there is anything contained in this voluminous report relating to these substantive items in these later sections of the bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Probably not. I am not sure about that. But I hold in my hand here, Mr. Chairman, a letter from the Secretary of War regarding this matter and approving the provision in the bill. I will ask that it be read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we ought to have some information as to the need of this, because nothing is stated in the report.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Clerk read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 23, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 26th ultimo, with which you forwarded to this department a copy of H. R. 14790, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, providing for "granting to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. the right to maintain a wharf across certain submerged lands of the United States in the harbor of San Diego, Cal.," and requested to be furnished with the opinion of the War Department on the measure, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

The accompanying bill (H. R. 14790) proposes to grant, under certain conditions contained therein, permission to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. to maintain its existing "Long Wharf" in San Diego Bay, a portion of which, in its present location, occupies certain land under water belonging to the United States and forming a part of the San Diego Barracks Reservation.

The matter of securing permission to continue the occupancy of this land was presented in a letter of the railway company dated October 7, 1915, and forwarded to this department by the district Engineer officer at Los Angeles on October 13, 1915. In pursuance of this, and in accordance with recommendations of the department commander, a license was granted by the War Department, subject to the action which might be taken by Congress.

The bill to which you refer is drafted substantially in accordance with the conditions heretofore approved by the War Department, but it is understood that the word "eight," in line 1, page 2, should be changed to "eighteen," and that the word "manner," in line 16 of the same page, should read "matter."

It does not appear that the interests of navigation will be materially affected by the enactment of the proposed legislation, and no objection to its enactment is apparent to this department.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say that the provision in the bill is an exact copy, as I understand it, of the bill to which reference is made and which was introduced, I think, by Mr. KETTNER, of California, together with the amendments suggested in the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. STAFFORD. By this provision we are not merely confirming a license or permit that may be issued by the Secretary of War, but we are conferring upon the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. a permanent right to use the wharves in front of Government-owned lands and over other Government lands. I can not see any exigency that could require the insertion in this bill of an item of this importance, even though the Secretary of War says there is no objection to it. Unless the gentleman can advance some reason why there is a special exigency for it I shall press the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is, and I think that letter so states, that the railroad has been going over that land for quite a time under a license which will soon expire, and it is necessary if it is to be renewed that Congress should take this action.

Mr. STAFFORD. This paragraph does not delegate to the Secretary of War the authorization of a license. It is a permanent grant. I think the matter is altogether too important to be annexed as a rider to an appropriation bill, especially as the report gives no information, and none as to where Members can obtain knowledge as to its merits. Therefore, I feel justified in pressing the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the paragraph is subject to a point of order. The wharf is on navigable waters, and we are dealing with navigable waters and the facilities at times for reaching navigable waters. For instance, we have undoubted jurisdiction of terminal facilities under certain circumstances. We have the right to impose as a condition precedent to an improvement the leasing of terminals. Why have we not equal jurisdiction to make the requirement on a railroad company after an improvement is made that we have before the improvement is undertaken?

The CHAIRMAN. Is this a proposition to authorize the Santa Fe Railroad to establish a terminal on public land?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is a provision authorizing the railroad to cross Government land to reach a wharf already in existence.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr Chairman, this proposed authorization is not only to cross Government-owned lands but those lands that are submerged and under water. It is now occupied by this same railway company, and this legislation is in response to a letter from the Secretary of War to the railway company, as is stated in the letter just read at the Clerk's desk, suggesting to them that they should get a conditional grant or authorization of the privilege respecting the use of the terminal. I submit it is not subject to a point of order.

It refers to lands owned by the Government, lands which are submerged, lands which are under the control of the War Department, lands which were acquired by the United States in connection with the improvements in the harbor at San Diego, and it is entirely within the jurisdiction of this committee. It is not only without injury to the United States but it is in pursuance of a recommendation made by the Secretary of War that the railway company obtain a conditional permission to occupy the property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire does this provision add to the terminal facilities of the railroad company, or does it give them permission to use this water front?

Mr. SMALL. It grants permission to use certain lands under water as part of its terminal.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in error. It simply authorizes the permanent use of the wharf by a railroad company.

Mr. SMALL. It is not a permanent occupation.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says so here.

Mr. SMALL. It is under certain conditions, under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] introduced this provision and is greatly interested in its adoption. San Diego is his home city and it has a great harbor. Unfortunately Mr. KETTNER is not in the Chamber at this moment, having been called to the Navy Department on an important mission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the jurisdiction of this committee is over rivers and harbors. This proposition is to grant the use of this wharf as a railroad terminal. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That Bayou Meto in the State of Arkansas be, and the same is hereby declared to be, a nonnavigable stream, within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States. The right of the Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire what is the necessity of declaring Bayou Meto nonnavigable? If it is a minor matter, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to the point of order. There is a precedent for this legislation in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am merely seeking to get information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. The information is this, Mr. Chairman: The object of this legislation is to reclaim for farming purposes about 80,000 or 100,000 acres of very rich land.

Mr. STAFFORD. The title of which is in the State of Arkansas?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. No, sir; in individuals.

Mr. STAFFORD. The United States has no claim whatever on it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. No, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the public-buildings bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the public-buildings bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 4 of the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894, as amended by section 11 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to prescribe such regulations for the use, administration, and navigation of the navigable waters of the United States as in his judgment the public necessity may require for the protection of life and property, or of operations of the United States in channel improvement, covering all matters not specifically delegated by law to some other executive department. Such regulations shall be posted, in conspicuous and appropriate places, for the information of the public; and every person and every corporation which shall violate such regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction such offense may have been committed, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this section also for the purpose of obtaining information as to the extent to which this changes existing law.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the section of which this is amendatory is section 11 of the river and harbor act of 1902, which reads as follows:

SEC. 11. That section 4 of the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to prescribe such rules and regulations for the use, administration, and navigation of any or all canals and similar works of navigation that now are or that hereafter may be owned, operated, or maintained by the United States as in his judgment the public necessity may require; and he is also authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the speed and movement of vessels and other water craft in any public navigable channel which has been improved under authority of Congress whenever in his judgment such regulations are necessary to protect such improved channels from injury or to prevent interference with the operations of the United States in improving navigable waters or injury to any plant that may be employed in such operations. Such rules and regulations shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places for the information of the public; and every person and every corporation which shall violate such rules and regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction such offense may have been committed shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court."

The purpose of this is simply to enlarge the authority of the War Department to make regulations for its channels under improvement and for the movements of steamboats in such channels, either while under improvement or when improved. In other words, it has been found that while the Bureau of Commerce has large powers as to the control and operation of the steamboats themselves, yet frequently they are not applicable to regulations which are necessary in order to maintain the safety of channels and the safety of the work while the channels are under improvement. This is simply for the purpose of enlarging that authority so that the War Department may have more control over its channels, either in process of improvement or after they are improved.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a very brief question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Is not the purpose and effect of this amendment to meet the conditions of congestion, especially with regard to the manner in which the work of improvement is now going on in New York Harbor?

Mr. SMALL. As a matter of fact, its necessity is more acute in the large harbors, particularly in New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is some pressing need for it at the present time to meet the exigency?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the War Department is pressing it, I do not wish to insist on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That section 9 of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That in the execution and inspection of river and harbor works, engineer officers are authorized to hire and use such transportation as may be necessary for the most economical and advantageous prosecution of the work."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an explanation of its necessity?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. In connection with this paragraph I will have read from the Clerk's desk a memorandum from the War Department relating to the necessity for this provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Memorandum.]

TRANSPORTATION ON RIVER AND HARBOR WORKS.

The river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, contains the following provision:

"SEC. 9. In their execution and inspection of river and harbor work at points beyond easy reach of ordinary regular transportation lines engineer officers are authorized to hire and use such transportation as they may consider desirable and advantageous to the progress of the work."

The usefulness of this provision has in a large measure been defeated by the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury, as shown in the following instance:

In the Kansas City district, in order to expedite the business of the Government in connection with the inspection and supervision of river and harbor works in the charge of Lieut. Col. Henry Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, and in connection with examinations and investigations which he was required to make by direction and authority of Congress, it became necessary to furnish transportation to Capt. Robert S. Thomas, Corps of Engineers, and certain civilian employees.

The journeys were made by automobile upon two occasions between two points on a railway paralleling the the Missouri River above Kansas City, about 46 miles apart. To have used the railway would have involved a wait on each occasion of about 25 hours, until the next day, while each journey was made by automobile in the early evening in about 4 hours. Thus by the use of the automobile practically two entire days were saved to the Government, while the cost to the Government of one day's services, with railway travel allowances, of the persons who used the automobile would have amounted to more than was paid for the use of the automobile.

The account was disallowed by the auditor on the ground that—

"The laws relating to transportation contemplate that reimbursement or mileage shall be paid only where the travel incurred is over the shortest usually traveled route, by the mode usually adopted, and by conveyances usually employed. The places between which this expense was incurred are directly connected by railroad and the usual mode of travel is by train. The hire of an automobile is an extraordinary means of transportation, which does not appear to be authorized by section 9 of the river and harbor act of July 25, 1912, which only authorizes the hire of private conveyance at points beyond easy reach of ordinary regular transportation lines."

On appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury the following decision was rendered by him:

"In their execution and inspection of river and harbor improvement work at points beyond easy reach of ordinary regular transportation lines engineer officers are authorized to hire and use such transportation as they may consider desirable and advantageous to the progress of the work.

"Under the language of this law it would appear to be the intention of Congress to leave the question of the class or kind of special transportation to be hired to the discretion of the administrative officers. The fact that an automobile was hired is immaterial. The question for my determination is whether two places connected by one train a day are 'beyond easy reach of ordinary regular transportation lines' within the meaning of the above act.

"The fact that a train is not ready when an engineer officer is does not create such a situation as this law contemplates. A direct line of railroad between two points, on which passenger trains are operated as often as business justifies, or as required by public authority, is an 'ordinary regular transportation line' within the meaning of the above law, and the two points are not beyond but are within easy reach within the meaning of the law.

"'Beyond easy reach,' as used in this law, probably refers to such points as are outside of a reasonable walking distance from regular transportation lines, such as railways, steamboat lines, stage coaches, street cars, etc. It certainly does not refer to the time in which the places can be reached by regular transportation lines.

"The action of the auditor in this case is affirmed, and a certificate of no difference will issue."

Similar cases have arisen in the Wilmington, N. C., district. It became necessary for an assistant engineer to make inspections at widely separated points on several occasions. By the use of an automobile he was able to complete his inspections and return to his station in one day's time on each occasion. Had he not used the automobile two days' time would have been necessary for the work, necessitating additional expenditures for transfers, railway fares, lodgings, etc., for each occasion. These accounts have been disallowed by the auditor.

In order to obviate the objections of the accounting officers it is suggested that the legislation provided in section 9 of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, quoted above, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That in the execution and inspection of river and harbor works, engineer officers are authorized to hire and use such transportation as may be necessary for the most economical and advantageous prosecution of the work."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will observe that the necessity for this amendment arose out of the construction of existing law by the accounting officers of the Government——

Mr. MANN. The reason for it, not the necessity.

Mr. SMALL. In the opinion of the War Department the amendment will be in the interest of expedition and economy in the administration of the duties of the engineer.

Mr. MANN. Doubtless it would be in the interest of expedition, just for illustration if an engineer officer from the War Department Building, going over to the Anacostia Flats, could hire an automobile to take him over in 10 minutes' less time, or maybe 15 minutes' less time, than it would take him to go in a street car for 5 cents, and it would soon become the custom for them to do it. When it becomes the custom, no particular officer can be criticized. The first illustration offered in the memorandum of the War Department was that a man would have been delayed a day to take the train. Now, when the train is going, it will go just as fast as the automobile. If he had nothing else to do, the delay made no difference. If he had other things to do and did not know enough to accommodate himself to the time when the trains ran, he was not a proper man to be in the Government service. We all have to do that. The gentleman's proposition is that any engineer officer, at any time he chooses, may hire either an automobile or a steam launch to go wherever he pleases at Government expense, without any check upon him at all except his sweet will. I do not think that power ought to be given to these officers.

Mr. SMALL. Does not the gentleman think he is indulging in a rather violent assumption?

Mr. MANN. No; I know enough about it to know that it is not a violent assumption. I have been with some of these gentlemen. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that they are not all Army officers. Most of the men who do the real work connected with river and harbor improvement are civilian employees, who would be very glad to ride in automobiles and steam launches all the time if they could.

Mr. SMALL. But this is under the supervision of the engineer officers. The language of the section says that—

Engineer officers are authorized——

Mr. MANN. They are authorized—to hire and use such transportation——

Mr. SMALL. Such transportation—as may be necessary for the most economical and advantageous prosecution of the work.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. So that unless it is both economical and advantageous, it would not be authorized. It seems to me it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows very well that wherever the power exists to expend money for personal comfort people expend it, until soon it becomes a custom. I would not blame an engineer officer or his civilian subordinate who is also an engineer officer for riding in an automobile to and from his work if the Government paid the expense and there was no personal criticism upon him. There could not be any personal criticism if it was the custom. I do not see any occasion for letting the bars absolutely down.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this amendment arises out of this condition, that in the construction of the present law if there is railroad connection between the points to which the engineer officer travels, he must use the railroad, no matter how poor the connection and no matter how much longer time may be required, when if he were permitted to use other means of travel he could perform his work in less time, save time to the Government, and save the expenses of subsistence during his prolonged absence. Mr. Chairman, in this day when automobiles have come into such common use some of the most economical of men use the automobile instead of railroad transportation where the railroad schedules do not conserve the most economical performance of their duties. Why should not engineers of the Army be given some discretion, to be exercised, in the words of the statute, when "necessary for the most economical and advantageous prosecution of the work"?

Why should they not be allowed to exercise that discretion and to choose the best means of transportation? If the gentleman intends to press his point of order, I do not think this is subject to a point of order. The original law was brought in by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and passed. It involves a matter concerning the engineers of the Army in the discharge of their duty in the prosecution of river and harbor improvements, and comes under the jurisdiction of the committee. Certainly, if the subject matter comes under the jurisdiction of the committee, then its instrumentalities for carrying out the law which it recommends also come within its jurisdiction. Upon the merits of it, the committee thinks it ought to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RAINEY). The Chair does not think it is subject to a point of order. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MANN. Then I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we are constantly asked to restrict the activities of the Government in the employment of automobiles. Congress gets a spasm once in awhile on the subject of cutting off automobiles. I never have sympathized with that. I believe there are many cases where automobiles ought to be permitted. The existing law permits engineer officers to employ means of transportation at points beyond the easy reach of transportation lines. This amendment proposes to strike that out and leave no control of the subject whatever. The inevitable result will be that the officers in charge of river and harbor work—and it is not merely Army officers, because the larger share of the men are civilian employees—will have permission to employ automobiles or launches on the water, although it may be a place just as easy to reach in the ordinary transportation by street cars and other lines. Where that power exists it never has been known not to be exercised after a while, little after little.

We have to-day in the Army, under the Engineer Corps, a larger number of vessels than there are in the Navy. They have gotten the idea that they are entitled to own and ride in a Government launch everywhere they go, when many times they could as easily ride in a street car, when the improvements are near a city, as they are in most cases. I do not think it is wise to give the Army or any branch of the Government authority, not to spend fixed appropriations for the purpose, but authority to expend all or any part of the money appropriated for improvements. We maintain the offices of the engineers out of these appropriations, although the appropriations may be made and never a dollar of it used in river and harbor improvement; yet they take off a fixed percentage for the maintenance of the offices up here, and nobody knows anything about how much it costs. There is no estimate and no report. I am not in favor of giving to the Army engineers power to spend all they want, without any restriction whatever, for the purpose of pleasure or business rides, for that matter.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief reference to this. When this section which it is proposed to amend was adopted in the river and harbor act of 1912, it is my recollection, and I am sure the RECORD will disclose that the purpose of it was to permit the engineer officers, in the interest of expedition and economy in the discharge of their duties, to hire any method of transportation which, in their judgment, would be most economical and advantageous. It was never conceived when this committee had this under discussion that the accounting officer of the Government would hold that because there was a connecting line of railroad the engineers must use it, regardless of the time consumed by the railroad line, or regardless of the time consumed by the engineer in making his trips. The purpose in mind at that time did not materialize because of the construction of the act by the auditor and comptroller. Now, the only purpose of this is to make clear that which was intended to be done by the original provisions in the act of 1912.

I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois denies the proposition that frequently it is advisable in the interest of economy to use an automobile even where there is a connecting line of railroad, and the only objection he urges is that it is not wise to vest the engineer officers with this discretion. While his opinion is always entitled to deference, I respectfully disagree with him, and I believe that the engineer officers would use discretion in the interest of economy and advantage to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPARKMAN) there were—ayes 47, noes 31.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A parliamentary inquiry. If the call of the House shows that a quorum is present, will anyone have the opportunity to ask for tellers? I do not want to lose any rights.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that pending a point of no quorum the gentleman can not make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that nothing is in order now but the ascertainment of a quorum.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum and ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering tellers.

The question was taken, and tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 52 ayes and 32 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members present, a quorum.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment as a new section to follow section 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Insert, after line 11, page 49, the following as a new section:

"That an act entitled 'An act authorizing the condemnation of lands or easements needed in connection with works of river and harbor improvement at the expense of persons, companies, or corporations,' approved May 16, 1906, be amended so as to read as follows:

"'That whenever any person, company, or corporation, municipal or private, or any State, or any reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State, shall undertake to secure any land or easement therein, needed in connection with a work of river and harbor improvement duly authorized by Congress, for the purpose of conveying the same to the United States free of cost, or for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating locks, dry docks, or other works to be conveyed to the United States free of cost, and of constructing, maintaining, and operating dams for use in connection therewith, and shall be unable for any reason to obtain the same by purchase and acquire a valid title thereto, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States for the acquirement by condemnation of said land or easement, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to institute and conduct such proceedings upon the request of the Secretary of War: Provided, That all expenses of said proceedings and any award that may be made thereunder shall be paid by such person, company, or corporation, or State, or reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency, as aforesaid, to secure which payment the Secretary of War may require such person, company, or corporation, or State, or reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency, as aforesaid, to execute a proper bond in such amount as he may deem necessary before said proceedings are commenced.'"

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that with the explanation I shall make any apparent objection to this item will be removed. This amends the act approved May 16, 1906, in this respect: The original act had application to public improvements where there was local cooperation. The language of the original act of 1906 was:

Whenever any person, company, or corporation, municipal or private, shall undertake to secure—

And so forth.

An engineer officer has construed that as not permitting a State to cooperate, and in the State of California the State reclamation board is not permitted to cooperate. The same construction will arise as to local cooperation in other States. The purpose of this amendment is to enlarge the original act of 1906 in public improvements, where there is local cooperation, so as to permit States to cooperate or to permit any public agency created by the States to cooperate with the United States in any work of public improvement. The attention of the committee was called to this particularly by the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY], in whose district is situated, in part at least, the reclamation district of the San Juan and Sacramento Valleys, where there is large local cooperation by the State of California. As I say, the engineer officer has so interpreted the act as to prevent the State from cooperating. The only purpose of this is to enlarge it, and with that explanation we hope that any objection will be removed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand the only addition to the present law are the words "or any State, or any reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State"?

Mr. SMALL. The words added are:

Or any State, or any reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, this is a very short amendment to the law which is now on the statute books and it is intended to permit a State to cooperate with the United States Government in river and harbor work, and to use the act of eminent domain. Under the present statute the words "or any State, or any reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State," are not present. The amendment adds those three propositions. This was brought about in this way. At the present time the State government and the Federal Government are in cooperation on work at the mouth of the Sacramento River, which is for the purpose of navigation. It is widening and deepening and straightening the mouth of the Sacramento. The district officer raised the point that the United States Attorney General under the present law could not bring condemnation proceedings in the name of the State as the word "State" does not appear in the law. It is to correct that defect which not only affects California but every other State in the Union where the Federal Government and the State are in cooperation. The State government pays for all of the proceedings.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman if under existing conditions the total cost of the land taken is not imposed upon the State of California?

Mr. CURRY. It is all imposed upon the State of California. California pays for all of it and deeds it to the United States Government.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that means this: That where the State and Federal Government are cooperating on the river and harbor improvements, it is necessary to resort to these proceedings of condemnation in order that the Attorney General may have the authority to invoke the proceedings, and it is now held that when they are cooperating he does not have the authority, so it is merely to extend it?

Mr. CURRY. That is all.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not seem to me that it is a very dangerous amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, since reading the amendment and hearing the explanation I think that this amendment ought to be adopted. I therefore withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That a commission is hereby created consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the chairman of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and two other members of said committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, also three members of the present Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives who have been reelected to the Sixty-fifth Congress, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, whose duty it shall be, and the same is authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, to investigate the feasibility and advisability of a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation, and in connection therewith the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, the promotion of terminal and transfer facilities and sites, the drainage and reclamation of lands, the irrigation of arid lands, the protection against floods, the development and utilization of water power, the clarification of streams, and the regulation of the flow thereof, the prevention of soil erosion and waste, the storage and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, and also the subject of cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, or other political subdivisions of the States, including levee and drainage districts, corporations, and individuals, respectively. The heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, upon the request of the commission, through the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the commission in any feature of the several investigations herein authorized. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to provide the commission with such clerical or other assistants as may be deemed necessary. The said commission shall report to Congress on or before the 1st day of December, 1917, plans for the development of waterways and water resources of the United States for the uses and purposes above mentioned.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order until we can make some corrections in the text?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. An amendment can only be read for information.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments which I send to the desk be read for information pending the decision of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Congress," in line 23, on page 50, insert the words "to be appointed by the Speaker of the present House."

In line 23, on page 51, after the word "Congress," strike out the words "on or before the first day of December, nineteen hundred and seventeen."

After the period at the end of line 26, page 51, insert the following: "And in order to defray the expenses made necessary by the provisions of this section the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be paid out upon warrants drawn upon the Secretary of the Treasury by the chairman of said commission."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, Rule XI, making the Rivers and Harbors Committee a privileged committee, reads as follows:

The committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriations bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvements of rivers and harbors.

There has been a great many rulings upon that provision, and they have all held that it must be more or less strictly construed. Now, I call the attention of the Chair to the language of this section. Commencing, page 51, at the top of the page:

of a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation, and in connection therewith the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, the promotion of terminal and transfer facilities and sites, the drainage and reclamation of lands, the irrigation of arid lands, the protection against floods, the development and utilization of water power, the clarification of streams, and the regulation of the flow thereof, the prevention of soil erosion and waste, the storage and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, and also the subject of cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, or other political subdivisions of the States, including levee and drainage districts, corporations, and individuals, respectively.

Why, I submit to the Chair, that covers practically all the planet. As I read that through I could not help but think of a remark I heard one time made by a lawyer when he was arguing a proposition before the court he exclaimed, "If your honor please, this contract is unparalleled in the history of courts for being void" [laughter], and this provision is unparalleled in the history of this House for being subject to the point of order. I do not think it worth while to take up the time of the Chair any further than to call his attention to the provision of the section. I will call his attention to one decision in Hinds's Precedents, volume 4, section 4165, that is directly in point.

A provision relating to a commission to investigate the conditions and uses of water adjacent to an international boundary line was ruled out of the rivers and harbors bill as not being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I will read a portion of that section to the Chair:

That those members of the International Waterways Commission, created in accordance with section 4 of the rivers and harbors act of June 15, 1902, who represent the United States, shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and the waters flowing from the United States into Canada or from Canada into the United States, and the tributaries of such waters; also upon the maintenance and regulation of suitable levels; and also upon the effect on the shores of those waters and structures thereon and upon the interests of navigation by reason of the diversion of these waters from or change in their natural flow.

Now, that provision is not nearly as broad as the provisions in this bill, yet that was held subject to the point of order. Certainly it can not be contended that the Rivers and Harbors Committee have jurisdiction over all these subjects that are enumerated in this section, and in my judgment it does not need further argument.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Does the gentleman know whether it is the intent and purpose under this provision that the Members from the Senate and House would be appointed in order of seniority?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know anything about the purposes of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Washington that the Chair there held that the proposition was not in order because it referred to a boundary line commission that gave power to the boundary line commission in reference to international watercourses, and the Chair held that a proposition to give power to a boundary line commission on an international watercourse is not within the jurisdiction of the committee. Mr. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, made a point of order against the section.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It was also out of order on the proposition not only that it was beyond their jurisdiction, such is not a privileged matter. Creating a commission for this purpose is not a privileged proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The authorities are divided upon the gentleman's position.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard when the gentleman concludes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I also desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 4219, where it says:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction of the subject of canals, and may not include provisions therefor in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

That has been decided a good many times. Here we not only take jurisdiction over, or attempt to take jurisdiction over rivers and harbors, but over flood control, over irrigation, and over practically everything else.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word about the decision cited a moment ago. I understood the Chair to say to the gentleman from Washington the point of order was not to an item offered to a privileged bill which did not come within the privileges granted to the committee. Certainly that was the point of order which I made. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, under the rules of the House, are granted jurisdiction over improvements of rivers and harbors, and they would acquire jurisdiction over any public bill referred to them and might report it to the House and no one could make a point of order that it was not an improvement to a river or harbor, but there is a difference entirely between the jurisdiction of a committee over a bill and the jurisdiction of a committee to report a bill as a privileged matter. This bill comes before the House as a privileged matter. It was reported as a privileged matter by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] from the floor of the House. He moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as a privileged motion.

The bill is before the House as a privileged bill. Now, the privilege only extends to the improvement of rivers and harbors. Any item in the bill or any amendment offered to the bill which does not come within the privilege of the committee is subject to a point of order. That was the point of order which I made on the International Boundary Commission. There might have been a bill introduced on that subject, and it might have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and they might have reported it, but when they call it up as a privileged bill they must confine their operations to the subject of improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, just a word in amplification of the argument made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Chair will notice that this bill was not introduced in the ordinary way in the House and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and then reported in the usual way to the House, but it was reported on January 13 from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as an original bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserved all points of order. Now, the only question for the Chair to consider is to determine whether this provision under consideration is privileged within the meaning of section 56 of Rule XI. The only jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report a privileged bill is to report a bill that is restricted to matters pertaining to river and harbor improvements. It is not a general appropriation bill, and the authority for the holding of the Speaker in times past that the river and harbor appropriation bill is a privileged bill is in those lines found in clause 56, Rule XI, which read as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors may at any time in a general omnibus bill or in any single bill bring into the House as privileged matters pertaining to the improvement of rivers and harbors. They may have jurisdiction over the general subject of matters pertaining to the improvement of rivers and harbors, but there is that nice distinction running through all the precedents that in order for the river and harbor bill to be privileged it must contain only those matters that relate to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Therefore, is the section under consideration one that the Rivers and Harbors Committee, if it reported it, even though it had jurisdiction, could introduce as a privileged bill? The Chair can not under the broadest scope of construction of parliamentary law hold that. If the River and Harbor Committee had presented this section 9 as an original proposition and the chairman had come into the House and said, "Mr. Speaker, I introduce a privileged bill from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors," and the gentleman from Illinois or somebody else would make the point of order, the Speaker would necessarily have held that, while perhaps the Committee on Rivers and Harbors might have had jurisdiction of that proposition if the bill had originally been introduced in its usual way, and no objection had been made to the reference of the bill as provided under the rule for a committee claiming jurisdiction on a motion by the committee for rereference to call the attention of it to the House, there is no question whatsoever that any chairman would hold that that bill was privileged.

The Chair can not disassociate in consideration of this fact that this section 9 must be considered as a separate bill presented for the first time in the House as a privileged bill. Is it privileged under the rules of the House? Why, it does not pertain to the improvement of rivers and harbors. And there has been no construction in all the precedents that will justify it.

The Chair must also separate the river and harbor bill from all the appropriation bills, and the reason why this distinction has been made is that the river and harbor bill is not considered a general appropriation bill. It can embody any legislation, but the legislation must be that which relates to the improvement of rivers and harbors. This does not. This relates primarily to the establishment of a commission, and I ask the attention of the Chair to the fact that he is in error in holding that the ruling of the Hon. Frank Currier—and the chairman now presiding over the committee remembers the superior qualities of Mr. Currier as a parliamentarian——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not as yet made a ruling.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should have said the suggestion of the Chair. The ruling of Mr. Currier was that an amendment providing for the establishment of a commission was not in order because it was not privileged. That amendment was:

SEC. 6. That those members of the International Waterways Commission, created in accordance with section 4 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, who represent the United States shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary lines between the United States and Canada, and of waters flowing from the United States into Canada or from Canada into the United States, and of the tributaries of such waters; also upon the maintenance and regulation of suitable levels; and also upon the effect upon the shores of these waters and the structures thereon and upon the interests of navigation by reason of the diversion of these waters from or change in their natural flow; and, further, to report upon the necessary measures to regulate such diversion, and to make such recommendations for improvement and regulations as shall best subserve the interests of the two Governments in said waters.

That provision was one exclusively for the appointment of a commission to investigate certain matters over which the commission had authority to investigate. There may be in this section some authority which would warrant the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, if it had been introduced in the basket in the usual way, and being referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and then reported back in the usual way, but not as a privileged bill, to hold jurisdiction when it came up for consideration. But, Mr. Chairman, when you differentiate between the fact that this is not a general appropriation bill but a bill that receives its privilege based upon the precedents and those upon clause 56 of Rule XI, which states that only those matters that relate to the improvement of rivers and harbors are privileged, the Chair, I respectfully contend, must sustain the point of order of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this provision, in my opinion, is not subject to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] which, as I understand the point, is that the provision, while containing matter over which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does have jurisdiction, includes other matter over which that committee does not entertain jurisdiction. But my position is that, containing matters as it does within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and that committee having reported the bill to this House, which now has the whole matter before it, this body can go ahead and consider the whole provision although it embodies other matters which, separately, would not come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and would not be properly in a measure like this.

The Committee on Rivers has, in a sense, broader powers than any other committee of the House, and a river and harbor bill has a legislative status not possessed by an ordinary appropriation bill, and is not subject to the same legislative restrictions. It has been held, for instance, that the river and harbor bill, not being one of the general appropriation bills, the rule relating to legislation on such bills does not apply, and that rule has been followed by the House and presiding officials ever since it was first enunciated.

Now, with reference to the contention that the bill contains matters over which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction, I wish to cite the Chair to a decision which, it seems to me, controls the matter, as it is on all fours, as I view it, with the point raised and with the discussion here. I refer to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 857, section 4372, in which the Chair, among other things, said:

A bill may not be divided among two or more committees, although it may contain matters properly within the jurisdiction of several committees.

The statement of the point raised is as follows:

On March 8, 1890, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, considering the bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of site and public building at Newark, N. J. The bill, after authorizing the purchase of land and construction of the building at an increased limit of cost, provided:

"And that the sum of $300,000, in addition to the sum of $350,000 appropriated by act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made a point of order that the bill made an appropriation of money.

It will be observed that the point raised by Mr. Holman was that the bill made an appropriation of money, which was beyond the jurisdiction of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, which could only authorize the construction of buildings without making appropriations therefor. After discussing the matter at some length the Chair continued as follows:

It must be remembered that the fact is, as the Chair thinks, that the reference of this bill on the 18th day of December last was the act of the House of Representatives, and was not the individual act of the Speaker, nor the act of the Speaker in his position as Speaker alone. The bill, in legal contemplation, was read a first and second time, and then referred, as was assumed, under the rule. The question has been presented in the arguments whether or no that was the proper reference. Now, it is conceded by gentlemen who are in favor of sustaining the point of order that the subject matter of the bill, which is the erection of a public building, was properly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and could have been properly referred to no other committee.

It is suggested in argument that as the bill embraced two propositions, one of which might properly go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the other involving an appropriation, which, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckenridge], ought properly to go to the Committee on Appropriations—in this view it has been suggested that some action should be had by which that kind of division should be made. But it has been repeatedly held that a bill can not be so divided. The Chair reads from the Manual and Digest:

"It has been uniformly held that a bill can not be divided among two or more committees, although it contains subject matter which legitimately belongs under Rule XI (the rule under consideration) to several committees; but must be referred to one committee as an entirety."

* * * * * * *

Because this bill was referred by the House to this committee—and not improperly, as the Chair thinks, for the reasons which have been stated—and because it is under consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Chair thinks this point of order must be overruled.

So it will be seen that although the bill to which reference is made had matter not cognizable before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it was nevertheless held that a bill could not be divided among two or more committees, and that the public-buildings bill, in which the item was incorporated, had jurisdiction of it notwithstanding its multifarious nature. That would seem to settle the point of order in favor of the retention of the provision under discussion.

I therefore insist that the provision is properly in the pending bill, and should be retained there.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the provision is a very important one. Indeed, there is none more important in the measure. The time, in my opinion, has arrived when most, if not all, the things which are the subject matter of investigation under that provision should be undertaken in connection with the development of our rivers and harbors for navigation purposes. Besides, I think the passage of the bill with this provision in it would go far toward silencing at least a part of the criticism that has been made against river and harbor legislation during the past few years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] fails to make a distinction between a privileged bill coming from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and a general bill which has been introduced through the basket in the ordinary course.

As I said in my argument, if the gentleman from Florida had introduced section 9 through the basket in the ordinary way and it had been reported to the committee in the ordinary way and reported to the House in the ordinary way and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, then it would be too late for any person to make a point of order because it contained other matters which were within the scope of the jurisdiction of other committees. But if the gentleman from Florida had introduced section 9 in the House originally, as this bill was introduced originally, it never having been heretofore introduced as a bill in the regular course, then a point of order would have been raised to it because it contained matters which were not privileged. There can be no question about that.

The citation read by the gentleman from Florida has no application whatsoever to this case, because it fails to make the distinction between a bill referred to the committee in the ordinary course and a bill introduced into the House as a matter of privilege.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the views presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] are rather subtle and technical. I claim no particular knowledge concerning parliamentary law, but I do wish to submit one thought in connection with this point of order. This section provides for the appointment of a commission. For what purpose? To investigate the feasibility and advisability of a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation.

Now, it may be assumed that the gentleman from Wisconsin would not claim that so far it would be subject to a point of order. Therefore, if it is subject to a point of order at all, it is as to the remainder of the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman contend, if the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had, without the bill having been introduced in the regular way and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, risen at any time in his seat in the House and had said, "Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors," the bill embodied in section 9, that because it contained one item referring to matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that would warrant this House in considering it as a privileged bill?

That is an outrageous proposal. Under that construction, Mr. Chairman, they could take under consideration the entire scope of legislation, because one little item included in the bill would relate to rivers and harbors.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would submit that per contra; simply because there was one item in the bill which did not appear to be within the jurisdiction of the committee, therefore the whole section would not be vitiated.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be brief, and here is the point I want to submit: Here is a section which creates a commission for the purpose of investigating the feasibility and advisability of a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation; that the committee has jurisdiction of the provision to that extent; and that its jurisdiction is not divested because of the remainder of the section.

Now, the remainder is what? It says, "In connection with an investigation of rivers and harbors in the interest of navigation, to consider the development and the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, the promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, and sites, drainage, and reclamation, irrigation, protection against floods, water power," and so forth.

No, Mr. Chairman; if the proposition can be maintained that this section creating a commission to investigate rivers and harbors, a better system for their improvement in the sole interest of navigation, is made subject to a point of order, and the jurisdiction of the committee divested by reason of the inclusion of these other items, that it would do violence to the rules and impair the usefulness of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Under section 56 of Rule XI jurisdiction of this committee is limited to bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

All points of order were reserved on this bill, and the point of order is now made to section 9 of the bill. Section 9 provides for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report on a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation. This is, of course, clearly within the province of this committee to report. The section under consideration however, continues and provides that the commission in connection with this investigation may report upon matters pertaining to—

> The promotion of terminal and transfer facilities and sites, the drainage and reclamation of lands, the irrigation of arid lands, the protection against floods, the development and utilization of water power, the clarification of streams, and the regulation of the flow thereof, the prevention of soil erosion and waste, the storage and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, and also the subject of cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, or other political subdivisions of the States, including levee and drainage districts, corporations, and individuals, respectively.

The question does not arise here as to the committee to which a bill conferring all these powers upon a commission should be referred. This bill did not go through the basket. This provision is being presented now for the first time. If the bill had gone through the basket in the ordinary way, and had been referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had considered the matter and reported it back, the Chair does not think the point of order would lie at all. In that case the House would have had the opportunity presented to it to change the reference of this bill and to refer it to any other committee that the House might select for its consideration.

The Chair does not think the decision to which the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] calls attention is applicable to the present case. The bill there referred to went through the basket and to the committee. The question arose as to whether the bill had been properly referred to the Committee, and in passing upon the question the Chairman ruled in the following language, discussing the committee to which this bill should have gone:

> Clearly it could not go to the Committee on Appropriations, because in general appropriation bills nothing is allowable except appropriations for expenses incurred in pursuance of existing law. As the bill had to go somewhere; as it did go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; as that committee has reported the bill, and it has been committeed by the House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and is now under consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Chair is of opinion that it is properly cognizable here and that the point of order should be overruled.
> In connection with this question the Chair desires to say that a matter of the correction of a reference or taking any advantage of any improper reference is purely a matter for the House itself. Under the existing rules, if this bill had been referred by the Speaker without the knowledge of the House—furtively, as suggested—perhaps by the influence of some Member who desired the bill to go to a committee that had not jurisdiction—if a bill under those circumstances should be referred to a committee not having jurisdiction, it would be because the rules gave the Speaker that power. But the rules also provide that any improper reference of a bill may be corrected in any one of three ways—

And then the ruling indicates the ways in which improper references may be corrected.

It is insisted also by members of the committee that the bill contains a provision within the jurisdiction of the committee and within its privilege to report, conferring upon this proposed commission the power to report on more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation; and it is insisted that because in connection with navigation and with such a report these other reports are required, therefore the entire section is in order.

The Chair desires to suggest that in connection with a report as to the interests of navigation on our rivers, this proposed commission might well consider the possibility of navigating our rivers with battleships drawing 21 feet of water; and because in connection with any report they might make they would have the right to consider the navigation of a river by battleships drawing that depth, therefore in connection therewith the committee might authorize the commission to report on the building of battleships, and what kind of battleships ought to be built. The same method of reasoning we are considering, it seems to the Chair, might just as logically lead to the conclusion just indicated.

The Chair thinks the point of order should be sustained to the section, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 35.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to offer an amendment to the last section.

Mr. HULBERT. I also want to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not lose any rights by yielding to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 35, line 19, for the purpose of offering an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee asks unanimous consent to recur to page 35 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment: Page 35, line 19, after the word "maintenance," in line 19, insert "including, above Sacramento, the Red Bluffs."

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another matter that was passed over yesterday at the time it was read to be returned to later. That was, on page 11, Norfolk Harbor. I wish to offer an amendment to that, and after it is read I will explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 19, after the word "session," strike out the figures "$270,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$360,000."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, as will be observed, this amendment increases the amount of the appropriation $90,000. That appears to become necessary for this reason: When we adopted this project we thought there was a much larger sum on hand left over from a former appropriation than the amount actually there. It will be be observed that the paragraph embraces this provision:

The unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for improvement of channel to Norfolk, Va., is hereby made available for continuing improvement of said channel in accordance with the report submitted in said document.

It was the impression of the committee at the time it inserted the provision that there was on hand for work the sum of $130,000, but under a provision contained in the bill of 1915, $90,000 of this sum was transferred and expended upon some other project. That we did not know, and believing that the larger sum was on hand, we fixed the amount at $270,000 instead of $360,000, as we would have done if we had known the exact condition with reference to the available funds. Hence I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the last section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 45, the paragraph at the top of the page, which was stricken out on a point of order, for the purpose of offering an amendment in a changed form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 45 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, let the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the top of page 45 the following:

"The Secretary of War is authorized to make such preliminary examinations as can be made from available data without making field surveys, touching the creation of conditions in or paralleling the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to the Canadian border suitable in all respects for navigation by ocean-going ships, including such approximate estimate of cost of improvement as can be predicated on such available data, and an approximation of the amount of power, if any, that would be incident thereto."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section, page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 13, after the word "purpose," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the following amendment to section 7, Article I, of the Constitution is hereby proposed and submitted to the several States, as follows."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Enough has been read to show that the amendment is a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I make the point of order so as to prevent showing what it is.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I think it is highly improper to bring such a matter into the House in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is clearly out of order, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. On page 18 there is appropriated $330,000 for maintenance of the St. Johns River from Jacksonville to the ocean. The engineer's report shows that this is not only for maintenance but for improvement of the jetties. What I want to ask the gentleman is whether this appropriation provided in the bill covers the extension and repairs of the jetties?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say that that was called to my attention the other day; and, having investigated the matter by reading the report, I see that it is for the repair of the jetties and maintenance. Of course, that would be covered by the language of the bill.

Mr. SEARS. I wanted to ask the question because I had this up with the gentleman at the time of the investigation, and I wanted it stated in the RECORD.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That a commission is hereby created, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the chairman of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and two other members of said committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, also three member of the present Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives who have been reelected to the Sixty-fifth Congress, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, whose duty it shall be, and the same is authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, to investigate the feasibility and advisability of a more comprehensive system of river and harbor improvements in the interest of navigation, and all uses of water relating thereto, and also the subject of cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, or other political subdivisions of the States, including levee and drainage districts, corporations, and individuals, respectively. The heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, upon the request of the commission, through the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the commission in any feature of the several investigations herein authorized. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to provide the commission with such clerical or other assistants as may be deemed necessary. The said commission shall report to Congress on or before the 1st day of December, 1917, plans for the development of waterways and water resources of the United States for the uses and purposes above mentioned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that portion of the amendment which relates to levees and drainage districts that it is not in order; also to that part authorizing the Secretary of War to provide clerks and other assistants as he may deem necessary. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction to provide clerical assistance in the War Department. That is a matter within the control of the Committee on Appropriations, of which the distinguished gentleman from Kansas City is a member, and ought to be endeavoring to protect the rights of his committee. He knows that this committee has not jurisdiction over clerical assistance for anybody. There are several other things in the amendment that are subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a further point of order that it is not privileged, because the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have not made the report, but it has been made by an individual Member. Under clause 56, Rule XI, it is only the committee that is authorized to make the report to make it privileged.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the same amendment that was considered by the Chair a few minutes ago, the substantial change being in eliminating the enumeration of the purposes for which the commission shall be created and confining it to the investigation, feasibility, and advisability of a comprehensive river and harbor improvement in the interest of navigation and the uses of water related thereto. There is no question but that the main purpose is entirely within the jurisdiction of this committee, and germane and relevant to this bill. All of the other matters contained in the amendment are simply a part of the machinery. They are simply an incident to the creation of that commission.

As to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, that the cooperation of the United States and States in levee and drainage districts renders it subject to a point of order, it is untenable. There is hardly a proposition in the bill that does not involve in some degree cooperation with local authorities and with drainage and levee districts.

If the Federal Government has the right to do a thing alone, it has the right under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court to do it either singly or jointly with other agencies, and the very fact that we have the right to improve a river for navigation gives us the right to cooperate with municipalities, drainage and levee districts for the same purpose. All of that language must be read in connection with the main purpose, which is the improvement of rivers and harbors for the purpose of navigation, and the incidents which follow there are clearly within the power of the committee and not subject to the point of order. I think, if I am not mistaken, I have heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make that argument.

The other point of order is that the Secretary of War is not authorized to provide the commission with clerical or other assistance. The fact of the matter is that the improvement of rivers and harbors under our system is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War. It is a part of the duty of the Army engineers, and at the head of that is the Chief of Engineers. All of the clerical assistance now engaged, directly or indirectly, in this kind of work is at the instance of the Secretary of War. This does not provide any additional clerical assistance in any way, at least upon its face. It simply provides that the clerical assistance in the War Department shall be available for this particular purpose as it is available for the other portions of the same bill, and so the point of order must be overruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's position would present a very dangerous precedent in legislative procedure in the House. The chairman must consider this bill now as if section 9 had never been a part of the bill and some Member on his own initiative had risen and presented the amendment, as does the gentleman from Missouri, to the attention of the committee. As I attempted to point out in my argument on the question whether section 9 was in order, I wish to again direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that only the committee, not any individual Member, has the right to make a report covering matters relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors. This item must now be considered just as if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] rose in his place on the floor and presented the matter as a privileged bill.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not taken any action on the proposal offered by the gentleman from Missouri. That is out of the bill entirely. The Chair must consider this now as an original proposition. Can the Chair hold that any individual Member may rise upon the floor of the House at any time and present the proposal offered by the gentleman from Missouri and claim that it is privileged? The rules of the House have safeguarded the interests of legislation by providing that in order to have matters privileged, even though they relate to rivers and harbors, they must first be reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That distinction is carried also in the Holman rule. Certain Members may have the privilege of offering certain amendments where they reduce appropriations, but in matters of substantive legislation they must first be reported and considered by the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter. It would be a very dangerous precedent indeed to permit any individual Member to be recognized and hold that this was a privileged matter which the individual Member, without the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, could present at any time. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not taken jurisdiction. Clause 56 of Rule XI reads:

> The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: * * * the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

It is that clause that gives the committee the right to make its matter privileged, not the individual Member. Therefore, following the ruling of the Chair as to section 9, this, too, must be ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that this committee has assumed jurisdiction and the House has acquiesced in that jurisdiction over drainage districts and levees on the Mississippi River, as well as on other rivers, and under authority conferred by other river and harbor bills, there is cooperation at the present time between individuals and corporations, municipalities and levee districts in the matter of drainage and reclamation of lands along rivers. That part of it might be in order. What the Chair is in doubt about is the authority of this committee to command the services of clerks in the departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as to that there can be no question as to the right of the Committee on Appropriations, under the authority granted to that committee, to provide for such clerical assistance. Clause 3 of Rule XI provides:

> To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, viz, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies—to the Committee on Appropriations.

That shows that the matter, if it was a distinct bill relating to that proposal, would have to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, because the Committee on Appropriations, as carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, has full authority to provide appropriations for the clerical work of the Government.

I wish again to call the attention of the Chair to this phase of the matter, which was fundamental in the consideration of the other section, that in order for any matter reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to be privileged it must relate to the improvement of rivers and harbors. It is true this relates to the improvement of rivers and harbors, but the House has never had the opportunity, because it embraces matters that pertain to other committees, for that committee or for some member of the other committee to test the judgment of the House as to whether the committee to which the bill has been referred is the committee which rightfully is entitled to its consideration. An individual Member here has no right to rise in his place and present as privileged something over which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction. The rule provides what the committee shall report. If the committee had made the report as embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, why that shows that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has given it consideration. The gentleman from Missouri can not contend that the committee has made this report. It is the gentleman from Missouri himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from Missouri on the question whether or not this committee has jurisdiction to authorize the commission to command the services of clerks in the War Department.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, my view of that subject is simply this: This bill commands the services of the War Department. All of this work that is authorized in this bill is imposed on the War Department. It is done through a department of the War Department, the Chief of Engineers. Every item in here that requires anything done is a direction to the War Department. The last section of the bill preceding this, or one section preceding this, relates to certain surveys. Each one of those surveys is a direction to the War Department. Whether the direction to the War Department be that certain surveys shall be made or that certain classes of work shall be done, it is on the same footing, is on all fours as far as the bill is concerned. One relates to clerical services and the other relates to engineering services. But there is absolutely no difference on the question of jurisdiction. As to the question of policy there might be a good deal of difference, but when it comes to the jurisdiction of the committee there is absolutely no difference between requiring the engineering services of the War Department and the clerical services of that department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman is in error. Clerical services for the War Department are specifically appropriated for as services in the War Department. Under the proposed provision this independent commission could require the Secretary of War to detail to them employees specifically appropriated for for certain duties in the Department of War. The services of those employees and the authority to make provision for them is in the Committee on Appropriations. Such an amendment is not germane to the bill. The rivers and harbors bill is a privileged bill and is subject to the limitations that amendments to be in order must be germane to the bill, must be amendments the subject matter over which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would have jurisdiction. It has no jurisdiction over the clerical services for which provision has been made in the legislative bill for the War Department. The amendment of the gentleman is based on the assumption that the War Department would control and dictate how those services shall be utilized by some independent commission in no way connected with the department except the incidental fact that the Secretary of War is a member of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the clerks in the War Department are being paid for the services they render there under the direction of the Secretary of War, and, while the War Department has jurisdiction over rivers and this committee has the right at any time—perhaps this commission would also have the right, if conferred upon it by the committee—to call on the War Department for information, yet the Chair does not think that this committee has jurisdiction to report a bill giving to any commission the right to command the services of clerks from the War Department, take them out of the control of the Secretary of War, and subject them to their own control. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert as a new section the following:
"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to report without delay to this House the survey provided for in the river and harbor act of 1913 relative to the encroachments and obstructions in the Chicago River and all its branches, together with such encroachments as have been made in and along the lake front between Lincoln Park and the Indiana State line."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in the act of 1913 it was provided that the Board of Engineers of the War Department should make a survey of the Chicago River and all encroachments, as well as of the encroachments made upon the lake front between Lincoln Park and the Indiana State line. Now, that was in 1913. Up to this time, Mr. Chairman, we have been waiting for a report. I feel certain that that survey could have been completed within a few months. It is nearly four years, and the report has not been made as yet. The House is entitled to that report from the Board of Engineers or from the Secretary of War, and for that reason I have offered this amendment, hoping and trusting that the report will be forthcoming, as I can not see any reason why the report was not made to or three years ago. If there are any reasons why this report has not been made, if there are any people who are interested in seeing that this report is not made, the House is entitled to that information. For that reason I hope and trust that the amendment will prevail, feeling also that neither the chairman of the committee nor any member of the committee will have any objection to it.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to compel the Secretary of War to make a report forthwith upon a survey and examination ordered in the river and harbor act of 1913. Assuming that the report has not been made, because the gentleman seems to be well informed in that respect, it is equally fair to assume that some good reason exists why the report has not yet been made and not yet been submitted by the Secretary of War. Personally I have no knowledge of the subject and the chairman has not, and if any member of the committee has any familiarity with it he can speak for himself; but it is apparent that in a rivers and harbors bill we do not in mandatory terms direct the Secretary of War to make a report upon any examination heretofore authorized.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. In just a moment. There would be no end to these matters if we were to do that. Besides, if we take this course, it is simply a repetition, because in the original provision the Secretary of War was directed to make the examination, and it directed him to report; and presumably he will comply with that direction as soon as he can do so consistently in the performance of his duty. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge as to the number of reports not yet filed by the Secretary of War that have been authorized by Congress?

Mr. SMALL. There are quite a number, but I can not speak accurately.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would it not be just as proper that we should legislate on every one of them as on this particular one as to compelling a report? How is it within our jurisdiction to know when the circumstances of the survey have been sufficiently examined so that the department is prepared to report?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is entirely right. It would be just as appropriate to do so.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe four years is time enough for the department to make a report ordered by this House?

Mr. SMALL. In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, it would appear prima facie that sufficient time had elapsed to enable the department to report; but in the absence of any knowledge as to the reason for the War Department in delaying their report, I do not think this House ought to adopt this amendment as a part of the bill.

Mr. SABATH. What would the gentleman say if I would inform him of the fact that I have made repeated requests on the department for this report, and it has been promised month in and month out during the last two years?

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman will pardon me, that may be all true, that he has made repeated requests, and at the same time it may be entirely true that the department has good reasons for delaying their report.

Mr. SABATH. Then, I would like to know the reasons why they do not report. I would like to know who is interested and who is holding the report back.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] says if there is any member of the committee that knew about this, to let him say so. I want to say to this House that I know considerable about it. The river and harbor bill in 1913, passed by this House, provided for an investigation of encroachments in the waters in and about Chicago, and anyone who has any knowledge of the geography of Chicago knows that there have been encroachments in all of the waters in and about Chicago. And the Members from Chicago tried to get a report upon them, and for four years this matter has been before the engineers and has been a joke in the engineers' office in Chicago. And men connected with the engineers' office in Chicago treated it as a joke; and there must be some influence at work to prevent the engineers from reporting to this House those encroachments in the waters in and about Chicago. I know now that they endeavored to substitute a report that was made to the Illinois Legislature by a committee, the chairman of which committee is now a Member of this House, Mr. CHIPERFIELD. His committee made an investigation of these encroachments, but we wanted this investigation made by this Government, because the property that has been encroached upon belongs to the people of this country.

Now, what was the result? From the information I have, this report is in the office of the Chief of Engineers now and has been there for seven or eight months, and if you inquire for this report by telephone to that office they will tell you that they do not know where it is. But the district engineer's office at Chicago has made a report, and yet we can not get the information contained in it.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNET. Is the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] satisfactory to the gentleman now speaking?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes. The amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] simply provides that the engineer's office or the Secretary of War give that information to Congress. I think we are entitled to it. I think the amendment ought to be passed. It can not hurt anybody to know what persons, firms, or corporations are encroaching upon the public waters in and about Chicago.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman satisfied this material is in the office of the Secretary of War?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes; I am quite satisfied that the report is here in the War Department, and I hope the amendment offered by my colleague will pass. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for four minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, at the close of this session the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will leave Congress. We all hope that his absence is only temporary. [Applause.] But as one who has been intimately associated with him for many years, I desire to take up a few minutes to pay to him a few words of deserved praise.

He has by his industry, ability, and faithfulness won a high place in the confidence and regard of this House. He would not have won it did he not deserve it. This is the most cold-blooded and calculating body in the world. Previous reputation or popular fame has little weight or influence in this House. This House mercilessly measures the merit of each Member by what he does here. A man that achieves a place here can achieve a place among men anwyhere on this earth. [Applause.] No demagogue can long mislead this House. No faker can long deceive it. They may fool the public, but not the House of Representatives.

The value of the training received in Congress in fitting a man for public service can not be overestimated. If the All-Wise in his inscrutable wisdom should ever again think it necessary to chasten this Nation by the election of a Democratic President, then I know that I express the wish of millions of the American people when I say I hope that that President may be CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri. [Applause.]

If the Republicans of the country knew him as we know him, they would nominate for President the most valuable legislator and most remarkable intellect that ever sat in the Halls of the American Congress—JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois. [Applause.] These two splendid Americans typify all that is highest and best in the Nation's life. By ability and training they are especially fitted for high public position.

How many grievous errors in the past would have been avoided and how many in the future will be avoided if the people could have but realized what this training here in Congress means. This experience here teaches a man so that he can never disregard it; the duties of each coordinate branch of the Government teaches him the respect due for each branch, and especially teaches him the vital danger to our institutions of one department encroaching upon the other.

After all has been said and done, gentlemen, in patriotism and ability this is the greatest body of men in the world.

One of the demonstrations of its greatness is the fact that while this aisle divides the parties it does not divide patriotism, ability, or friendships. [Applause.]

When the gentleman from Florida leaves this body he will take with him the regard, the confidence, and good wishes of every Member of the House. [Applause.] He belongs to that honored class whose names may not be written large in the pages of history, but whose work is indelibly stamped upon the legislation of the Nation and permanently interwoven with the best traditions of the country.

Mr. SPARKMAN has been faithful, industrious, and efficient. I never knew a kindlier, more courteous, more considerate gentleman. [Applause.] In all my life I never had the honor of calling my friend a more lovable character than STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN. [Applause.]

And best of all and above all and more valuable than all, when he goes from this House, after 22 years of work well done, he will leave to his family, to those he loves, and to his country he has served so well the priceless heritage of an honest name. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I agree fully to all the good things that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has just said about the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]. It has been my good fortune to serve on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with both of these distinguished gentlemen for a great many years, and when the gentleman from Washington was paying his tribute of respect to the gentleman from Florida just now, and expressing the universal regret that as the result of the recent election Mr. SPARKMAN goes out from among us, I could not repress the thought that disasters come not singly. [Applause.] I know that I express the unanimous sentiment of this House when I say that it is with the keenest regret that we contemplate the departure from among us of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. [Applause.]

Fourteen years ago he and I came to Congress together. Our association here in the legislation of the country has been more intimate than that of the average Members. We were assigned to the same committees. We have been detailed frequently upon the same subcommittees. The purposes of our legislative efforts were identical along many lines, and I had the opportunity to observe him at close range. I have had the opportunity to serve with him in the committee room, when the doors were locked, and after 14 years of that character of association I take great pleasure, I take pride in saying that during my term of service there has appeared here no man who has more honestly, more earnestly, more faithfully, or more courageously filled up the full measure of the duties of an American Representative than has Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. [Applause.]

As a Republican he was as partisan as the worst of you. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I was almost tempted to say "Amen" when he said a few moments ago that this was the most merciless body in the world. [Laughter.] I have felt that frequently when he was on the floor of the House, backed by the partisanship of his own party here in his vigorous assaults against the Democrats, certainly no advocate upon this floor ever appeared more merciless than he.

But, after all, it is the judgment of those against whom he made his assaults that while he was a foeman worthy of their steel, he never hit below the belt. [Applause.] And as he goes out now, I know that he carries with him the best wishes, the heartiest hopes for his success in all things, from the membership of this side as well as of that side of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, now that the Committee of the Whole has completed the consideration of this important bill, it will, I am sure, be regarded as entirely appropriate to make a brief expression regarding the retiring members of the committee, which include the distinguished chairman, Hon. STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN, of Florida. I indorse the complimentary references by Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, to the services of our colleague, Hon. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY, of Washington. He is closing a service in this House of 14 years, which have been filled with industry and zeal for his State and the country. [Applause.]

Our beloved colleague, Hon. GEORGE F. BURGESS, of Texas, is nearing the end of 16 years' continuous service, during which time he has served continuously on this committee with distinction to himself, and his record is most clearly written in the many works of public improvement which he espoused and which were adopted by Congress. [Applause.]

Another colleague, Hon. CHARLES G. EDWARDS, of Georgia, will soon retire with the plaudits of his constituents and the regret of us all. [Applause.]

Our good friend at my right, Hon. CHARLES LIEB, of Indiana, with characteristic zeal, has been diligent in service upon the committee and has established a reputation which will be difficult to surpass. [Applause.]

The genial and able gentleman from Pennsylvania, Hon. ANDREW J. BARCHFELD, has not only advocated with loyalty the improvement of the Ohio River but has lent his aid to every other worthy project. [Applause.]

The city of Buffalo, upon one of the Great Lakes, will also lose the services of its distinguished Representative, in the person of Hon. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, of New York. [Applause.]

May I, Mr. Chairman, refer a little more at length to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. SPARKMAN? On March 4 he will have served continuously as a Representative in this House for 22 years, and for 20 years of this time he has been a member of this committee. When elected he was a lawyer with a large practice and highly esteemed by his clients and professional brethren for his mental strength and legal knowledge. While exercising diligence in the discharge of all local obligations to his immediate constituency and always alert to general legislation in this body, it is perhaps fair to say that he has devoted a larger proportion of his time to the study of our harbors and waterways. His trained mind and studious habits enabled him to master the varied data and facts necessary to an intelligent understanding of the merits and demerits of every proposition. He is recognized to-day as a distinguished expert in Congress and in the country upon the subject of waterways, and it is not surprising that as chairman during the past six years he has outlined and presented a constructive program of waterway improvements. Service counts so largely in this legislative body and specialization is so important that the loss of his services will be distinctly marked and will be difficult to replace.

I can not refrain from adverting to one conspicuous phase of his service at this session. Although he is to retire and, so far as his friends know, has discarded further political ambition for the future, yet in the preliminary study and in the formulation of this bill he has, if possible, exhibited even greater zeal and loyalty in service than in past sessions. This is only an example of the unselfish labor and of the consecration to duty which has characterized all the years of the past.

We shall miss his genial smile, his words of cheer, and his attractive personality. Wherever his future paths may lie, I am sure I bespeak the cordial good wishes of all his colleagues in this body, regardless of their political affiliations, that health, peace, contentment, and prosperity may abide with our good friend to the end. [Applause.]

I beg the liberty of appending a paragraph from a recent discriminating editorial on river and harbor legislation from the Dallas (Tex.) Morning News:

It is indeed unfortunate for the country that at the time when rivers and harbors improvement is being successfully urged to a stable business basis it should lose the service of men who have acquired that expertness in the work which Congress is called upon to do, that is indispensable to its best performance. With the expiration of this Congress, for example, Mr. SPARKMAN, the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, will retire, and Congress will lose, in the consideration of waterway measures, the advantage which his valuable knowledge of waterway questions now provides. Painstaking application to the responsibilities of his office of chairman of the committee should have made him familiar with virtually every project that has been before Congress for consideration. Obviously this knowledge should make his service invaluable to the country in this important department of its business. His retirement just at the time he is best fitted to serve well in an important station emphasizes a rather glaring imperfection in the political system under which the public seems to be willing for the business of the Government to proceed. The surest and undoubtedly the best means of eliminating all taint of pork from rivers and harbors bills is to give the men who draw them time and opportunity to become expert in the science itself, as well as in the national need of waterway development, and then to keep them on the job.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, before making the motion that the committee finally rise and report this bill to the House, I wish to ask its indulgence for a few minutes while I thank, as I do most sincerely, my good friends the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LIEB], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], and others for the very gracious words they have uttered regarding myself on this floor to-day and at various times since the consideration of this measure was begun. Those were indeed kind words, and I prize them beyond measure, as I do the generous consideration shown me a few days ago in relation to the project for the improvement of the harbor at my home city. This act is the more appreciated, as it came voluntarily and was unsought and unexpected by me, and, besides, brought with it such manifestations of good will and esteem.

The recollection of those kind words and acts will never be forgotten, but will ever be cherished by me as one of the most pleasant memories of the many that have been kindled during my long term of service here.

I wish also to express my appreciation of the kind and courteous treatment of and able assistance rendered me by the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee during the time I have had the honor of presiding over the deliberations of that body. This is one of the most important committees of the House and performs a great work for the country. I believe I risk nothing in saying, Mr. Chairman, that there is no committee of the House whose work is of greater importance to the people, nor one which during the 33 or 34 years of its existence has accomplished more for the country than has the legislation emanating from that committee. I may also add that there is no other committee which entails harder work upon its members and its chairman than does that committee. But though the duties of its chairman are never light, but always exacting and engrossing, they have in my case been rendered much less burdensome by the kind and generous assistance rendered me in their performance by the membership of that body, and to them again, one and all, I wish to express my sincere thanks and the deep appreciation I shall ever feel for the kind aid rendered me by them during the past six years. [Applause.]

Nor can I close, Mr. Chairman, without referring to four or five other members of the committee who will retire from the House at the end of this session and, of course, from membership on that committee. These are my good friends Mr. BURGESS of Texas, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia, Mr. DRISCOLL of New York, and last but not least, by any means, my good friend Mr. LIEB of Indiana.

Mr. Chairman, the country can ill afford to lose the services of such men as these. Especially is their retirement a severe loss to their constituencies and to the people of the States they have so ably and worthily represented in this body. I do not know the gentlemen who succeed the retiring Members just mentioned, but no matter how able and efficient they may be, the States they represent will miss their services here. The progressive State of Washington will not find one who will serve her better than has Mr. HUMPHREY, who has represented her so ably and faithfully for the past 14 years. Nor will the Lone Star State find one who will serve her more loyally and more ably, or who will represent her in her efforts to develop her wonderful resources more efficiently than has GEORGE BURGESS. Neither will the great State of Georgia nor the enterprising and growing city of Savannah ever have a better Representative or one who will serve her with greater fidelity and efficiency than has CHARLES EDWARDS, who also retires on the 4th of next March. Equally impossible will it be for the State of Indiana or the district represented by my good friend Mr. LIEB to find a better or a more efficient Representative of her interests, which, of course, includes that great river, the Ohio, to the improvement of which he has given so much of his time and attention during his membership on this floor. My good friend Mr. DRISCOLL, of New York, will also be missed from this body and from the committee, of which he was such a conspicuous member, and in the duties of which he has taken such an active and intelligent part. The State of New York and the district which he represents are the losers by his retirement. It has, indeed, been a pleasure, as it has been a distinguished honor, to serve with such men in this body and on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I voice, I know, the sentiment of each Member here when I wish them every success in whatever field of endeavor they may enter after laying down their duties here.

Concluding, Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my thanks not alone to those to whom reference has been especially made by me but also to the entire membership of this body for the kind and courteous treatment I have ever received at their hands. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, on the question of the passage of the bill I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members present, a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. NORTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 132, answered "present" 3, not voting 77, as follows:

Mr. JONES with Mr. HASKELL.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. BUTLER, ending Monday.

Mr. BLACK with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS (H. R. 20451).

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 20451, a pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20451) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Patrick O'Donohue, late landsman, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Hundley, late of Company K, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Stephens, late of Company H, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hugh Kerr, late of Company L, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Baker, widow of John T. Baker, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of James E. Washington, late of Company H, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Woolf, late of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clarinda Mahoney, widow of Patrick H. Mahoney, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Charles W. Mahoney, helpless and dependent child of said Patrick H. Mahoney, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Clarinda Mahoney, the name of said Charles W. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of William Woolf, late of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of asking the genial gentleman in charge of this bill a few questions with reference to the procedure in the preparation of these pension bills. I know he will be glad to give us the information. I see that there have been introduced in the House more than 20,000 bills all told. Perhaps three-fourths of them, or 15,000, are pension bills. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, in the first place, what clerical help the committee has.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has a special examiner detailed from the Pension Office, a stenographer, and two clerks.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now as to the procedure in committee in the consideration of these bills. Suppose, for the sake of argument, a Member of the House introduces a bill in May or in December or any time in the past, this bill is referred to his committee. As a matter of course, it is not considered until the required affidavits are filed.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true.

Mr. HASTINGS. After the affidavits are filed, I would like to have some information from the committee about what their rule for consideration is. In other words, the point I am trying to get at is whether or not they are considered in the order that the affidavits are filed that accompany the several pension bills.

Mr. ASHBROOK. They are considered in the order that the Member requests to have them considered.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say now that during my membership of this House I have not been opposed to pension legislation. It is not my purpose now to oppose this legislation in asking these questions, but I want to register my protest against any favoritism whatever in favor of one old soldier as against another. I believe that the old soldiers of my State and of my district are entitled to the same consideration as are the old soldiers from any part of this Union.

Mr. Speaker, while I am upon my feet permit me to say that I have introduced some 6 or 8 or 10 pension bills at this session of Congress, and I have the record before me where these affidavits that are required by the committee were secured, where they have been filed with the committee, some two or three weeks or a month ago, and yet none of them has been considered. I want to invite the attention of the committee and the House to the fact that pension bills introduced less than a week before this bill was reported have been favorably considered and are included in this omnibus bill. I invite the attention of the House to the last item of this bill, H. R. 20316. That bill was introduced on January 19, and it was reported out in this bill on January 24. Of course it may be an accident, and of course it can be explained by members of the committee, but it so happens that the Member who introduced that particular bill is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I want to invite attention also to the next bill before that, H. R. 20282. That bill was introduced on January 18, and in six days thereafter it was favorably considered and the name added to this omnibus pension bill and brought in here to-day for action. I want to invite attention, Mr. Speaker, to H. R. 20171. That bill was introduced on January 16. Eight days thereafter the bill was favorably reported and is included as one of the items in this omnibus bill. It so happens that the Member who introduced that bill is the same Member who introduced the last item in this bill, so that he introduced two bills within eight days prior to the making of the report upon this bill, both of which were favorably acted upon. I have a number of other bills here that show they were introduced within 10 or 12 days prior to the report upon this bill that have been favorably considered and the names added to this omnibus bill, whereas I have a number of bills before me that I introduced, for which I secured the necessary affidavits, which I sent down to the committee with a letter, and I went down there myself and asked their consideration, and I have also sent my secretary a number of times and telephoned the committee a number of times and have asked for their consideration. I want to say now, Mr. Speaker, that I was reared out in the West where we are opposed to any kind of partiality whatsoever, and while I am not opposed to pension legislation——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to any kind of partiality even in the section of the country where I come from, and I believe these pension bills should be considered in the order in which these affidavits are filed. I do not believe that the examiner which is furnished by the Government and I do not believe the clerks that are paid by the Government ought to be allowed to take these bills up out of their order and consider them to the exclusion of the consideration of other meritorious claims. I appreciate that perhaps this committee has not sufficient clerical force, but they ought to be taken up in their order, and that is the complaint that I am now making to the House. I want to say again that while I am not seeking to exercise that right now, and I do not say that the committee shall favorably consider the bills which I have introduced, yet I insist and I have the right to demand that they be considered and reported either favorably or rejected. I want consideration of them and I am entitled to consideration of them. I have a number of letters here that are distressing in their tone, letters from old soldiers without any property at all who are writing to me week after week asking what has been done with the bills that I months ago introduced. I have in mind one case where the claim was rejected by the committee because the old soldier had not served 90 days. I refer now to page 7 of the committee's report. I find the case of H. R. 3757, where the report shows that the soldier had served less than 90 days, and that he had property valued at $1,500, and yet his pension is increased to $30 a month, and the claim of the old soldier for whom I introduced a bill is rejected. I am protesting against this favoritism, and I want to say now that this House will have to have a quorum to consider the next invalid pension bills unless these cases I have introduced are considered.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend from Oklahoma that I am advised by the clerk of the committee that several of the bills introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma were rejected. If our friend from Oklahoma will appear before the committee when it meets every Monday, we will be very glad to have him do so, and he can there state his case, and we will give him the best of consideration. I am certain that there is no desire to play favorites in this committee. We are anxious to pass bills for every Member of the House. I personally have solicited a number of Members to hand in their evidence and get their bills in shape to be considered, and we have gone out of our way to help the Members who were anxious to have special pension bills passed. The gentleman refers to some bills that were introduced just a few days ago, some time during this month. There is no denying that fact. I do not know the circumstances, but undoubtedly these bills were introduced by some Member who had not had very many bills passed, but they were meritorious bills, and he requested to have them written up in preference to other bills that he had introduced. The gentleman asks and insists that the committee shall take up and consider these bills in the order in which they are introduced——

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not say introduced; I said in the order that the testimony or affidavits were filed.

Mr. ASHBROOK. As I said to my friend a while ago, the examiner writes up these bills in the order they are requested to be written up by the Member, and when the Member indicates to the examiner the bills that he wants written up his wishes will be respected. I assure the gentleman that there is no desire to play favoritism in this committee.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. McCLINTIC. By the gentleman's statement a Member has to go and appear in person before the examiner and ask that some particular bill receive favorable consideration.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman does not file the necessary evidence that is required to be filed accompanying his bill, his bill will not be considered, but I know that the clerk endeavors to see every Member who has a bill pending and see that some of his bills are passed.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If the evidence, sworn affidavits, were filed with the committee, then that bill will receive proper consideration?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It will in due time; but the examiner, I believe, waits some time until he hears from the Member to know what bills he wants written up. A great many Members file evidence for five or ten times as many bills as could possibly be passed in one session, and the examiner can not devote all his time to writing up bills for a single Member, but waits to learn from the Member the bills he wishes written up.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The point I was getting at is this: Many of us suppose after we introduce a bill and then file all the necessary evidence that that was all that was necessary for the bill to receive proper consideration. Now, if I understand the gentleman that it is necessary for us to go down before the examiner, then I want that fact to be stated.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to my friend that he does not necessarily have to appear in person, but if he would write the clerk of the committee or the examiner and request certain bills to be written up I am sure he will have no cause for complaint.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit further, in reference to bill No. 3757, the report shows that he served less than 90 days—I think it was 2 months and 16 days. Now, in this case the party has $1,500 worth of property, and the committee gives him a pension of $30 a month, but in this case of mine here the man served 75 days, or one day less, and the claim was rejected because he served less than 90 days, and the proof was before the committee that he does not have a dollar's worth of property.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I happen to know about the case to which the gentleman alludes. This soldier has an honorable discharge showing that he served four months and one day, but a part of that time he was home on a furlough, and for a number of years he received a pension of $12 a month. It was discovered a portion of the time that he served he was home on furlough, and for that reason he was dropped. I do not believe it is right to drop a soldier when his honorable discharge shows that he served four months and one day.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman's committee now meeting that kind of a situation?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Not often.

Mr. WINGO. It has been the policy of the committee heretofore to refuse any relief to that kind of a case?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, no; the committee has acted favorably on special bills where the soldier served less than 90 days. He may have been discharged for disability and served less than that time, and his case may be one of special distress; he may be helpless and without any income or property. In this case this soldier happens to have a home, and he is clearly entitled to a pension, because I have seen his discharge and it shows that he served four months and one day.

Mr. WINGO. Let me ask the gentleman if the committee has ever had occasion to pass upon this state of facts, where the soldier was in the Army only a short time, less than 90 days, and was detained at home on account of pneumonia and was not able to return until his regiment went into a territory where he could not possibly reach it on account of the hostile occupancy of the country intervening. Is that man to be blamed and dropped from the pension rolls?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If he was home on his furlough and had an honorable discharge, I believe he should receive a pension; but if he does not have an honorable discharge, then he is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. WINGO. Because he could not get to his command?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I appreciate there are many deserving cases of that kind where soldiers have been regarded as deserters when in fact they were not.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think that when satisfactory proof is offered that they are not in fact deserters, but owing to a condition over which they had no control, growing out of the war, they were prevented from reaching their commands—does not the gentleman think those men ought to be entitled to some consideration?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do; but that is for the War Department to consider, and if the department rejects it——

Mr. WINGO. Well, what recourse would they have in order to get relief?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, the recourse would be in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FIELDS. That belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman overlooks this. The Committee on Military Affairs is not going into a question like that, because it would bring in those who deserve pensions in a great many instances and those who do not, but in this instance where you have proof that the soldier has served more than 90 days, proof that he got an honorable discharge, but by reason of circumstances over which he had absolutely no control—that is, the occupation of the territory between his home and his command by the enemy—does the gentleman think that man should be absoluteiy denied justice by the committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The difference between the case complained of by my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] and the one stated by my friend from Arkansas is that in the first case the soldier had an honorable discharge and showed that he served four months and one day. In the other case the soldier does not have an honorable discharge.

Mr. WINGO. And I agree with the gentleman, there is a difference there. I can see that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. MAPES. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for two minutes for the purpose of asking him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the report on H. R. 4001, on page 7 of the report. It appears that this soldier served only from April 17 to June 14, 1861, or a period of 58 days. I have been told that it was the policy of the committee not to grant a pension to any veteran who served less than 90 days unless he served within a very few days of the 90 days—from 85 to 90.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will read the first paragraph of the report on House bill 4001, he will see that this soldier was discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Mr. MAPES. I have read that, if the gentleman please; but he has been unable to get a pension under the general law from the Bureau of Pensions because of any disability. The statement in the report that he is now disabled because of old age and other infirmities makes no better showing why he should receive a pension than most any other Civil War veteran could make who has reached the age that most of the veterans of the Civil War have reached.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The discharge shows that this soldier was discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. POWERS. To ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] have two minutes more in order that he may be interrogated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POWERS. I just wanted to know from the gentleman about what time he expects to report out the next bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There will probably be one more bill two weeks from to-day, which will be the last bill.

Mr. JAMES. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question regarding the case referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma. You say you are familiar with the case personally?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am.

Mr. JAMES. Was this gentleman home on furlough because of sickness, wounds, or business?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I really could not answer.

Mr. JAMES. I thought you were familiar with the case?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am familiar with it to the extent I stated. He was home on a furlough.

Mr. JAMES. You do not know why?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not know why.

Mr. JAMES. The law requires he shall have 90 days actual service.

Mr. ASHBROOK. He was in the service, subject to the order of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. It is different than 90 days actual service. It is not 90 days from the time of enlistment to date of discharge. It is 90 days actual service.

Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. DAVIS of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for recognition. Am I entitled to it?

The SPEAKER. The rule is that where there is an amendment——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. Do I understand that the committee is beginning to recognize special bills for men who have not seen 90 days full service?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, yes. I am serving my fifth term, and in my first term I had a bill passed for a soldier who served 89 days. It is not a recent innovation.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that heretofore your committee has considered that soldiers who are home on furloughs were not rendering service to the Government—that that was not counted.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not aware that that has been the position of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that I have had bills rejected by the committee because the claimant had not seen 90 days of service; because part of that 90 days was when the soldier was on furlough and at home, and I wanted to know if the committee has reversed itself on that point.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The case called to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] answers your inquiry.

Mr. HASTINGS. They rejected this case of mine on that ground alone. Although this old soldier served 75 days, and does not have a dollar's worth of property, the committee rejected that claim upon the ground that he had not served the 90 days.

Mr. ASHBROOK. May I inquire of you whether or not the discharge certificate of this soldier shows that he served only 75 days?

Mr. HASTINGS. Seventy-five days, as I now recall.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think I am stating the facts now, when I say the Committee has never ventured to act upon a case of a soldier who did not serve 80 days or more; I think 84 or 85 days is the limit.

Mr. ANTHONY. If I am correct, the War Department does not consider it service when a soldier is at home upon furlough.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am aware of the fact. That is the fact, and that is the reason why this soldier was dropped from the rolls.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason why I ask is that I can hardly understand why some cases are made fish of and others are made fowl.

Mr. GORDON. They are "fish" if they come from the committee and "fowl" if they do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has the floor for five minutes in his own right.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] first.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I would like to have relief or information in a case like this: An old veteran, who had served perhaps a year and a half, happened to be on detail with a wagon with two other soldiers, and when the war closed the wagon ran over him. At any rate, he was left sick, and the other two, reporting for him, failed to report his situation. Hence, he is reported absent, or marked as a deserter. What is the relief in his case?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If he is on the rolls as a deserter, he has no right to a pension under the general law and has none in this committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Could he not prove his actual service and his innocence of the charge of desertion?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If those facts can be proven, he would be given an honorable discharge, and then would have a status on the rolls and would be pensionable.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Then, you would correct his record?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; correct his record at the War Department.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am bound to yield first to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it is not feasible and just to direct the clerk of the committee to go through that list and see that every Member who is not a member of the committee gets some part of the next bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that since I have been on this committee I know that the present clerk is very diligent indeed in his efforts to get these bills distributed equably around among the Members. He calls them up on the telephone, and writes to them and speaks to them, and I do that myself; and we will be very glad to get every "finger in the pie" if the gentlemen will tell us what they want. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. I have no grievance to urge against the committee at all.

Mr. ASHBROOK. No; I do not believe the gentleman has any occasion to have any grievance against the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee has been very kind to me, and I am grateful to them for what they have done for me. Some Members think they have not received consideration. Why not let the clerk give consideration and "check up noses," and see how many bills the Members have, and put some of them in the next bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I hope that any Member who feels that he has not been fairly treated will advise the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has the floor.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I think he will yield to me the balance of the time.

The SPEAKER. You can not do that.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether his committee under any circumstances recommends pensions to soldiers who have not received an honorable discharge?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I believe that we in the past have reported out one bill that I recall where the soldier had two honorable discharges and one dishonorable discharge.

Mr. TILSON. Then, in other words, the gentleman's committee does sometimes give pensions where the Pension Office would hold that the service was not faithful; in other words, where the soldier has been separated from the service by means other than an honorable discharge?

Mr. ASHBROOK. In the case I refer to that undoubtedly is true. But the committee does not act favorably upon cases where the soldier is marked as a deserter on the roll. He must have an honorable discharge.

Mr. TILSON. As I understand it, it is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs——

Mr. ASHBROOK. No; the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. TILSON. No; the Committee on Military Affairs to pass upon the question as to whether he shall have an honorable discharge, to decide questions of this kind upon evidence submitted and upon the records of the War Department.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Of course, the gentleman understands that if a soldier secures an honorable discharge through the passage of a special bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs the soldier has a status on the rolls and gets a pension in the regular way.

Mr. TILSON. That is what I wished to bring out, whether the Committee on Invalid Pensions also considers such questions as the Committee on Military Affairs usually passes upon; that is, whether a man has proved by proper testimony that in equity he is entitled to an honorable discharge. If the gentleman's committee accepts evidence of that kind, it seems to me the jurisdiction of the two committees overlaps.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has plenty of duties of its own to perform without encroaching on the rights or prerogatives of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am sure our committee does not so encroach.

Mr. TILSON. I have no disposition to guard the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs in this class of cases, but am making the inquiry because it occurred to me that it might be easier to get a bill of this character through the Committee on Invalid Pensions than it is to get it through the Committee on Military Affairs, for I, like other Members, have plenty of cases of this kind coming from my own constituents.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I hope I have made satisfactory answer to the gentleman's inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Clarinda Mahoney, widow of Patrick H. Mahoney, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment United Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Charles W. Mahoney, helpless and dependent child of said Patrick H. Mahoney, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Clarinda Mahoney, the name of said Charles W. Mahoney shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Clarinda Mahoney.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that in line 24, on page 2, after the word "United," the word "States" should be inserted.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is correct, Mr. Speaker, and I offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Clarinda Brauch, widow of Levi Brauch, late of Company M, Fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, in the word "Brauch," which occurs twice in line 5, on page 20, I move to strike out the letter "u" and insert the letter "n," so as to make the word "Branch."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 5, strike out the letter "u" in the word "Brauch" and insert the letter "n."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Theodore Kiefer, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive, on page 22.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. In the RECORD of to-day I find that the colloquy between Messrs. NORTON of North Dakota, FESS of Ohio, HEFLIN of Alabama, and RAGSDALE, as printed, does not show the colloquy as reported by the Official Reporters. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be amended by publishing in the RECORD the colloquy as reported by the Official Reporters, and by printing in parallel columns the colloquy as published, having been amended, and to show by whom amended.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina objects.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move——

Mr. GARRETT. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to propound a question to the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT. I will withdraw that if the gentleman from South Carolina will yield the floor.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions is entitled to the floor, and I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. It seems to me this is not the proper time to bring up a matter of this kind, a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. KITCHIN and others. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not listen to half a dozen at once. Did the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. GARRETT. I did. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws it. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] has not offered any resolution.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; I move that the RECORD for January 25, 1917, be amended by printing the colloquy as reported between Messrs. NORTON of North Dakota, FESS of Ohio, HEFLIN of Alabama, and RAGSDALE in parallel columns, in one column printing the colloquies as reported by the Official Reporters of the House and in the parallel columns the colloquies as they appear in the RECORD, and that it show by whom corrected.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order at this time, during the progress of the reading of a bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. This is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I should like some time to be fixed when the gentleman from South Carolina and myself can be heard on this motion.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen now will keep still until the Chair can get this thing straightened out. The question is whether the matter that is offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is privileged. If the gentleman wants to be heard on that the Chair will hear him very briefly on the point of order.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the colloquy yesterday, statements were made therein that the applause that I received came from the Republican side. It appears that the official report of the stenographer carries applause for Mr. HEFLIN on the Republican side. The RECORD as it appears shows that this has been stricken out by some one, and it appears in the RECORD as applause on the Democratic side.

Mr. HEFLIN. All of which is susceptible of proof by Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] has the right to the floor. After this bill is disposed of the gentleman can rise to a question of privilege, if any he have.

Mr. ASHBROOK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The Committee on Pensions has a bill——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio want the floor?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just decided that the gentleman is entitled to it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I ask that the clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS (H. R. 20496).

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 20496.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20496) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of William B. Yeater, late of Company C, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of getting some information as to the basis on which this claim was allowed. I have some pension bills before this committee, and have had for the last two years. No one is more in favor of pensioning our soldiers and sailors who can show that they are entitled to a pension than I. But I do not think the committee ought to allow any claim unless there is some merit in it.

I have been examining the report of the committee and I find some that have less merit than those of my constituents. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to state what are the grounds on which the claim is allowed for William B. Yeater.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the committee has submitted a report which contains all the evidence offered in this case. It would take some time to read that evidence, as it covers almost two pages of this printed report. I am not personally familiar with the record, but a cursory examination shows that the soldier served five years in the Regular Establishment. Affidavits have been submitted for the purpose of proving that the soldier's disabilities are attributable to service in the Army. At any rate, they were sufficient to convince the members of the subcommittee who considered the same, and the subcommittee made a report to the full committee, and the full committee accepted the report.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The War Department records show that the ailments from which the man was suffering when discharged were not received in line of duty.

Mr. KEATING. It shows that some ailments he contracted in the line of duty and some he did not.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. But nothing upon which he bases his claim for pension was received in line of duty.

Mr. KEATING. I have not read the entire report, but I think the gentleman is mistaken on that point.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Besides, this claimant owns a farm worth $5,000 at the present time, and still the committee recommends that he receive a pension.

Mr. KEATING. The farm is one of those Missouri farms, and, while it is worth $5,000, the income is only $300. It is not a Minnesota farm nor a Colorado farm.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That depends on how you work it. The land is better in Missouri than it is in Minnesota.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. It all depends upon the amount of labor put on the farm. Mr. Speaker, I bring this to the attention of the Members to show the character of proof that is required by the Committee on Pensions before they will pass one of these bills. I believe the claim ought to be allowed, notwithstanding the War Department has found that on two occasions there was no evidence upon which to base a claim for a pension. Still this committee has taken other evidence that satisfies it that his case should receive some consideration. In the matter that I have in mind the facts will show this. The party enlisted in 1868 and served for three years in the Regular Establishment. During a part of that time, and especially the last winter, he was required to spend two or three months in the woods in northern Minnesota, where he had to sleep on the cold ground, from which exposure he contracted rheumatism, and his eyes became affected. He remained an invalid from the time he received his discharge to his death.

From the time he was discharged from the Army until the time he died, two or three years ago, he was always a sufferer from rheumatism and from an affliction of the eyes which the evidence shows was traceable to the exposure he underwent that winter. That is testified to by one of his comrades who was with him. That is testified to by a number of doctors, bringing it down to date. I say it occurs to me that that sort of a case is just as much, if not more, entitled to consideration than dozens of matters that are included in this bill.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Did the gentleman present that before the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I have had it before the committee. I am not complaining that the committee has treated me differently from anyone else, but I think it is time that the House should know how these matters are being handled.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the subcommittee that reported this claim to the main committee. The subcommittee went into this case very carefully and made a favorable report to the main committee, and that report was sustained. This particular bill in question was introduced into the Congress by our honored Speaker, and I know that he would not introduce a bill asking for a pension unless it were meritorious. I do not think there is any ground for the criticism of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] against this particular bill. It is hard for the subcommittees or the main committee of the Committee on Pensions to make any hard and fast rule for the consideration of all claims. If there were a hard and fast rule, all claims could be settled by the Bureau of Pensions; but there must be a flexibility in these matters, and we must determine them upon their individual merits. The purpose of the Committee on Pensions is to do equity where equity exists, and it does in this case. This committee went into this case very carefully and made its report. That report was unanimously adopted by the main committee, and it is presented here for your consideration. I trust it will be allowed to remain as it stands.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the House for a few minutes upon this particular claim. If anyone ever deserved a pension, this man William B. Yeater, of Perry, Mo., does. I desire to refer now to what the committee found in respect to this bill (H. R. 1238):

H. R. 1238. William B. Yeater, Perry, Mo., served in the Regular Establishment in Company C, First United States Infantry, from June 6, 1891, to June 5, 1896, when honorably discharged.

Here is what that committee found was the matter with Mr. Yeater, and it is a wonder he did not die:

The records of the War Department show medical treatment in service for vaccinia, contusion of the right side of abdomen (strained and bruised while playing football), and tonsillitis, all in line of duty. Also, for acute inflammation of glands of left groin, nonvenereal, contracted in some way while absent on leave, and not held as due to line of duty.

Soldier filed a claim for pension in 1914, based upon rupture of right side and injury of left groin. The rupture was rejected on the ground of no record to show same incurred in service. The injury to left groin was rejected because the record of the War Department shows same was not due to line of duty.

Let us see what the witnesses say: Mr. C. G. Daniel, vice president of the Vandalia Banking Association, of Vandalia, Mo., one of the foremost citizens of the State, testifies that this man has a farm on which there is an incumbrance of $3,800, and that he owes a personal obligation of $300.

But they say that the income is $300. Well, now, right in that particular region there is some land worth $150 to $200 an acre, whereas in the belt of hills it is worth very little. Everybody in that western country knows about these brakes. So far as the property is concerned, the man has none. Now, here is what Dr. Parrish, the oldest physician in this town, states:

The undersigned, J. C. Parrish, of Vandalia, Audrain County, Mo., upon oath, states: I have to-day examined Mr. William B. Yeater, formerly of Company C, First United States Infantry, stationed at Angel Island, Cal., in 1894. Mr. Yeater is suffering from a direct inguinal hernia of the right side, and is compelled to wear a truss constantly. He reports that this hernia appeared in 1894 while in the service, he thinks, as a result of hurdle jumping and other exercises provided for the service. On the left side the inguinal glands were removed at about that time, according to his statement, and the scars indicate that an extensive operation for removal of the inguinal glands was performed. The left hip since that time has given him more or less discomfort, and now he has a halting stride in walking.

Now, if men are being pensioned who get hurt in the Army, he is entitled to his pension, because he has not got enough property to live on. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Jess Musgrave, late of the United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, following line 2, add the name of Louisa Carey, widow of Joseph B. Crowley, late of Company B, Third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, is this a committee amendment?

Mr. KEATING. No; it is not.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if I may be recognized——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to grant a pension to a remarried widow of the Mexican War. Under the law she is not entitled to a pension. It was probably the intention of the author of the Ashbrook bill to include remarried Mexican War widows in the bill which we passed at the last session, but they were not included. The Committee on Pensions has adopted a rule by which all such pension bills are rejected. Mr. Ashbrook's bill was rejected, as we have rejected bills of other Members of the House. I do not think I am revealing any secret of the committee when I say that that determination was reached by a majority vote. Some members of the committee, the minority of the committee, including the chairman of the committee, took the position Mr. ASHBROOK takes. The chairman of the committee [Mr. KEY of Ohio] is unable to be here to-day, and he has asked me to read in my time the following statement, which he prepared in reference to the amendment just offered by Mr. ASHBROOK. I will ask the Clerk to read the statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read Mr. KEY's statement in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

"I am not surprised that the gentleman has brought before the House and suggests the addition to the pending bill a provision for pensioning this remarried widow. I wish to state very briefly the facts in connection with the case. The Committee on Pensions, under Rule X, has always disposed of remarried-widow cases along the lines provided for in the general pension law of March 3, 1901, which required, first, that she should have been the wife of her soldier husband during some part of his service in a war; second, that she should show her dependent condition; and, third, that her subsequent marriage or marriages should have been dissolved without fault upon her part. On September 8, 1916, Congress approved what is known as the Ashbrook law, which the gentleman himself introduced. Under the second section of this law the first and second requirements of the former act relating to remarried widows was abolished as far as Civil War widows are concerned. In order to obtain a pension under the Ashbrook law a widow of a Civil War soldier who remarried has now only to show the death of her second husband, or that she was divorced from him without fault upon her part. This law relates entirely to Civil War widows, however; it does not extend this liberal provision to remarried widows of the Mexican War, any of the Indian wars, or the War of 1812, although all of these wars occurred prior to the Civil War. At a recent meeting of the Committee on Pensions I brought to the attention of the committee the case of the remarried Mexican War widow the gentleman refers to, together with that of a remarried widow of the War of 1812, and invited a full discussion as to whether we should adhere to our former practice in this class of cases or regard Congress, in the passage of the act of September 8, 1916, as intending to mean that the liberal provisions as to remarried widows in that law should apply to the widows of all wars prior to the Civil War. After a full discussion of the matter, the committee, by a majority vote, tabled both of these claims and passed a resolution instructing the examiner to prepare no more claims of a similar character. In event this item should be added to the bill, as the gentleman requests, I think the Committee on Pensions would construe such action as meaning that Congress does intend the liberal remarried-widow section of the Ashbrook law to apply to all war widows prior to the Civil War.

"I think that the Committee on Pensions by a two-thirds vote has waived its rule in recent Congresses and allowed by special act two remarried Mexican War widows, whose sad physical, mental, and financial condition caused them to believe such action was proper."

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I will take up the time of the committee as briefly as possibly but I want to say that there is no doubt but what it was the intention, when the Ashbrook widows' pension law was passed, to put widows of the Mexican War upon the same status as widows of the Civil War. There is no doubt about that, and under section 1 of that law they are on the same basis or status as those of the Civil War, but in section 2, which relates to remarried widows, through an oversight in the Senate, where amendment was made, such Mexican War widows were not included. I want to say just one word about this case. By the way, this case is really one which belongs to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] who is now occupying the Speaker's chair.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Allow me to make this statement and then I will be glad to yield. Joseph D. Crowley, whom I am informed was a relative of a former Member of this body, enlisted in the Mexican War on June 1, 1846, and served 13 months when he received an honorable discharge. He incurred disabilities in the service but was never pensioned. In 1852 he was married to Louisa Williams, with whom he lived until his death five years later. Seven years after that time this widow was remarried to a man by the name of William Carey, with whom she lived until his death in 1913.

Now, this woman is 83 years old. She has no relatives in the world except a granddaughter, who, by the way, is a widow, and with whom she lives and makes her home, and who is compelled to work out for a living to support herself and this old grandmother, who has no property and no income and is helpless and unable to help herself in any way. It is clearly an act of justice and humanity to treat these old Mexican War widows, as there are only just a handful of them left, the same as we treat the Civil War widows. And I trust that this amendment will pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes. I will probably not take the time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is very necessary, I will say to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] that certain resolutions be passed by this House as quickly as possible in order that they may be messaged to the Senate, and I trust we will not have a discussion of this matter here, because I have been patiently waiting here, as the gentleman knows, for quite a while. The other body may adjourn at any moment, and I am very anxious to have this resolution sent there before adjournment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to state that I am personally opposed to this amendment, and I hope it will not carry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEATING. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 51, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of David W. Corson, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the dollar sign will be placed before the figures "50," in line 15.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how it is that a man gets a bill reported out of this committee, anyway?

Mr. KEATING. It is a very simple process, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNET. I have not found it so.

Mr. KEATING. In all seriousness, Mr. Chairman, this committee can not be charged with displaying favoritism toward any Member of the House or toward either side of the House. The bills are reported out without regard to the identity of the Members or their political affiliations.

Mr. BENNET. That casts rather a doubt on the fact of whether I have any political affiliations, I am afraid. I have five bills in the committee, all of which I regard as meritorious, some more so than others. Before I left at the close of the long session I went to the clerk of the committee and called his attention to the fact that names commencing with "B" seemed to be neglected so far as the twenty-third district of New York was concerned, and he said he would have one of my bills written up. I went to him when I came back at the beginning of this session, and he said it would be attended to. I went to him a little later on, and he said the matter would receive attention when the first omnibus bill came up. I have read the list of names very carefully, and I do not find any of the names of the people attached to the bills I have introduced, and the process, so far as I am concerned, does not seem to be so simple.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, it is a physical impossibility for the examiner of the committee to report out every case submitted to him.

Mr. BENNET. Ought not each Member to get at least one bill if he has a meritorious bill?

Mr. KEATING. I do not know that that would be a good rule.

Mr. BENNET. I am not saying it would.

Mr. KEATING. And I will say, in so far as the committee is concerned, it endeavors to distribute the bills among the different Members. A very conscientious effort is made along those lines without determining definitely whether a Member is entitled to one bill or two bills. But we do endeavor to see to it that each Member has a square deal.

Mr. BENNET. I have the case of a man who suffers from causes clearly due to Army service. For certain reasons he can not get a pension in the regular way. In other cases in former years I have been able to get pension bills where the cases were not more meritorious than this one.

Mr. KEATING. I suggest to the gentleman that he consult with his colleague from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR], and he will find out the way to proceed.

Mr. BENNET. Then, I feel I have not wasted the five minutes that I have occupied.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Catharine Cocain, dependent mother of Charles E. Cocain, late of U. S. S. Constellation, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of 12 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the dollar sign will be placed before the figures "12" in line 17.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] a question in regard to the policy of the committee in granting, or rather not granting, pensions to widows of veterans of the Spanish War.

I understand that it is the policy of the committee not to pass any bills granting pensions to widows of veterans of the Spanish War, although I discover in looking over this bill and the report accompanying it that the committee has come dangerously near violating what I have been told was the policy of the committee, as will appear by reference to the report on H. R. 7822. The committee has perhaps saved itself from the charge of inconsistency in this respect in that case on account of the service of the soldier in the Regular Establishment for a few days.

I would like to ask if there is any prospect of the committee changing its policy so that the deserving widows of the veterans of the Spanish War will be able to get a pension before the passage of the Key bill, which is apparently tied up in the Senate?

Mr. KEATING. The committee takes the position that evidence must be submitted to show that the soldier died of disabilities incurred in the service. The widow must make a reasonable showing in that particular. Where the widow frankly admits that the soldier did not die of disabiilties incurred in the service, then the committee will not recommend a pension; but where the widow makes a reasonable showing, a showing sufficient to convince the members of the committee, the committee will recommend the granting of a pension.

Mr. MAPES. Of course if the widow can make a showing that the soldier died because of disabilities incurred in the service, she is entitled to a pension through the Bureau of Pensions under the general law.

Mr. KEATING. In some cases it is much easier to convince a committee of Members of the House than it would be to convince the examiners of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman that I have had before the committee for two or three years bills to pension two widows, both of whom have children and no property whatever. One of them has three small children, and is trying the best she can to support herself and children by manual labor, working in a factory, the last I knew. The other is similarly situated. No more deserving cases could be imagined. I am told that the reason why the committee does not report these bills and others of a like nature is because it feels that by holding them up it can hasten the passage of the Key bill in the Senate.

Mr. KEATING. Exactly.

Mr. MAPES. I do not think that this policy of the House committee will affect the Senate a particle, and it seems to me that there are no more meritorious cases coming before the committee than the cases of these widows with minor children, who are obliged to support themselves and children. It seems to me that the policy of the committee is working a great hardship to those widows.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Does not the gentleman think that every one of these cases that could be passed in the form of a special bill should await the passage of the Key bill through the Senate.

Mr. MAPES. I do not think so. I do not think we should await the passage of the Key bill any longer. I hope the committee will reconsider its action in this respect and report out these deserving bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Amelia Pagan de Rolfes, widow of Henry H. Rolfes, late of Second Battalion, Porto Rico Provisional Regiment Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of 12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the four minor children of the said Henry H. Rolfes until they reach the age of 16 years.

The SPEAKER. In line 21, page 11, before the figures "12" the dollar mark is left out. Without objection, it will be put in.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John W. Paulus, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out, in line 14, page 17, the figures "$17" and inserting in lieu thereof "$24."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 17, line 14, by striking out the figures "$17" and inserting "$24."

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I would be doing my duty to consent to this rate without some objection. It is too low. In the eight years that I have been a Member of this House I have never offered an amendment to a pension bill to increase the rate. This man Paulus spent two years in the Philippine Islands and contracted disease resulting in paralysis of the lower limbs. He received $10 a month because of his service, and the disease contracted in the Philippines.

He served two years, and within a year after he came out of the service he became totally helpless, paralyzed in his lower limbs and seriously diseased in the stomach and bowels. The doctors at the Pension Office did not take that into account—the paralysis of the lower limbs—because they said there was no pathological relationship between disease of the stomach and the paralysis of the lower limbs; but I take it that this committee wants to do justice to this man instead of adhering too closely to a rigid rule. I have no criticism to make of the committee, but this man came home from the Philippines after two years of service completely disabled. He has an old mother, broken in health, who goes out and does most menial service by the day to support this son in his present physical condition.

After I found that this committee had given this man $17 a month I could not imagine under what rule it had provided that amount. I want to ask this House whether it wants to say, by rejecting this amendment, that it wants to pay a man who is completely paralyzed and confined to his house only $17 a month for going 7,000 miles from home and defending his country's flag for two years in the Philippines. That is the question involved in the rejection of this amendment.

The evidence that was had before the committee came from the best men in Columbia City, Ind., his home. One of them is the postmaster at Columbia City. Another man who testified, Mr. McLallan, is a member of the Federal Reserve Board and a man of high character. I know this case personally.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How much did the gentleman ask for in the committee?

Mr. CLINE. I do not remember what I asked for in the bill. I know the case is one of the greatest merit, and this House, which expects to do justice by the defenders of its flag, is not in a position to say that a man who goes to the Philippines and spends two years in that country, defending the flag, and coming home becomes absolutely helpless, ought to be satisfied with $17 a month.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may be permitted to conclude the consideration of this bill after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning; and I do that for the purpose of giving the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, an opportunity to present to the House an important resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill be pending to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. COOPER of Ohio] was called home suddenly by the death of a member of the family, and I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to him for one week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that leave of absence for one week be granted to his colleague [Mr. COOPER of Ohio] by reason of a death in the family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FINLEY.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to this House the death of Hon. DAVID EDWARD FINLEY, a Member of the House from South Carolina. Mr. FINLEY's death took place at 12.30 o'clock to-day in a sanitarium at Charlotte, N. C. I shall ask the House to set aside a date later when proper tribute may be paid to the character of the distinguished deceased. At this time I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 470.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. DAVID EDWARD FINLEY, a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the committee on the part of the House Messrs. LEVER, AIKEN, BYRNES of South Carolina, BAILEY, RAGSDALE, NICHOLLS of South Carolina, MOON, LLOYD, BELL, COX, BLACKMON, GOODWIN of Arkansas, MANN, STEENERSON, MADDEN, KAHN, BRITT, and WASON.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker of the House, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, may be added to this committee of Members delegated to attend the funeral.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the Speaker's name be added to this list. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remaining resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 27, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.
